Changing Times

UMass Marks A Century of Progress

Exactly 100 years ago this fall, 56 students arrived at a brand-new campus a mile north of the center of Amherst to become the first class at what is now the University of Massachusetts.

A century later, enrollment at the much-changed and booming Amherst campus is expected to top 15,000 when classes resume Sept. 12. An additional 2,650 are expected at UMass in Boston.

11,650 In Amherst

At Amherst, UMass expects an undergraduate total of approximately 11,650, including a freshman class of about 3,000. Approximately 3,000 graduate students are expected, plus some 560 two-year Stockbridge students. Total registration is estimated at 15,200, a gain of more than 10 percent over last year's 13,800.

Growth in academic programs, new faculty, progress on a multi-million dollar building program, a new campus traffic system and other changes will also mark the 1967-68 academic year.

The UMass Graduate School enters the fall term with new Ph.D. programs in agriculture and food economics, electrical engineering, biochemistry and mechanical engineering, bringing the total to 37 plus three courses leading to the degree of doctor of education. Master's degree programs have been added in astronomy, marine science and veterinary hygiene and the master's program in Russian has been renamed Slavic languages and literature. The University now offers master's degree programs in 53 disciplines.

Faculty Increase

Dr. Dwight W. Allen of Stanford University will assume the post of dean of the UMass School of Education in January. New department heads include Dr. Mortimer H. Appley in psychology and Dr. Harold J. VanderZwaag in men's physical education. In addition, 175 new full-time faculty will be joining the UMass staff in Amherst.

In other academic changes, the department of physics has been expanded to a department of physics and astronomy and the department of mechanical engineering has been similarly changed to the department of mechanical aerospace engineering. Departments of biochemistry and industrial engineering have been added. The German-Russian department has become two: the department of Slavic languages and literature and the department of Germanic languages and literature and the department of Germanic languages and literature.

A Scandinavian language program has been added by the latter department, to begin with Danish this year. Two degree programs have been added in the arts—a bachelor of fine arts and a bachelor of music.

UMass Boston

At UMass in Boston, 1,050 new students will boost total enrollment to 2,650. Entering will be approximately 910 freshmen and 150 transfers. Joining the Boston staff this fall will be 60 new faculty, 40 of them in new positions. UMass-Boston begins its third year this fall and is therefore ading an upper division for the juniors who entered as freshmen two years ago.

The academic year at Amherst begins with one major building completed, work under way on two more and site work begun for two others. Complete and recently occupied is Whitmore Administration Building, $3 million administrative center named for Philip F. Whitmore, distinguished state representative from Sunderland, UMass alumnus and Board of Trustees member who died in a 1962 turnpike accident.

Under construction are two academic buildings, both scheduled for completion in the summer of 1968. Bartlett Hall East will house 175 offices, 30 to 35 classrooms, two auditoriums and four language laboratories and will cost approximately $3.7 million. Machmer Tower, a ten-story complex costing approximately $2.7 million, will house 185 offices, three auditoriums and a sociology laboratory. Site work has begun on two other projects—the Campus Center, which will extend the facilities of the present Student Union, serve as a conference center and include a parking garage; and the Graduate Research Center, $17 million laboratory complex.

New Dorms

Four low-rise residences for over 1,000 students will be opened in the University's giant Southwest Residence Area to bring the population of that complex to 4,600. When fully complete in another year, the area will house and provide meals for 5,400 students in 20 buildings. Opening this September are Crampton, Mackimmie, Prince and Patterson Houses, all named for distinguished UMass faculty members now deceased. Prince, with 300 graduate students, will be the only University graduate house on campus. All four buildings were built by the UMass Building Authority, and will be paid for on a self-liquidating basis at no cost to the taxpayer.

The University will take a major step in September toward the eventual goal of reserving its central campus for pedestrians only. Manned control points at all six central campus entrances will shunt the majority of traffic to roads and parking lots at the edge of campus. Only North Pleasant St. will carry through traffic near the center of campus. All other routes that now cross or loop through the central campus will become dead-ends.

The control points will serve as information stations to direct campus visitors. Most parking spaces on the central campus will be reserved for visitors and faculty and the bulk of student cars will be parked on perimeter lots. Safety of students on the

The arch of a new pedestrian tunnel frames buildings of the Southwest Residence Area of the University of Massachusetts. The tunnel, completed this past summer, provides a safe walkway under a highway for the 4,600 students who now live in the Southwest Area.

New residence hall, (below) one of four opening with the return of students to the University of Massachusetts this fall, flanks paved quadrangle at the Southwest Residential Area. The four new houses, all named for distinguished UMass faculty members now deceased, are Crampton, Mackimmie, Prince and Patterson Houses. Their addition brings the total Southwest student population to 4,600. When completed in another year, Southwest will house and provide meals for 5,400 students in 20 buildings.

UMass to Hold Food Seminar

A ten-session seminar for food service people on purchasing and utilizing beef will be presented by the University of Massachusetts restaurant and hotel management program starting Sept. 26, at Waltham, part of the UMass food science and technology department's off-campus educational offerings.

The seminar will be held at the University's Waltham Field Station, 240 Beaver St., Waltham. Sessions are scheduled Tuesday evenings on the following dates: Sept. 26; Oct. 3, 10, 17, 24 and 31; and Nov. 7, 14, 21, and 28. Each meeting is scheduled for 7:00 to 9:30 p.m.

The series is designed to provide food service people concerned with beef a better understanding of efficient procedures of beef purchasing and preparation. The seminar is designed for food service managers, cooks, food buyers, dietitians, operators of restaurants and other commercial eating places, school lunch managers, hospital food service people, and others in the food service industry.

The seminar will consider the principles involved in beef purchasing, handling, and storage, and the preparation of beef. Instruction will be based on research results and practices and procedures of value to the food service operation. Purchasing techniques, sources of supply, marketing, prices, understanding grades and standards, the arithmetic of beef buying, and beef cookery will be among the subjects covered by University professors, industry representa- agencies and organizations.

Dr. Donald E. Lundberg, professor in charge of the restaurant and hotel management program at the University of Massachusetts, notes that the purchase and use of beef is one of the major problem areas in many food service operations. Meat represents one of the larg-

UMass Receives Electric Co. Grant Of $10,600

The restaurant and hotel management program of the University has received a $10,600 grant of commercial cooking equipment from Massachusetts electric companies.

The equipment has been installed in the Seller Memorial Kitchen of Chenoweth Laboratory, headquarters of the U-Mass department of food science and technology. It will be used by more than 200 students enrolled in the restaurant and hotel management program.

The University offers a four-year course associated with the department of food science and technology leading to a B.S. degree and a two-year course in the Stockbridge School leading to an associate degree, under the direction of Dr. Donald E. Lundberg.

Edward Putnam, commercial cooking and lighting supervisor of the Springfield division of the Western Mass. Electric Co. headed the committee of electric company specialists who worked with the University staff to determine the equipment needed.

The kitchen equipment was provided by the Boston Edison Co., Brockton Edison Co., Holyoke Water Power Co., Massachusetts Electric Co., New England Electric System and the Western Mass. Electric Co.

In accepting the equipment, Dr. William B. Esselen, head of the department of food science and technology, said "The support of the Massachusetts electric companies in making available modern electric equipment will enhance our facilities for training young people for careers in the food service industry."

est items of food cost and beef makes up most of that total in many eating places. Efficiencies which can be attained in this area and deficiencies which can be corrected can mean much to the efficiency of the total food service operation.

Robert F. Lukowski, extension specialist in food management, states that the seminar presentation is based on requests from food service people throughout the state for an in-depth consideration of the whole subject of buying and using beef.

Advance registration is necessary. Complete information on the content of the seminar and the registration fee is available from: Restaurant and Hotel Management Program, Attention Professor Charles Eshbach, Chenoweth Laboratory, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Mass. 01002.

The Story of Peanuts -- The Comic Strip, That Is!

"Your city is full of peanuts!"

Now a statement like that might not sound altogether complimentary, unless you happened to be in the peanut-vending business. But the man who said it, a tall, quiet-spoken artist by the name of Charles M. Schulz, wasn't referring to the kind of peanuts you eat. He meant little folks, youngsters.

"Peanuts are the grandest people in the world," he explains. "Your children are peanuts, and so are mine. They're delightful, lovable, funny, irresistible and wonderfully unpredictable. I really hate to see them grow out of the peanut stage."

Charles M. Schultz should know. He's the creator of "Peanuts," the comic strip being distributed to newspapers throughout the world by United Feature Syndicate, Inc., which has won phenomenal popularity among readers of all ages and earned for Mr. Schultz such prized honors as the National Cartoonists' Society's "Cartoonist of the Year" award in 1956 and 1964 (the only two-time winner), the society's "Best Humor Strip of the Year" award in 1962, the 1958 "Humorist of the Year" award of the Yale Record, and many others.

In 1963 Anderson College, Anderson, Ind., bestowed on him an honorary doctorate degree in humane letters. A similar honorary degree was given to him in June, 1966, by St. Mary's College, St. Mary's Calif.

"Peanuts" Invade TV

In the fall of 1965 artist-writer Schulz was invited to create a television special for network presentation, and the result was "A Charlie Brown Christmas," which was broadcast in December, 1965, and earned a Peabody Award and a Television Academy Emmy Award. This was followed in the spring of 1966 by the tremendously popular "Charlie Brown's All-Stars," a humorous salute to baseball and vacation time, and "It's the Great Pumpkin, Charlie Brown." Other TV specials are certain to be forthcoming.

Born in Minneapolis a bit more than 40 years ago, he can't remember a time when he didn't like to draw pictures. Sometime during grammar school he decided he wanted to be a cartoonist, and after graduating from high school he took a correspondence school course in art. With this basic training (and his natural talent) he was about to embark on his chosen career when World War II interfered. Entering the Army in February, he served as a machine-gun squad leader in France, Germany and Austria, before receiving his honorable discharge in February, 1946.

Even in the Army, however, he found time to draw comical sketches of amusing little youngsters and their distinctive reactions to life. Once back home in Minneapolis again, he began drawing two-column panel cartoons for magazines and sold several to the Saturday Evening Post and other periodicals. He also worked as instructor at the same Minneapolis art school at which he had been a correspondence student some years before.

The Big Break

In 1949 he sent a bundle of the panel cartoons to United Feature Syndicate in New York.

"My wife and I kept our fingers crossed, waiting for the reply," he says. "And when the syndicate wrote that they would be interested in seeing my funny youngsters developed in comic-strip form, rather than as single panel cartoons, I really got excited. I had already developed some definite little characters that I thought would make a good daily strip, so I drew them up and left for New York."

It was a nasty, rainy morning when he arrived in New York, and to keep his drawings dry he tucked them under his coat and hurried to the syndicate office without pausing for breakfast. He was so early that none of the staff had arrived for the day, so he left the drawings with the receptionist and went out to eat.

Charles Schulz — Greater of Peanuts and Charlie Brown (left).

While he was gone, the editors arrived, and the receptionist gave them the samples. They looked them over, and by the time Schulz returned they had decided that his inimitable little characters — good ol' Charlie Brown, Lucy, Patty, Violet, Schroeder and the others — would indeed make a good comic strip. And thus was "Peanuts" born.

Dieters' Delight

Since its first appearance in 1950, the strip has generated a constant flow of surprisingly devoted fan mail. A lady in Washington, D.C., wrote, "Although peanuts are fattening and I'm supposed to be on a diet, I just can't resist your delightful comic. I read it every morning in lieu of breakfast." And a young wife in San Francisco wrote, "Whenever I refer to my soon-to-be-born first baby, I call him Charlie Brown. If he is a boy I will undoubtedly name him Charlie Brown."

College students all over the country have voted "Peanuts" their favorite comic strip. The Detroit Free Press inadvertently omitted the strip from the first two editions one day, and as the editor explained in a front-page story, "Our switchboard lit up like a Christmas tree. With all the phones ringing, it sounded like a Chinese temple at New Year's. We stopped the presses — just like the movies — and got 'Peanuts' back into the paper."

Mr. and Mrs. Schulz now have five real-life "peanuts" of their own: three girls — Meredith, Amy Louise, and Jill Marie —and two boys — Charles Jr. and Craig. Friends of the family are sometimes inclined to see the Schulz children depicted as characters in the strip.

"It's not quite that easy," Mr. Schulz says. "Occasionally I do use an actual incident or an apt remark as the basis for a strip. But mostly I think the characters in the strip have their own individual personalities, that are just as real to me as those of my own children."

When the growing real-life family outgrew the house in Minneapolis in the spring of 1958, the Schulzes packed up and moved westward, to a larger, comfortably rambling home in Sebastopol, Calif. There, in a studio separated from the main house by enough distance to insure reasonably uninterrupted working hours, Mr. Schulz follows his long-established practice of starting his day's work as close to 6:30 a.m. as possible.

He averages about eight hours' work a day, he says. Sometimes, when ideas come fast, he turns out two or three strips in that time, and sometimes — but rarely — he discards everything because it doesn't meet his exacting standards.

How does he feel about the very satisfying success of his little-brain-children? "I'm one of the luckiest people I know, he says. "All my life, I wanted to draw a comic strip — and now I'm doing it, and people seem to like it. I can't imagine anything I'd rather do more than what I'm doing."

Don't laugh at
Charles Van der Hoff's big ears. He can hear a party a mile away,
thanks to Sprite.

VAN DER HOFF WITH SPRITE

Social-life majors, take a look at Charles Van der Hoff. He can't play the guitar. Never directed an underground movie. And then look at his ears! A bit much? Yes! But--Charles Van der Hoff can hear a bottle of tart, tingling Sprite being opened in the girls' dormitory from across the campus!

What does it matter, you say? Hah! Do you realize that Charles Van der Hoff has never missed a party in four years? When he hears those bottles of Sprite being uncapped--the roars--the fizzes--the bubbles--he runs! So before you can say anti-existentialism, he's getting in on that tart, tingling, slightly tickling taste of Sprite. And delicious refreshment --as well as a good time--is his.

Of course, you don't have to have ears as big as Charles Van der Hoff's to enjoy the swinging taste of Sprite. You may just have to resign yourself to a little less social life.

SPRITE, SO TART AND TINGLING, WE JUST COULDN'T KEEP IT QUIET.

SPRITE IS A REGISTERED TRADE MARK OF THE COCA-COLA COMPANY

An All-American Story: Few Heroes Left

"For the first time in years, it seemed like all the athletic directors were really working together and trying to iron out each other's problems. It was just great."

Chet Gladchuk spoke excitedly one day that summer about the June meeting of the Yankee Conference athletic directors, which he attended as UMass assistant athletic director.

He was excited because he loved the Conference just as he loved UMass. And he was a man of untiring loyalties.

Whether you were an athletic director checking with him or a scheduling detail or an inconsiderate sophomore calling him at home to find out why the Boyden Gym wasn't open at that particular time, you'd never feel sorry you'd called. He'd say, "How are ya" and he'd give you straight answers to your questions — sometimes a lost art where athletic officials are concerned.

He was an All-American center at Boston College, a pro with the New York Giants, a popular coach, a tireless intramural director and a perceptive administrator.

"He was an All-American in every sense of the word," said Dean Warren McGuirk, director of athletics. Think about that for a second or two, because heroes now are running short.

Curtain Rises Again Sept. 23

Gridmen - What'll They Do for an Encore?

Head Coach Vic Fusia with Co-captains Greg Landry and Jim Mitchell

THE OFFENSIVE BACKFIELD

A 'Total Player' and Some Bright Newcomers

By TIM MURPHY, Assistant Sports Editor

Like Eric Burdon, Greg Landry is still there but his backfield accomplices, like the Animals, have fallen to the winds of change.

Halfback Bob Detore, the attritive jack - of - all - offensive - trades who was a major cog in the UMass machine last season, will be conspicuous by his absence through graduation. Fullback Don Durkin will be out for at least a month with a broken clavicle suffered during training.

But there are new faces with new talents to complement the aplomb of veteran quarterback Landry, entering his third year of signal-calling.

"I might make a small bet that he'll start at quarterback," Vic Fusia, head football coach, joked Monday after watching nearly two weeks of extensive workouts.

COCHRANE SARNO

DRISCOLL TUTINO

Landry was the Redmen's leading ground-gainer in 1966, churning out 556 yards, although he averaged only 1.6 yards gained per carry.

Fusia has described the 6'3, 200 lb. Landry as "the total football player," and since his graduation from Nashua High School, Nashua, N.H., Landry has done nothing to refute the compliment. He was named the top quarterback in the Yankee Conference last year and should make the grade in professional football after graduation.

But, and with apologies to the poet, one man does not the team make. Understudying Landry at quarterback are junior Ron Colton of Haverhill, and soph Tim Adams of Wellesley. Fusia considers Colton much improved over a year ago. "He seems to have come into his own this year and has shown he can direct the team intelligently," Fusia said.

Adams called the signals for last season's freshman football squad, which ran up a 3-2 record, losing to Army and New Hampshire. Fusia feels Adams' quick reflexes, honed in high school where he played hockey and baseball in addition to football, will enable the slim quarterback "to become a good passer and field general."

At fullback, Brookline's 6'1, 205-lb. Bruce Cochrane and Ed Sarno, a 6', 220 lb. soph from Waltham, are a toss-up. Cochrane saw plenty of action at the position last year, but is remembered most for his last-quarter field-goal against Maine that beat the Black Bears 10-7 at Alumni Stadium.

Sarno was sidelined for much of his freshman year with injuries, but according to Fusia is capable of breaking into the starting lineup.

Soph John Decembrele and juniors Tim Driscoll and John Tutino are fighting for the tailback spot. The final choice will be a difficult one for Fusia to make. Driscoll, 6' 190 lb., was slowed by injuries last year, but showed good speed.

Decembrele at 6'1, 195 lb., is the biggest of the three tailbacks, but has only a year of freshman football under his belt at the collegiate level. Tutino is the smallest of the contingent (5'10, 175 lb.), but comes well-recommended after two years of service at Taft Junior College in California.

At slotback, Fusia has a battle between two of UMass' best backfield prospects in years. Sophs Craig Lovell and Jerry Grasso, both standouts on last season's freshman team, are quick and shifty.

Grasso, 6'1, 185 lb., leading receiver for the frosh was a high school All-America at Everett High School in 1964. His speed and finesse could make him one of Landry's prime passing targets.

Lovell, a 6', 190-lb. bull out of Wellesley was one of the leading ground gainers for the freshmen last season. His powerful leg action and deceptive speed provide him with all the tools of an outstanding offensive back.

'Didn't Know How to Play Dirty'

Editor's Note: The following article, written by Gerry Finn of The Springfield Union, appeared after the death of Chet Gladchuk, UMass' beloved assistant athletic director. It reflects accurately, we think, the personality of an All-American, on and off the field, through the words of a close friend and former teammate.

It was almost a full month ago. Joe Manzo was in the midst of post mortem. He had played a tournament round of golf at the Ludlow Country Club and he wore a beaten look. "I'm not concerned about the golf defeat," he managed . . . and he went back to pinching his upper lip with his teeth. "I'm accustomed to that. It's tonight that's killing me. I've got to visit Chet and I'm wondering how I'm going to keep from crying. You see . . . I love the guy. And . . . don't make any wise remarks or I'll put you right through that picture window."

The threat of violence was a slip of the tongue. Manzo didn't mean it, but the moment tortured him. He knew his friend, Chet Gladchuk, lay in a hospital bed, his body a shrunken shadow of its former self . . . still fighting the ravages and inevitable consequence of that indiscriminate killer of all ages—cancer.

Gladchuk was going to die. Manzo knew it and the thought ripped at him. "When he goes . . . and I pray to God each day for the miracle that would save him, only Leo and I will be left. Alex (Lukachik) went all of a sudden last December. He had a heart attack. It was quick. He never realized he was going," Manzo recalled. "That was the last time I saw Chet, and he didn't look good. He said it was only an ulcer. But it didn't look like any ulcer to me."

Leo would be Leo Strumski. He, Manzo, Lukachik and Gladchuk were an inseparable foursome during the happy football years at Boston College. They roomed together during their stay there, in a private home in Brighton where a "Mrs. Muldoon" mothered them in their hours away from the books and blocks which were part of the championship era at the Jesuit school.

Naturally, Gladchuk was Mrs. Mudoon's favorite. "She used to get after the rest of us for being so wild," Joe chuckled . . . dusting off his memories of college life and the rewarding experience of being a part of gridiron success on a national level. "Chet could do no wrong. Rather, he did no wrong. He was all the things all of us wanted to be—a good student, serious, Mass every day and concern for his fellow man. He could have turned around his collar. That's how kind and considerate he was."

On the football field, though, Gladchuk shed his celestial robes. He was a true All-American, no fancy public relation man's dream. He played center on those BC teams which reaped glory in 1939-40 seasons—the Cotton and Sugar Bowlers who brought to Boston such collegiate football fame it hasn't seen since.

Chet could do everything except lower himself to questionable tactics. "He wouldn't know how to play dirty," Manzo preached in premature eulogy. "I remember the opening kickoff of the Sugar Bowl against Tennessee. Chet raced downfield and nailed the runner with a tackle which shook the stadium. 'You all sure can tackle,' the Southerner told Chet. 'You all?' Chet questioned. 'There's only one of me!' That's the type of reaction opponents got from this big lovable guy. He was all business, all man . . . but possessed with the ability to break any tension, painting any situation."

If Manzo could find any fault with his roomie, it was Chet's reluctance to take advantage of his strength and size. "He was self conscious of the fact that he was bigger than all of us," Joe winced. "No one wanted to tangle with him. Yet, he always was afraid he might hurt somebody."

The quadrangle of football stars as roommates served as preview to the United Nations and also leaked over into one-for-all, all-for-one advantages when it came to tapping the home fires for some extracurricular chow. Manzo was Italian and his mother made the best spaghetti this side of North Medford. Strumski was Lithuanian and Lukachik Russian. Joe remembers eating some dishes from those countries but the names escaped him.

"We always looked forward to a weekend at Chet's," Manzo winked. "His mother was a great cook. Those golompkis. They were out of this world. When we were on our way to New Orleans to play the Sugar Bowl, the train stopped at Bridgeport—Chet's hometown. His mother was there with a whole bunch of golompkis, and we had a Polish menu for dinner that night."

The thoughts of yesteryear blinded Manzo for the moment. He turned away from the present as though it were the same disease which was tearing his friend away from him and the rest of the world. He couldn't lose himself in the past completely. The time had run close to dinner and the visit with Chet still lay ahead. But he refused to stop retracing the events of their respective lives.

"Both Chet and I went on to pro football after college," he laughed. "Chet did all right with the New York Giants. Me? I wound up with the Detroit Lions for about four or five years. I was 230 and pretty quick, but in those days you had to go both ways . . . And my top pay was $3500 a season. Chet probably did better. He was an All-American. Maybe he made four grand a year."

Then, Manzo did a turnabout. He sent his teeth working at that upper lip again and sensed the tragedy which was chasing down his friend. "Chet and Lukachik both came from Bridgeport," Maybe they'll be together again soon."

And the former BC grid great—now balding and crowding 50 years of age—found rain in his eyes in anticipation of what was to come. "That Gladchuk," he wept. "He was big enough to go hunting bears with a switch. It isn't right."

THE OFFENSIVE LINE

Sophs May Start; Santucci, Becker Return

by TIM MURPHY, Assistant Sports Editor

A quick and agile backfield is reduced to mediocrity without a strong, well-drilled line ahead of it.

And well-drilled is this year's offensive line, although even after two-a-day practice sessions from Aug. 29 to Saturday the starting line is far from decided.

"We filmed several of the scrimmages and have a good reading on most of our personnel," Head Football Coach Vic Fusia said Monday. "We're still shuffling players for the most part and we haven't yet arrived at a definite lineup. We'll know more after the scrimmage Saturday at Harvard."

But as it now stands, Fusia has 19 players vying for berths at the seven positions.

At split-end three players are after a piece of the action. Leading contender is 6'2, 195 lb. junior Nick Warnock, who was the team's best punter (34-yard average) and pass receiver a year ago. Warnock is the fastest end on the team and, according to Fusia, "has improved a good 50 per cent in skills over last year and seems to have become more consistent in punting."

Don Young, a 6', 205-lb. soph who returned here in February after a two-year tour in the Armed Forces, performed well in spring drills at split-end. He is a former All Western Massachusetts selection while at Holyoke High School and was chosen All New England Prep at Cushing Academy.

"He's always had the ability to catch a ball," said Fusia, "and I'm impressed with his moves. He has the ability to find open country."

Steve Parnell, the starting offensive halfback for the frosh last fall, is quick and agressive and the 6', 180 lb. soph should see action as offensive back as well as at the defensive safety slot. "As far as we're concerned," says Fusia, "he's a switch-hitter."

At split-tackle, Fusia is going with either of two sophs, Mike Cooney and Jim Nangle. Cooney, who stands at 6', 220 lb., was a linebacker a year ago for the freshmen. "He has the speed, quickness and knowledge to handle the position," Fusia noted, "and he'll get better."

Nangle, who Fusia says could be one of the fastest men on the squad, saw action for the frosh at defensive end. Nangle is bigger than Cooney, weighing in at 230, and has three inches on his rival.

Split-guard appears to go to Ernie Smith, a 5'10, 195 lb. senior who has been hampered throughout his three years on the varsity by various injuries. "The injuries," Fusia says, "surely took away from his effectiveness, but he is an athlete and a real workhorse. The more you work him the better he likes it."

Also setting his sights on the split-guard position is Don Glogowski. The 5'11, 190 lb. senior played the position most of last year and "the year of experience helped him," Fusia says.

Five players form the potpourri seeking the offensive center position. Noel Schablik, Bob Sheehan, John Barbato, Paul Robichaud or John Dubzinski will get Fusia's call to open against Maine Sept. 23 at Orono.

BILL CARTY

NICK WARNOCK

ALAN BECKER

DON GLOGOWSKI

NOEL SCHABLICK

DON YOUNG

Schablik, 6'2, 200 lb. junior, alternated at guard and center last year. Dubzinski was the starting offensive center for the frosh. These two appear to have the inside track, but either Sheehan, Barbato or Robichaud could nail down the position with a good performance against Harvard.

Bob Santucci 6', 217 lb., will be the probable starter at strong guard this year after missing the entire 1966 campaign after a knee operation. In his sophomore and junior years Santucci was a fine two-way performer at guard and was particularly effective in power sweeps.

Also at strong guard is Bruce Fulton, the outstanding offensive guard on last season's freshman team.

At strong tackle, Co-captain Jim Mitchell will be counted on to anchor that side of the line. Mitchell is a two-year letterman at tackle and hasn't missed a minute of offensive football in two years. Bob Goc started at tackle for the frosh last year and will back up Mitchell.

Alan Becker, a 6'4, 200 lb. junior, will start at tight end if pronounced fit after undergoing several tests last week. Becker was out of school last fall, but as a soph lettered as a soph two years ago. He will probably displace Bill Carty, who transferred last year from Furman and nailed down the starting berth at midseason.

JOHN DUBZINSKI

JOHN BARBATO

PAUL ROBICHAUD

BOB SHEEBAN

BOB GOC

The crew team will meet tomorrow at 7 p.m. in the Norfolk Room of the Student Union.

All returning oarsmen, as well as any other students, freshmen or upperclassmen, interested in rowing should attend. Men weighing approximately 120 lbs., who are interested in being coxwains, are needed.

This is the third year of crew competition at UMass and this year for the first time Physical Education credit may be given to oarsmen.

UMass 6-3 in Season That Was

1966 Was Year of Thrills, Tension As Redmen Took Yan-Con Crown

By GLENN BRIERE, Staff Reporter

It was like a nine-part weekly serial. You were subjected to a Saturday afternoon of seat-squirming tension for about two and a half hours. When it ended, you'd have to wait until the next Saturday for the next installment.

This soap opera was in reality the 1966 UMass football season. The Redmen won the Yankee Conference Beanpot and rolled up a 6-3 record, but not one game was devoid of thrills. The injury-wracked Redmen had to struggle for each of their six wins, but with a few breaks here and there, they could have won the three games they lost. It was that kind of season.

Following is a game-by-game review of that season:

SEPT. 17 — MAINE AT ALUMNI STADIUM

The tone of the season was set in the opener against the Black Bears. UMass won, 10-7, but it took a 26-yard field goal by Bruce Cochrane with 18 seconds left in the game to do it. It was probably one of the most exciting wins ever recorded by a UMass team.

Halfback Don Durkin put the Redmen on the scoreboard with seven minutes gone in the first quarter as he went over from the two yard line. The rest of the half was all defense as UMass led, at halftime.

A Maine interception with five minutes gone in the second half brought the Black Bears to life, and a quarterback sneak by George Platter plus the extra point made it a 7-7 ball game.

The Redmen made their move with about three minutes left in the game. A Greg Landry pass to Bob Ellis gave UMass a first down at the Maine 29. The Redmen could get only as far as the ten, however, to set up a fourth-and-five situation with 21 seconds left.

Cochrane, a sophomore fullback, was called in to make the crucial kick. A knuckler, the boot just barely cleared the crossbar but it was enough to win the game.

SEPT. 24 — DARTMOUTH AT HANOVER, N.H.

The Redmen were decided underdogs in this one, and although the Ivy Leaguers won, 17-7 UMass outplayed them much of the way. It was just two first-quarter plays that enabled the Big Green to win.

The first was a 48-yard punt return by Sam Hawken. Moments later, swivel-hipped halfback Gene Ryzewicz wound his way through the UMass offense en route to a 64-yard touchdown run. The scoreboard showed Dartmouth ahead, 14-0, and it looked like a long, long day for Vic Fusia's forces.

UMass came alive in the second quarter as Landry's passes found the mark, but the Indians held. Nevertheless, the momentum was changing hands.

Another UMass drive in the third quarter was thwarted, and Dartmouth's Bill Hay subsequently booted a 27-yard field goal to make it 17-0.

Early in the fourth quarter UMass started its lone touchdown drive, culminating in a one-yard sneak by Landry for the score. UMass had two more chances to score, but failed to capitalize as the Big Green emerged victorious.

OCT. 8 — CONNECTICUT AT ALUMNI STADIUM

Arch-rival UConn outplayed the Redmen much of the way, but UMass managed to hold on for a 12-6 win.

The Huskies took a 6-0 lead in the second quarter on a pair of long field goals by place-kicker-deluxe Roy Lawrence. But UMass got its first break with 1:20 to go in the second quarter as cornerback Mike McArdle picked off a Pete Petrillo pass and romped 52 yards for the TD and a 6-6 tie at the half.

The third quarter turned into a defensive battle with little offense, other than a U-Conn drive that was halted at the one-foot line by the UMass defense.

The tie stood until late in the last quarter. With 3:22 left, Landry heaved a desperation pass to Bob Ellis that went for 52 yards. Five plays later, Landry swept around right end for a seven-yard score. The Huskies threatened once more, but an interception by Dave Giarla ended the game.

GENE RYZEWICZ

OCT. 15 — RHODE ISLAND AT KINGSTON, R. I.

By now, injuries to key personnel were forcing Fusia to constantly juggle his lineups. Thus it was not with great optimism that the Redmen travelled to little Rhody, a team that they had dominated the past few years.

Again, the Redmen were lucky to escape with a win. This time the score was 14-9, and were it not for a goal line interception by linebacker Ernie Smith with less than 30 seconds to go, the Rams might well have won it.

The lone score of the first half was a 20-yard field goal by Rhode Island's Steve Collis. But in the third quarter the UMass offense came to life. Bob Detore's two-yard plunge capped off a 47-yard drive to make it 7-3.

In the fourth quarter, three clutch third-down catches by Nick Warnock set up Don Durkin's nine-yard touchdown run. UMass fans, for the first time in the season, were breathing easy as the Redmen had a 14-3 lead.

But the pass-happy Rams marched back up the field, only to lose the ball on downs. But Warnock, punting out on his own end zone, had his kick blocked, setting up a URI touchdown by fullback Brent Kaufman with 5:13 to go. The two-point conversion failed, and it was 14-9. Again, Rhody threatened, but Smith's key interception saved the day for UMass.

OCT. 22 — BOSTON U. AT ALUMNI STADIUM

A record Homecoming crowd watched the underdog Redmen upset the Terriers, 12-7. Again, it was that gutsy UMass defense that won the game.

A magnificent goal line stand by UMass highlighted the scoreless first half. In the second half, the Redmen drove 64 yards in 13 plays as Detore's four-yard run made it 6-0.

Shortly afterwards, sophomore speedster Reggie Rucker tied the score for B.U. with a 71-yard punt return. UMass came back, however, as Don Durkin scored from three yards out with 11 minutes left.

Like each of the previous games, the ending was a super-thriller. The Terriers made their way to the UMass 18, but two penalties plus a monstrous pass rush by 250-pound tackle Dick Qualey shoved B.U. back to the 42, ending the game.

OCT. 29 — VERMONT AT BURLINGTON, VT.

It had all the makings of a championship game. Little Centennial Field was jammed to the hilt with bloodthirsty Vermont fans. The temperature was in the 20's and the wind was gusting. And it was UMass, unbeaten in the Yankee Conference, against Vermont, unbeaten overall. The Beanpot was at stake on this oppressively cold Vermont afternoon.

And after the first quarter, it looked as if the Redmen all but had the 'Pot wrapped up. Durkin scored first, from four yards out, to make it 7-0. When UMass got its numb hands on the ball again, Landry highlighted a 31-yard march with a one-yard sneak.

If that wasn't enough, Dave Giarla scored on a superb 75-yard punt return shortly afterwards. 20-0 in the first quarter? The Vermont fans sat and gaped at the scoreboard, half out of disbelief and half out of inebriation.

When the Catamounts turned Bob Mitchell, probably the best halfback in New England, loose in the second quarter, the UVM offense began to click. The powerful junior scored from three yards to make the score 20-7 at the half. It still looked comfortable.

But in the third quarter, Vermont got right back in the game. Mitchell led a 64-yard drive which ended in a touchdown pass from Jack Stroker to Jeff Kuhman. 20-14, and the UVM fans were yelling again.

With 12 minutes to go in the fourth quarter, Durkin twisted his way to a 25-yard score that made it 27-14. But with a great like Mitchell on the team, it was far from over.

A 32-yard run by Mitchell, followed by his two-yard TD plunge, made the score 27-21 with 8:10 left. Lots of time, thought the UVM fans.

But it wasn't until five and a half minutes later that the catamounts got their hands on the ball again. And when they did, an interception by Giarla ended their hopes. It was a frustrated and totally potted crowd that left Centennial Field.

NOV. 5 — HOLY CROSS AT WORCESTER

This game was even more frustrating for UMass than the previous week's was for Vermont. Holy Cross won 16-14, but only after a great last quarter rally by UMass.

The Crusaders rolled up their 16-0 lead on a first quarter 17-yard roll-out by quarterback Jack Lentz, and three field goals by Mike Kaminski, coming in the 1st, 3rd and last quarter.

There was 5:37 left when linebacker Rod Brooks blocked a Holy Cross punt and Paul Vacarro recovered on the Crusaders' two-yard line. Landry's dive plus a conversion pass to Bill Carty made it 16-8.

Brooks blocked a Kaminski field goal try with about two minutes left and the Redmen had one more try, but from their own 12. Landry, however, moved the team like a pro as the Redmen moved 88 yards, all through the air.

With the ball on the three and 19 seconds to go, Landry fired a pass up the middle to Bob Detore, making the score 16-14. Landry again tried a conversion pass to Carty for the knotter, but the big end dropped the ball and time ran out.

BRENT KAUFMAN

NOV. 12 — NEW HAMPSHIRE AT ALUMNI STADIUM

Needing a win against the Wildcats to clinch the Conference championship, the Redmen again put on a thriller as they struggled to beat improved UNH, 14-7.

An exhausted Greg Landry had to leave the game in the third quarter with the score tied, 7-7. But to the delight of the local fans, untested understudy Al Caruso led UMass to the winning score in the fourth quarter.

Landry bootlegged from 14 yards out in the second quarter to put UMass ahead, 7-0. That stood as the only score of the first half.

Early in the third quarter, New Hampshire, led by little quarterback Bill Estey, started to move. With 9:16 to go, Tom Kasprzak scored on a five-yard run to tie it up, 7-7.

Late in the third period, Landry had to leave the game and in came Al Caruso, who had not quarterbacked at all until this game. When the Redmen took over on their own 40, Caruso passed to Bill Carty to put the ball at the UNH 39. Seven plays later Detore went off left tackle to put UMass ahead with 10:46 left.

The Wildcats threatened twice more, but each threat was killed by an interception, the first by Giarla and the second by McArdle. The Beanpot belonged to UMass for the third time in four years.

NOV. 19 — BOSTON COLLEGE AT ALUMNI STADIUM

The season's finale was typically exciting, and although the Redmen mustered up their characteristic second-half uprising, Boston College took a 14-7 win.

B.C. came into this game with a 3-5 record and a lot of dissatisfied alumni. Thus it was no wonder that the Crusaders wanted it badly.

B.C. grabbed an early 5-0 lead when UMass safety Dave Giarla was nailed in the end zone for a safety while trying to field a punt. Shortly afterwards, Mike O'Neil kicked a 34-yard field goal. The 5-0 score stood at the half.

Paul Della Villa's one-yard run in the third quarter made it 11-0 with nine minutes to go.

The Redmen finally started to move halfway through the third quarter. Landry moved the club to the Eagles 23, and then threw a pass that bounced off a B. C. defender into the arms of Bob Detore in the end zone. Cochrane's conversion made it 11-7.

O'Neil booted another field goal with three minutes left in the period. The 14-7 score held for the rest of the game and was not threatened until UMass tried its last drive of the season with four minutes left.

Landry completed three important passes to the B.C. 33, but John Salmon intercepted a sideline pass, ran it back to the UMass 30, and the Eagles were able to run out the clock.

Football Prospecti For 1967 Foes

By MIKE CURRAN, Staff Reporter

MAINE (away) — The Black Bears have always been the toughest Yankee Conference opponent for UMass. This game is traditionally a hard-fought, low-scoring, nail-biter and this year's affair will probably be no exception, although UMass is the definite favorite. Maine has lost 16 lettermen including Little All-America John Huard, currently a Denver Bronco. Defensively the Bears will be typically strong partic ularly at the end positions. The offense is riddled with holes, however, and it is anyone's guess how sophomores and subs will fill the vacuum. Co-Captains Don White and Keith Kalman, are two of the better linemen. George Platter and sophomore Dave Wing are battling for the quarterback job. Other top sophomores are end George Brenner, and halfbacks Charles Harney and Mark Richardson. Maine, facing its toughest schedule ever, will have trouble playing .500 ball.

Returning — 20 Lettermen
Lost — 16 Lettermen
Outlook — Lack of experience and depth will keep Maine under .500.
Schedule: Sept. 23 Mass; Sept. 30 Citadel; Oct. 7 at Vermont; Oct. 14 Univ. of New Hampshire; Oct. 21 UConn; Oct. 28 at Boston College; Nov. 4 Northeastern; Nov. 11 at Univ. Rhode Island.

DARTMOUTH

(home)—Since the start of official Ivy League play in 1956, the Big Green have had the best percentage of any Ivy team in football. Despite the loss of many fine players, this year's team is expected to be right in the thick of the fight with Princeton, Harvard, Yale, and Cornell. Senior Gene Ryzewicz, one of the most exciting players in the East, has been switched from halfback to quarterback in a move which will give him more opportunities to run with the ball. Capt. Steve Luxford has one of the halfback spots nailed down while Hank Paulsen, Skip Small and Randy Wallick are the bulwarks of the offensive line. Defensive stars include ends Pete Lawrence and Randy McElrath, linebacker Norm Davis, and tackle Jeff Norton. Bill Koenig and Jack Wimsatt were a good thrower-receiver duo on last year's freshman team and should see plenty of action on the varsity this fall. Bruce Saylor and Rick Lease are two of the other sophomores to watch.

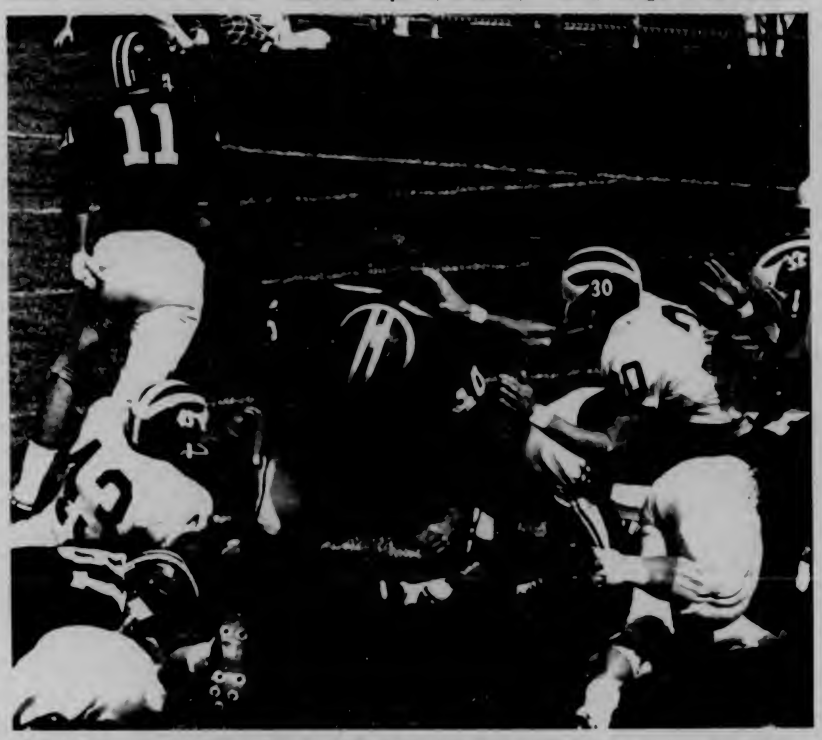
Coach — Robert Blackman
Last year's record—7-2
Returning — 20 lettermen
Lost — 18 lettermen
Outlook — Will have trouble keeping up with recent pace.
Schedule: Sept. 30 at UMass; Oct. 7 Holy Cross; Oct. 14 Penn; Oct. 21 at Brown; Oct. 28 at Harvard; Nov. 4 at Yale; Nov. 11 at Columbia; Nov. 18 Cornell; Nov. 25 at Princeton.

CONNECTICUT

(away) — An improved offense and the return of eight of the 11 defensive starters should help the Huskies surpass their 2-6-1 record of last season. Senior Paul Gruner and junior Pete Petrillo are fighting for the starting quarterback job. Mike Boryczewski, 6'2", 210, is the best of the running backs. Steve Dixon and Roy Lawrence are the best of the offensive linemen. Lawrence also doubles as a placekicker, and was one of the nation's best last year. Defensively, UConn has Nick Lurco, All Yankee Conference last year, Vic Kinon, Steve Smith in the line, plus Co-Captain Mark Malek, Hank Palasek, and Bob Lice as linebackers. All are seniors with the exception of Lurco. Defensive backs include Ron Grinage, Vin Lovins, and Bob Mugford. Top sophomores are end Ralph Finer and flanker back John Crisp, and tackle Tony Casarella.

Coach — John Toner
Last year's record — 2-6-1 (YC 2-2-1)
Returning — 33 lettermen
Lost — 11 lettermen
Outlook — Should be able to double victory total.
Schedule: Sept. 30 at Vermont; Oct. 7 at Yale; Oct. 14 UMass; Oct. 21 at Maine; Oct. 28 Davidson; Nov. 4 New Hampshire; Nov. 11 at Boston University, Nov. 18 Rhode Island; Nov. 25 Holy Cross.

RHODE ISLAND



(home) — Rams can't help but do better than last year when they finished with a 1-7-1 chart. That last season's inexperienced sophomores are this year's veterans sums up Rhody's hopes as 19 of the first 22 players are back including All Yankee Conference choices Frank Gerselman, end, Brent Kaufman, fullback, Leon Spinney, linebacker, and Dave O'Donnell, safety. Larry Caswell is expected to start at quarterback while Hank Walker and Ron Madison will be at the halfback slots. The Rams passing game gives them good scoring punch, but the defense will have to be much stronger than a year ago when it allowed better than 20 points a game if Rhody is to have any shot at the Beanpot. Mike Healy, Greg Bogdanich, Warren Negri, and Orvil Engott are the best of the sophomores.

Coach — Jack Zilly
Last year's record—1-7-1
Returning — 26 lettermen
Lost — 8 lettermen
Outlook — Could go as high as third in the Conference.
Schedule: Sept. 23, at Delaware; Sept. 30, at Brown; Oct. 7, New Hampshire; Oct. 14, at Vermont; Oct. 21, at UMass; Oct. 28, Bucknell; Nov. 7, at Boston University; Nov. 11, Maine; Nov. 18, UConn.

BOSTON UNIVERSITY

(away) — The Terriers have one of their best teams in many a season, with 20 of 22 starters back from last season, plus a host of promising newcomers from the frosh. BU is definitely one of the toughest teams U-Mass will face this year. Terriers have everything going for them — depth, size, and experience. Tom Thornton and Dan Lucca will see action at quarterback, Ray Norton, a good prospect, is the standout lineman. Tailback Pete Dexter looked good during the spring session. Promising newcomers include tackles Gilbert Holloway and Gerry Huston, guard John Doriss, linebacker Pat Hughes, tailback Barry Pryor and fullback John Rafalko. Captain Dick Farley is one of the outstanding safetymen in New England. The Terriers open next Saturday and play a solid ten-game schedule.

Coach — Warren Schmarkel
Last year's record 5-5
Returning — 30 lettermen
Lost — 9 lettermen
Outlook — Could be one of the top teams in New England
Schedule: Sept. 16, Bucknell; Sept. 23, at Colgate; Sept. 30, at Temple; Oct. 7, at Harvard; Oct. 14 at Buffalo; Oct. 21, at Holy Cross; Oct. 28, UMass; Nov. 4, Univ. of Rhode Island; Nov. 11, UConn.

Fullback Don Durkin bursts through right tackle last year against Maine at Alumni Stadium. Maine is expected to be particularly strong on defense this year though it has lost the services of All-America Jack Huard.

VERMONT

(home) — The Catamounts will be UMass' top competitor in the Yankee Conference title chase this year. Vermont has one of the best runners in the country in Little All-America Bob Mitchell, who gained over 1200 yards last year. The SSS quarterback trio of Dave Shumate, Paul Simpson and Jack Stroker combined for 14 touchdowns last year via the airways and are all back again. The Catamounts will definitely score this year no matter who they play. Defensively, Bill Wolff, Colin Hurd, and Bill Lawrence are the only starters back at familiar positions, although John Gurrieri and Steve Vukovich have seen some action. Pat O'Reilly and John Wojcihowski are the best of the sophomores. Vermont is pointing for Nov. 4 at Amherst in what could be UMass' most important game of the season.

RUTGERS

(home) — This new edition to the roster of UMass opponents is a bonafide major college in football. The Scarlet Knights have an abundance of running backs, strength in the offensive line, notably at tackle, and fine receivers. The quarterback post is still up for grabs with Mike Greaves, Steve Lipman, Pete Savino, and highly-touted sophomore Bruce Van Ness in there pitching. Van Ness will be starting somewhere in the offense and Coach John Bateman hopes he turns into one of the all-time Rutgers' greats. Up front, veterans Scott Lewendon and Joe Urbanick are the standouts. Rutgers has excellent size in the interior lines and will be tough to move inside. Rick Bonsall, Gary Fisher, John Milanovich, Bob Stonebraker, Jim DiGracinto and Len Novell are the top sophomores. Kicker Jim Dunlin ranks among the best field-goal booters in the country.

Coach — John Bateman
Last year's record — 5-4
Returning — 23 lettermen
Lost — 17 lettermen
Outlook — Will be in every game they play and should have a winning season.
Schedule: Sept. 30, at Princeton; Oct. 7, Lehigh; Oct. 14 Delaware; Oct. 21, at Army; Oct. 28, at Columbia; Nov. 4, at Lafayette; Nov. 11, at U-Mass; Nov. 18, Holy Cross; Nov. 25 Colgate.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

(away) — One of the best freshmen teams last year in New England gives the Wildcats high hopes for this coming season. Ed Walsh, Terry Peluso, and sophomore Reno Regish, a fine thrower, will probably share the quarterback chores. Bill Estey, last year's helmsman, has been switched to flanker. Estey is also one of the best kickoff-return and punt-return specialists despite his 5'6", 140-pound frame. All New England end Bill Vasilios leads the Durham defense. Tackles Jim Carsley, Bruce McCullough, and end Joe Bartlett have been impressive in practice. Defense will be the big problem. Vermont's Mitchell gained 205 yards against the Wildcats last year. Norm Powers, John Prible, Dan Drewniak, Dan Chapman, Bob Rudolph and Dick Gordon lead an excellent sophomore contingent.

Coach — Joe Yudica
Last year's record — 2-6
Returning — 23 lettermen
Lost — 7 lettermen
Outlook — Considerable improvement expected over last year's performance.
Schedule: Sept. 30, Colby; Oct. 7, at Rhode Island; Oct. 14, at Maine; Oct. 21, Vermont; Oct. 28, Northeastern; Nov. 4 at UConn; Nov. 11, at Springfield; Nov. 18, UMass.

BOSTON COLLEGE

(away) — After failing to live up to last year's press clippings the BC camp has been relatively quiet this year. The Eagles play the toughest schedule of any UMass opponent by far, however, so they have reason to be quiet. Fullback Brendan McCarthy is one of the best runners in the nation and a solid pro prospect. Dave Thomas, Joe DeVito, Joe Marzetti, and sophomore, Mike Fallon are all fighting for the starting quarterback job and it's anybody's guess who will see the most action of the quartet. Juniors Barry Ballup, Jerry Rogosa, and Bud Kruger head up a fine offensive line which also includes seniors Jim Garofalo, Mike Evans, and Bill Ladewig. Safetymen John Salmon and Al Giardi are the best of the defensive players. Top sophomores are tackle John Fitzgerald, linebacker John O'Connell, and cornerback Bill Robadan. Playing seven games at home could help the Eagles' chances.

Coach — Jim Miller
Last year's record 4-6
Returning — 25 lettermen

Outlook — Have trouble winning more than they loose.
Schedule: Sept. 23, at Villanova; Sept. 30, Army; Oct. 14, Penn State; Oct. 21, Buffalo; Oct. 28, Maine; Nov. 4, at Cincinnati; Nov. 11, VMI; Nov. 18, Syracuse; Nov. 25, UMass, Dec. 2, at Holy Cross.

BRUNO DEBIAK

PAUL MLINAR

THE DEFENSIVE LINE

Debiak, Mlinar to Start at Ends; Tackles, Guards, Linebackers Unset

by GLENN BRIERE, Staff Reporter

The two areas hardest hit by graduation on the UMass football team are defensive tackle and linebacker. Coach Vic Fusia will be hard-pressed to replace the likes of Ed Toner, Dick Qualey and Rod Brooks.

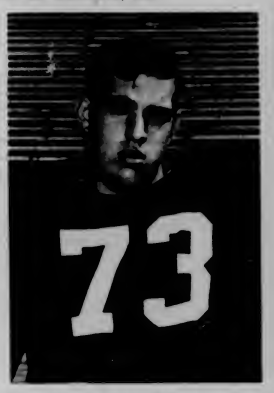
Nevertheless, he has some good young talent which with some experience could perform very well. UMass teams have always been strong defensively under Fusia, and this year's defensive line and linebackers should be characateristically strong.

BRUCE GOMBAR

The starting defensive ends will be two senior lettermen, Bruno Debiak and Paul Milnar. Debiak, a 210-pounder, was a steady performer on the defensive platoon last year. He relies on quickness and a strong pass rush.

Milnar, 225 pounds, has been a defensive regular for two years. A fine pass rusher, he may also do some of the Redmen's punting this fall.

Backing up Milnar and Debiak at end are Tom York, 200 lb., and Dick Iodice, a 210-pound junior. Joe DiVincenzo had also figured to see action, but a pre-season injury may sideline him for the year.



PAUL CAMPBELL

Qualey, Toner Gone

With the departure of Qualey and Toner at tackle, there is a five-way battle going on. Veterans Doug Faucette and Kent Stevens appear to have the inside track.

Faucette, a 220-pound senior, alternated between offense and defense last year, but should start at right defensive tackle this year. He is strong and quick, and could contend for All-Conference honors.

Stevens, a 215-pound junior, played mostly middle guard last year but will probably stay at defensive tackle this fall. Also figuring to see some action are sophomore Andy Guarino, 200, Marty Scheraks, 230 (the squad's place kicker), and junior Ed Sherman, 240.

DOUG FAUCETTE

Bruce Gombar will be the starting middle guard. Injuries forced Fusia to put him at offensive center last year, but this year the 195-pound senior has returned to his old position.

Junior Roger Prefontaine will back Gombar up. A quick 200-pounder, he was one of the most improved lineman on the squad last year. Other middle guards on the team are junior John McLean, 207, and soph Sumner Hersey, 200.

Linebackers Uncertain

Fusia is not yet certain of his linebackers. Sophomore Larry Fortunoff has been switched from fullback to inside linebacker and according to Fusia "seems to have found a home there." The 210-pounder was a high school standout in New York City.

Randy Robinson, a fine defensive end as a sophomore last year, was all set to start at linebacker this year when he developed some back troubles. Whether he'll be ready for the season is a question mark.

The other outside linebacker candidate, Don Porter, has a bad leg, so Fusia is uncertain about the position. He may experiment by placing defensive halfback Don Dotson at linebacker. Whether or not Dotson is too light for the position (185) remains to be seen.

Fusia has no such problems at the important "chief" or "monster" position. Paul Campbell has that all wrapped up. The 185-pound senior did a fine job at that spot last season and according to Fusia is "looking very, very good" in pre-season drills.

THE DEFENSIVE BACKFIELD

Sophomore Duo To Join McArdle

Despite the graduation of All-Conference safety Dave Giarla, this year's Redmen defensive backfield appears set, with a couple of surprises.

No surprise is right cornerback Mike McArdle. Mike intercepted five passes last year, including one for a 50-yard touchdown aaginst UConn. The 6', 185-pound junior excels at pass coverage.

Sophomore Joe Colosi, 5'9, 175 will start at left cornerback. He saw plenty of action with the freshman squad last year. With some experience, the Niagara Falls, N.Y. native should develop into a fine deep back.

Perhaps the biggest surprise on the team is Steve Rogers. He was punting for the UMass frosh last year when an injury put him in a cast for most of the year. He couldn't even try out for spring practice because of the injury.

But Rogers has recovered nicely and his pre-season performance has won the safety position for him.

Several other defensive backs could help out. Dave Driscoll was all set to start at cornerback when he chipped a bone in his shoulder. When the sophomore returns to the lineup, he should help.

Sophomore Steve Parnell, who played halfback on offense for the frosh last year, junior Frank Tavolacci, and sophs Dennis Gray and Tom Brennan all could see action in the secondary.

UMASS PRESIDENT JOHN LEDERLE and Dean of Students William Field meet with a new student to the campus and introduce her to University life.

Authority In Field Of Marketing Named Dean of School of Business

Dr. Wendell R. Smith, President of the Marketing Science Institute and one of the country's leading authorities in the field of marketing, has been appointed Dean of the University of Massachusetts School of Business, it was announced yesterday by UMass Provost Oswald Tippo.

Over the past 30 years, Dr. Smith has won a national reputation in his specialty not only as an educator but as a corporation executive, consultant, government administrator, lecturer and author.

He will assume in January, 1968 a post left vacant by the retirement of Dr. Himy B. Kirshen, Dean of the UMass School of Business since 1957.

Dr. Smith has been on leave as a professor of marketing at the Wharton Schol of Finance and Commerce of the University of Pennsylvania to serve as president of the Marketing Science Institute in Philadelphia.

DR. WENDELL R. SMITH

Supported by 50 major business firms, the institute since 1968 has been a research foundation formed to develop marketing as a science and to promote the use of science and research in the solving of marketing problems.

Dr. Smith was named chairman of the new National Marketing Advisory Committee of the U.S. Department of Commerce last May by President Lyndon B. Johnson. In this post he heads a 56-member group of marketing experts from business and universities whose function is to advise the Commerce Department on the role of the marketing industry in the nation's economy.

An Iowa native, Dr. Smith holds B.S.C., M.A., and Ph.D. degrees from the State University of Iowa. He was a faculty member there from 1935 to 1954, with the exception of two years during World War II, when he was in federal government service for the Office of Price Administration and as an armed services academic instructor.

When he left Iowa in 1954, he was professor and head of the marketing department at the university's College of Commerce. He became director of research for the marketing consulting firm of Alderson and Sessions, later becoming a partner and vice-president of Alderson and Session's successor, Alderson Associates.

In 1959 Dr. Smith went to the corporate staff of the Radio Corporation of America as director of marketing research and development. A year later he was named RCA corporate staff vice-president of marketing development, a post he held until joining the Wharton School and the Marketing Science Institute in 1962.

He was a national director and vice-president of the American Marketing Association and served as the group's national president in 1958-59. He is also active in the American Economics Association, the National Distribution Council, the New

Egyptian and Israeli Armed Forces Exchange Fire Across The Suez Canal

Egyptian and Israeli forces fired at each other across the Suez Canal again Tuesday before United Nations truce observers obtained a cease-fire. The Egyptians said their guns chased off two Israeli planes, knocked out five tanks and blew up an ammunition dump.

Both sides admitted the shooting near El Qantara, 25 miles south of Port Said, but gave different accounts of how it started. Cairo radio said two Israeli Mirage jets invaded Egyptian air space and were driven away by antiaircraft fire. Israel said one of its planes was shot at as it blew over Israeli-occupied territory.

The Israeli said they answered with small arms fire and that the Egyptians on the canal's west bank opened up with mortars and artillery. One Israeli soldier was reported wounded.

An Egyptian communique said the shooting lasted 30 minutes and, after a 10-minute lull, "the Israeli side resumed firing and our forces replied" for another 35 minutes.

The communique said Israeli fire hit seven houses and wounded seven civilians on the Egyptian side. It said Egyptian gunners also destroyed three military vehicles and an observation point.

The opposing forces fought a seven-hour artillery and air duel at the southern end of the canal Sept. 4.

In other Middle Eastern developments, Secretary-General U Thant said at the United Nations that Israel had made clear it would pursue steps to annex the Jordanian sector of Jerusalem despite two formal demands by the General Assembly that it not do so. Israeli soldiers seized the sector in the Arab-Israeli war in June.

U Thant was reporting on a two-week visit to Jerusalem by Swiss diplomat Erneste A. Thalmann, his personal envoy.

Egypt's foreign minister, Mahmoud Riad, returned to Cairo from Moscow after seven days of talks on the Middle East situation with Soviet and Yugoslav leaders. Riad disclosed no details of the discussions but said he was carrying messages from Soviet officials and Yugoslav President Tito to President Gamal Abdol Nasser of Egypt.

Hassan Awadalla, deputy premier and interior minister of Sudan, said his government would resume diplomatic relations with the United States on condition that the 26-man U.S. diplomatic staff in Khartoum be reduced to the size of the seven-man Sudanese staff in Washington.

Sudan and some other Arab nations broke relations with the United States and Britain after Egypt accused the two Western Countries of helping Israel in the war.

$25 Interest Free Loans Now Available for Textbooks

The Student Senate has announced its plans to offer text-book loans to undergraduate students once again this year. The loans are interest free and can go up to $25 per student.

The Senate Loan plan was instituted last year to alleviate the problem of rising text-book costs.

The Senate hoped to create a fund that would allow students to purchase needed books on time for their opening classes without having to go through miles of red tape for the small loan usually needed to complete book purchases.

Students who are in need of such a loan can apply at the RSO office on the second floor of the Student Union from September 13-20. Application forms are filled out in the RSO office and left there when completed.

The application will be reviewed the same day, and the student will receive his acceptance or rejection the day after the application. Loans must be repayed within 30 days or action is taken to enforce payment. There is no charge for the Senate's service.

Administrative Reorganization Of Residence Halls Announced

Final implementation of the administrative reorganization and staffing of residence halls at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst, was recently announced by Dr. William F. Field, Dean of Students. The reorganization consolidates all phases of residence halls under the Associate Dean of Students, Dr. Mark G. Noffsinger.

"The primary purpose of this new program," Dr. Field stated, "is to augment the residence hall staff and to develop direct liaison with students in the campus residence areas. This will provide more opportunities for counseling and program resource contacts for the more than 10,000 students housed in the University's 49 residence units, and avoid the 'depersonalization' effect that some students experience on large campuses. Further, it will provide a centralized source of administrative contact in the residence areas which will eliminate the need for students to deal with a number of offices throughout the campus."

Under this reorganization, the residence units have been divided into three administrative groupings—Northeast (including Orchard Hill Residential College); Central; and Southwest Residential College. Each complex is supervised by an Area Coordinator who plans and directs all administrative activities for the facilities in the given area. Each Area Coordinator supervises the heads of residence and student counselors in the area, serves as an advisor for house officers and committees, provides group and individual counseling, and is the students' line of administrative liaison with other University staff.

Richardson Won't Prosecute Confessed Boston Strangler

BOSTON AP—Atty. Gen. Elliot Richardson said Tuesday he will not prosecute Albert DeSalvo, self-confessed Boston strangler, for the slayings of 13 women.

"Such evidence as does exist does not foreclose the possibility that more than one individual was involved. This is the possibility that has to be kept open before the evidence is conclusive," Richardson said.

Richardson said that he was "satisfied that the statements that have been made by DeSlavo would not support an indictment . . ."

But, Richardson said, "there is not enough evidence to proceed against anyone but DeSalvo."

A "Strangler Bureau," set up to review the stranglings of 13 Greater Boston women, has been closed, Richardson said.

"The case can be carried no further," Richardson said.

On Jan. 18 of this year DeSalvo was sentenced to life in prison on sex, assault and robbery charges against four Greater Boston women.

None of the charges against him involved the stranglings of the 13 women.

F. Lee Bailey, DeSalvo's lawyer, has filed an appeal which is due to be heard by the state Supreme Court next month.

New Meal Ticket Available

A new lunch meal ticket is now available for students, staff and faculty.

This meal ticket, good for any week day lunch in any dining commons may be purchased at the central Food Service office in North Commons. The meal ticket charge is $5.25, and is good for five lunches.

This charge is approximately 16% less than paying cash for an individual meal with the Dining Commons according to Joel M. Stoneham, Associate Director of Food Services.

If used daily it would save the user one dollar a week.

Kevin White Holds Lead In Race for Mayor of Boston

BOSTON (AP)—Kevin H. White is in the lead in the race for nomination for mayor of Boston, a voter poll by WNAC-TV showed Tuesday.

The station said that White is No. 1 in the poll with 29 per cent of the straws who say they are committed; Mrs. Louise Day Hicks second with 24 per cent, and Edward J. Logue third with 19 per cent.

All the other seven candidates are far behind the leaders.

But the poll of 856 voters scattered through the city showed that 48 per cent of the voters haven't decided whom they will support.

The city primary will be Sept. 26, with the two leaders to fight it out in the final election in November.

UMass Faculty Members Spend Summer In Germany

Three of the four visiting lecturers participating in an American Studies Seminar in Falkenstein, Germany this summer were members of the University of Massachusetts faculty.

The seminar—Prospects, Disillusionment and Social Change in America Between 1918 and 1936—was sponsored by the Cultural Ministries of the Federal Republic of Germany and West Berlin with the cooperation of the American Embassy.

UMass faculty participating in the seminar were Dr. Marc L. Ratner, associate professor of English, Dr. Mario S. DePillis, assistant professor of history, and Dr. John H. Fenton, Commonwealth professor of government.

Dr. Ratner lectured on the lost America of the 1920's and the hopelessness and protest of the 1930's. Dr. DePillis spoke on a changing social order and Dr. Fenton on politics of government between the wars.

The summer program, in its seventh year, was for postgraduate students who attend lectures and seminars conducted in English. The purpose of the seminar was to supplement the programs of American studies currently offered at German universities.

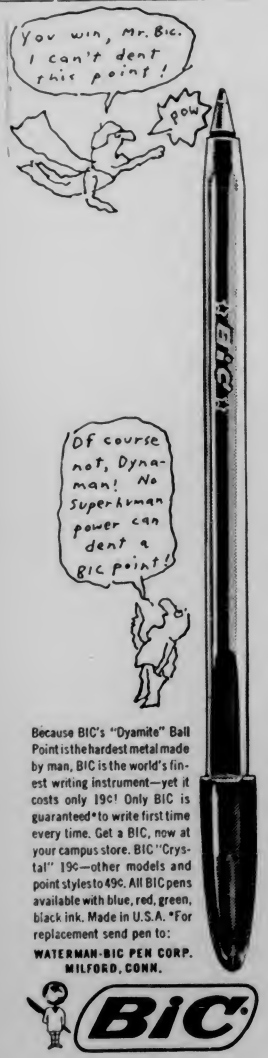
UMass ROTC Cadets Awarded Top Honors



UMass students took top honors at the annual Army ROTC Summer Camp conducted at Fort Devens, Mass. during June and July.

During the weekly competition to select the outstanding cadet of the camp, John F. Judge, Jr., a senior psychology major, was chosen as one of the finalists along with another UMass cadet, Frederick H. Anderson, a senior majoring in Civil Engineering. The final results saw first place going to Anderson and second place to Judge.

Anderson and Judge also topped the field of 1471 cadets at the summer camp by tying for first place in the map reading and compass examination.

The physical fitness test was another topped by a UMass cadet. Alan F. King, a senior animal science major, achieved a score of 497 out of a possible 500 points on the test.

John Lisack, a senior majoring in civil engineering, took second place in the marksmanship program which included firing at distances from 50 to 400 yards with the M-14 rifle.

Some Student Disfavor Recorded With Present Grading System

Some student disfavor has been recorded with the present grading system while no comprehensive polling of students has been undertaken.

At the same time no complete survey of faculty opinion has been made. But one new faculty member's request that the University include +'s and —'s among the grades has led to action of a sort.

Last May the dean of the College of Arts and Sciences presented a motion before the Faculty Senate requesting the Board of Admissions and Records to present a revised grading system with finer distinctions among the passing grades.

He presented his motion on the grounds that if a poll of the College showed the faculty favoring a finer grading system, "the Faculty Senate would doubtless vote for such a change."

Previously, a poll found only a small fraction of the faculty in the College favoring a change. But with the addition of new faculty members and the three years which have elapsed between them, the second set of polls (last May) showed:

That with 70% of the Arts and Sciences faculty responding 37% favored the present grading system and 63% favored a modification.

That "with about half the College faculty voting there was approximately a four to three vote for the revised grading system."

The particular revised plan for assigning quality point equivalents favored most added .3 for A+ and substracted .3 for A—.

The result is that the issue has been turned over for study and that a report is due no later than February 15, 1968.

While the Faculty Senate did not deal with the issue itself last May, it passed the motion only after watering it down. The original motion asked for a definite new revised grading plan reported by November 1967.

The final motion was "to review the present grading system with the objective of determining whether a revised grading system incorporating a larger number of grades would be in the best interests of the University."

It was also noted at the Senate meeting by Dean of Admissions William Tunis that in 1966 the Board of Admissions and Records recommended no changes in the grading system.

The unanswered question is whether the Board will reverse itself at the request of a substantial number of Arts and Sciences faculty.

40 Black Power Advocates March On St. Louis Cops

EAST ST. LOUIS, Ill. (AP) — about 40 young Negro men and women chanting Black Power slogans attempted to march on East St. Louis police headquarters Tuesday demanding the release of prisoners arrested in two nights of disorder, fires, looting, vandalism and violence.

Fifteen persons were arrested Sunday night in the early hours of a wave of disorder that followed an appearance by Black Power advocate H. Rap Brown.

Another 35 were picked up early Tuesday outside a drug store and grocery store that were looted.

Police dispersed protesters Tuesday as they marched from City Hall to the police station. The group had waited for about an hour to talk with Mayor Alvin G. Fields.

U.S. Planes Hit New Targets in North Vietnam

By LEWIS B. SIMONS

SAIGON (AP)—Warplanes have hit four hitherto untouched major targets in Haiphong in the closest strike yet to the center of North Vietnam's important port, the U.S. Command reported Tuesday.

Pilots said they wrought heavy damage.

This was part of a relentless air assault designed to tighten a noose around ports and supply lines that feed Hanoi's economy and support North Vietnamese soldiers in South Vietnam. Haiphong was hammered Monday, a day after the first U.S. raid on the port of Cam Pha to the northeast.

U.S. Navy planes flew within four-fifths of a mile of Haiphong's center and bombed a main highway bridge. Within two miles of the heart of the port, other Navy planes struck a railway bridge, a mile-long rail yard and a large warehouse area of 13 buildings.

Aground, severe fighting broke out in the northern war zone of South Vietnam, centering on the area of Tam Ky, 35 miles south of the big U.S. Marine base at Da Nang.

Near Tam Ky, U.S. Marines threw back a Viet Cong assault early Tuesday that closed to hand grenade range. The Marines counted 35 enemy dead and took four prisoners. Marine losses were four killed and 22 wounded.

Also south of Da Nang, enemy forces fiercely attacked South Vietnamese troops. The South Vietnamese were said to have suffered heavy losses.

The U.S. Command reported at least 175 Communists in all were killed in the past 24 hours in the five provinces of the northern zone, where constant allied attacks are trying to keep the enemy from mounting an offensive.

U.S. planes flew 110 missions in all over the North Monday. Air Force planes pounded the two rail lines from Hanoi to Red China. Missile sites, supply targets and gun positions were attacked southward from Hanoi to the demilitarized zone between North and South Vietnam.

Just north of the zone, a flight of Phantom and Thunderchief jets destroyed a mobile transport carrier for the 37-foot, Soviet SAM missiles. This indicated the missiles, used mainly to defend the Haiphong-Hanoi complex, are being moved south, possibly to fire on the high-flying eight-engine B52s.

The B52s struck suspected North Vietnamese positions inside the demilitarized zone early Tuesday.

Hanoi radio carried a statement by President Ho Chi Minh saying "the U.S. imperialists can never sear us with bombs." In a letter sent to the Viet Cong's National Liberation Front, he vowed the Vietnamese people are ready to keep fighting "until the last American leaves their land."

All students are invited to attend Student Activities Night which will be held Friday evening, September fifteenth, from 8 to 10 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge of the Student Union.

The event, sponsored by the Revelers, is arranged primarily for the purpose of introducing Freshmen to a large number of the diverse organizations and clubs on campus.

Representatives of these organizations will be present to describe their respective purpose and attract any interested students.

Amherst Work Should Speed Study

The present "action" on revising the antiquated grading system of UMass makes one somewhat hopeful.

The pronounced opinion of the College of Arts and Sciences favoring finer distinctions in the grading system can only be a very good omen.

The University, this newspaper believes, should have +'s and —'s added to the four passing grades.

Starting this fall Amherst College switches to a 9 point system with six levels of evaluation for honors work and three other grades, C, D, and F. After a year-long study, considering a wide range of possible alternatives, the Amherst College Committee on Educational Policy presented the 9 point recommendation to the liberal arts college's faculty.

That college made the change to 9 points from 100 points in the interests of being fairer to the student. UMass should also move from its 4 points to an improved system.

Unfortunately, there will have to be a period of study, even longer than recommended by the College of Arts and Sciences. Hopefully, the University will be able to use the research and findings of the Amherst committee which were announced this summer to expedite the new study.

But we now urge the Faculty Senate to vote in February 1968 for finer grade distinctions. Although overdue, perhaps that decision will be made with greater understanding and greater support.

We simply point out that professors liking just the four marks, 1.0, 2.0, 3.0, and 4.0, could still give them under practically any overall system. But a more precise system would offer the opportunity not now afforded of more exact grades for those courses where it would be the normal thing to do and for those professors who believe they can be more exact.

It Doesn't Make Sense

Although the University has begun a plan of a four-year, permanent i.d., upperclass students were still charged $1 on their fall fee bills for an i.d. Under the new plan, a student may keep the i.d. issued to him as a freshman for the rest of his college career. Each year validation stickers or a stamping process will renew the plastic card.

Under the old system, students received a new i.d. each year and were charged $1 a year for it.

Now if a student wants a new identification card, he can get it—by paying a $2 fee. Also if he loses his i.d., it will cost him $2 for another.

Why must students continue to pay their $1 a year fee? According to William H. Richards, an assistant dean of men, the "ideal" situation would be to charge a fee freshman year and not repeat it. He agreed that if less students are issued i.d.'s each year, the costs of the operation should decrease. But Mr. Richards was unable to say when students might not have to pay their yearly fee.

He pointed out that last year the office ran a deficit and money is needed. So the students are charged a fee.

(University staff members, incidentally, pay about $1.25 for their i.d.'s when they are issued and renew them about every four years. Staff members do not pay a yearly fee to cover overhead costs of running the office.)

The increased i.d. fee—for that is what the new plan entails—is just another example of the University keeping its tuition constant and hiking other charges.

Those who pay the bills know they are paying more.

At the present time, a student who decides to keep his freshman i.d. for four years will still pay $1 per year. Does his i.d. cost $4?

It should be possible to have a four year i.d. for no more than $1 or to have new i.d.'s for four years for less than $7.

But an even cheaper method of i.d.'s might be employed here. According to an administrative source, the Polaroid company has an identification card process costing $2,400 for the initial camera investment and about 4¢ apiece for each card.

Each year about 3000 freshmen enter. They pay $1 each . . . upperclassmen pay $1 . . . some upperclassmen pay another $2. It doesn't make sense.

The Allstars

by PAUL ROBERT HALLOCK, Editorial Day Editor

It wasn't a really bad day, no different from yesterday or the day before or even the week before. But he was on edge. There was something bothering him, he didn't know what it was, but there was definitely that gnawing feeling in his stomach. He knew that feeling well. Maybe it was what happened last night. Yes that was probably it. Nothing in particular started it but it sure as hell got started.

That girl, that foolish drunk girl. She was trying so hard to be funny. And John, going there with great expectations of finding another girl to fall in love with for a while. Mike was there too. Mike, with his deep rooted conservativeness and self-consciousness, trying so hard to be noticed and only succeeding in being made fun of. Three people trying so hard to be happy. That is what made me sick, what is gnawing away at my stomach today.

But why should these people be affecting me like this? I've seen them before, in fact they are everywhere you see people. The fakers, the ones who are constantly trying to convince themselves they are happy, can be found everywhere. I'm not downing them because they might actually be the ones who are right. It sure is a hell of a lot easier to live that way. In fact it might be the only way to live, that is live and still maintain some sort of sanity.

Being an idealist is fine so long as you are able to keep your eyes closed to the world, but being an idealist who can see clearly can be real torture. You look, you see, and what you see you don't like. You can't even excuse, excuse people for only being people. Excuse people for wanting to be happy, wanting so much to be happy that they even try to fool themselves into believing in things that they know are phony.

No, that is not what is bothering me either, for I can understand that sort of thing in other people. I can understand it and even feel sorry for them because of it. No, what is really bothering me is that when I see them, it is not really them that I hate but it is myself.

I know better and I still do all the things that they do. Maybe I do it in a little different way, but it is still the same. I hide. I chase. I fool. But I don't believe. I guess that makes me the worst of them all. Doing and not believing in what I am doing.

But may be I'm not the only one. Maybe they don't believe in what they are doing either. That is it. Everyone is playing a game with themselves. Yes, the world is one big team. A team which everyone automatically makes. A team where everyone is a star player, but on which every star is needed in order for it to function properly.

You know, that thought is making me feel better all ready. I think in a couple of hours I'll be all over this little upset. Maybe I'll even go out tonight, something interesting might happen.

Sit Down And Write Lyndon Before Things Get Worse . . .

To the Editor:

While problems of racism/poverty have produced riots thruout the past summer, teacher strikes are now making the news.

The teachers action might be a more vivid example to UMass students, a substantial portion of whom are preparing themselves for teacher certification if not teaching. The thing that is happening is that the different elements in our communities are resorting to acts of semi-lawlessness and extra-legal petitioning.

Students at this University probably are sympathetic to the cause of low-paid teachers. Most of us are not going into teaching for one reason or another but we are influenced in our decisions by the low rate of pay. Of course, it is also true that teachers are striking and protesting in order to obtain a greater say in how their schools are run.

But regardless of our education-profession sympathies and regardless of our liberal feelings toward civil rights, we are too often guilty of failing to recognize the discontent reaction for what it is — an attempt to be heard, a petitioning of public authorities.

We who live in this nice safe community have a responsibility to see that "militant, even aggressive action" as the New York Times called it Monday is not the only way to be heard. The best way to accomplish this goal, I suggest, is to support those faint, suggestive indications of the discontented, so that their problem may be remedied. The next thing to do is to make our normal channels of redress work overtime.

That means, we the public have an obligation to vote intelligently, to write our congressmen, to make our specific complaints at City Hall and insist they be answered. Because if we don't do these things, then "militant, even agressive action" will be the only way to be heard.

Coffee Hour Tonight 6:30

As you by now are well aware, the Massachusetts Collegian is now the Massachusetts Daily Collegian. We of the Collegian staff look upon this forward step as a great challenge. However, this increase in the services of the student press for the benefit of the college community necessitates a larger staff.

There seems, however, to be a misconception on the part of the student body that the Collegian takes 30 hours per week and is open only to superior writers, journalism majors, and masochistic psychopaths. Don't believe it.

The Collegian is open to everyone, and anyone can be a very active member by putting in merely two hours per week. If you want to write, it takes less than two hours to write a news story. If you can't write, it takes on hour to compose (or "makeup") a page. It takes two hours to "copy-read" the stories for the day. It takes two hours to help with general office duties, typing, rewriting, etc. It takes one hour to make up ad dummies. Actually, only one quarter of the Collegian staff does any writing. All that is asked of you is two hours per week.

But you'll probably want to spend more time than two hours in "the office." The AP Wire, the exciting news coming in every hour seem to keep you here a little longer. What is most fascinating, though, are the people you meet in the office. They are not the dorm rats who talk insignificant trivia until the wee hours; neither are they disinvolved bookworms. What they are you will come to realize only by interrelating with them. And this relationship–the friendship and the "espirit de corps"–combined with the knowledge that one is accomplishing something vital, worthwhile, and significant, combine to make the Daily Collegian experience something rewarding.

Tonight at 6:30 there will be a meeting for all

Amherst College Begins Classes

Amherst College welcomed 304 incoming freshmen and 21 new upperclassmen during a week-long orientation program which began Thursday, September 7. Classes began for the entire 1,200-member Amherst student body this morning, following the opening convocation of the 1967-68 academic year last night.

At their opening meeting Thursday evening, new students will be greeted by President Calvin H. Plimpton and Deans Prosser Gifford, Eugene S. Wilson, and Nathaniel Reed. Theodore P. Greene, professor of history, will provide a brief glimpse of College history in his talk, "Piety and Play at Amherst."

Orientation - week activities continue on Friday and Saturday with meetings of students with their academic advisers, foreign-language proficiency tests, and seminars on the summer-reading program, the latter beginning with a talk by John Ratte, assistant professor of history, entitled: "What Can a Man Do?"

Saturday afternoon the Amherst Outing Club will lead a hike to the Quabbin Reservoir. For the less hardy there will also be bus transportation to the Quabbin grounds where the Sphinx honorary and service organization will sponsor a barbecue for members of the faculty and new students.

During the following week, in addition to formal registration for classes, there will be meetings of students concerning their intellectual responsibility under the College's honor system and introductions to various extracurricular activities. The orientation program concludes with a reception at the President's House on Tuesday afternoon, September 12, followed that evening by the opening all-College Convocation.

The Amherst freshman class includes representatives of 35 states and five foreign countries, with the largest number of students coming from New York (71), followed by Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania.

Students from public schools outnumber those from independent schools aproximately three to two. Class rank shows that approximately 80 percent were in the upper one fifth of their graduating classes. The College received a total of 2,141 applications for admission to the Class of 1971.

More Training On Campus Offered to Army Officers

With the increasing number of faculty and student officers in the Army Reserve and the National Guard, the Army has set up a branch of the Advanced officer training program on campus.

The program is designed to alleviate the influx of GI Bill students and the growing number of faculty reservists.

Usually any candidate for advanced officer courses must travel to Springfield, however, the new program is centered in Dickinson Hall, the ROTC building here on campus.

The program is designed for all company grade officers of the Army Reserve and the National Guard who want field ratings. It trains officers with modern weapons and techniques of today's warfare.

Lt. Col. Harold B. Gatslick, Professor of Wood Science and Technology, will be the principal instructor. Col. Gatslick has been in both the Active Army and the Army Reserve for 24 years, and he has taught many of the officer's training programs, to include courses at the Infantry School at Fort Benning, Ga. and the Command and General Staff College at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas.

Local officers attending the program include graduate student Peter Wood and faculty members Major Marian Wray and Captain William Springer.

There are still openings available. Any officers interested in increasing their officer rating should attend this course.

Meetings wil be held evenings at 7:30 on Thursdays in Dickinson Hall beginning September 21. Anyone who is interested in attending the course should contact Col. Gatslick at 545-2191 days or 549-0312 nights.

UMass Student Participates In TI Development Program

DALLAS (Special) — John Correia of the University of Massachusetts is among 126 students from 49 colleges in the United States, Canada and India receiving technical and managerial experience in the annual Summer Development Program at Texas Instruments Incorporated.

A diversified, science-based company, Texas Instruments is headquartered in Dallas, Texas. TI operates electric and metallurgical product plants in 11 countries, and its sales offices and geophysical exploration services extend throughout the free world.

During their stay the Summer Development students work with TI engineers, scientists and business administrators in areas related to their college fields of study.

When they return to college classrooms this fall, three-fourths of the students will be studying toward advanced degrees in fields including mathematics, physics, geology, chemistry, engineering, and business administration.

More than 700 students have participated in the program since it began in the summer of 1959.

The participants are chosen for the program by Texas Instruments, acting on the recommendations of university faculties throughout the country. Considered in the recommendations are the students' leadership abilities, job experience, special achievements, creativity, and extra-curicular activities.

To be eligible students must have completed three years of college, be majoring in a field of interest to TI and have an academic grade average of "B" or better.

Correia wil do graduate work in business management this fall ath the University.

First Come, First Serve

No Priority by Classes on Ducats

By STEVE ROSS
Staff Reporter

Rating right behind the dilemma of procuring World Series tickets these days is the annual September song, "How do I get my football tickets?"

Tickets to UMass home games will be distributed before each game to students who present coupons from the football books that were issued on registration day. Students must also show identification cards.

Beginning Monday, ducats for the Dartmouth game, Sept. 30, will be issued in the Boyden Physical Education Building, Room 255 instead of the cramped quarters outside the regular ticket office in Boyden. Instead of two long lines as was the case last year, there will be a long counter with a half-dozen people issuing tickets.

One change in ticket policy has been announced. Upperclassmen will no longer be given first crack at the tickets.

"Last year," said Robert O'Connell, business manager of the athletic department, "we thought we'd give the upperclass a break and give them priority. However, in a co-ed institution of this size we found that upperclassmen dating freshman women didn't appreciate giving up their priority, and we could sympathize with them.

"The president of the Student Senate suggested that everybody get an equal chance on a first-come-first-serve basis, and this is how we will do it."

Details of the sale of tickets for road games have not yet been decided. Both Boston University (Oct. 28) and Boston College (Nov. 25) will be selling reserved seats to the general public at $4. B.U. will also offer unreserved seats from the 10-yard line to the endline at both ends for $2.50. Those seats are practically at ground level. As a matter of fact, B.U.'s visiting side is only nine rows high and hardly a spectator's delight.

UMass's Alumni Stadium, seating 22,000, is entering its third year as the Redmen's grid showplace. The capacity of the permanent concrete structure is 17,000 with the other 5000 in wooden bleachers on the sidelines and end zones. Top crowd last year was 18,700 for the Homecoming Game against B.U.

Soccer Boss -- 'I'd Hate To Have To Play US'

By TIM MURPHY
Staff Reporter

Larry Briggs is a big man with a tough job. After over 35 rigorous years as varsity soccer coach at UMass, Briggs knows this is not a soccer school.

But each year he builds a formidable unit that manages to hold its own in the Yankee Conference and can get by in extra-conference games.

Last season Briggs' squad rolled up a 6-3-1 overall mark, with a record of 3-1-1 in Conference play. But that was with All-Conference goalie Larry Martin and halfback Manny Leitao.

Filling the gap left in the goal by Martin's graduation would be no problem if Carl Gustafson, Martin's talented understudy, were coming back. Gus, however, decided to sit on the sidelines this fall and his decision has created a candidate-potpourri for the goal.

"I just don't know yet," says Briggs of his goaltending situation. "There's nobody sure."

Tom Malone guarded the strings last season for the frosh and has looked promising in wrokouts. But he's contending with large Elliot Klein, erstwhile thirdbaseman on the baseball team. Klein, who transferred here after two years of junior college, is big but agile and is also after a berth at fullback.

Dave Zucker, another sophomore, has tried his hand at the position. Briggs will have until Oct. 7 to make his choice. The season opens that day at Maine.

"This should be a fair club," Briggs continues, "but what that means I am not dead sure. One thing is sure, though. I'd hate to have to play us."

Us also includes 10 other positions of no little significance. Briggs says he expects 12 more recruits to hit the practice turf by the end of the week, bringing to 46 the total number of aspirants. Briggs, who has seen the long and the short of soccer in his tenure here, says this year's turnout is the largest he has ever seen.

"I am very happy with the number of boys here who want to play soccer and I think that by early October we should have a fairly good team."

Besides Klein at fullback, Co-Captain Dick Hale, Dave Jakinowski and Frank Howard, all veteran's of last year's squad, are back. Here, too, it's too soon to tell as both Bob Maroney and Pete Harvey are pressing the vets for starting positions.

Halfbacks are as plentiful as ROTC demerits for scuffed shoes on Tuesday. Bruce Allen and Phil Bozenhard are back from last year. Joining them are Warren White, Paul Johnson and Marty Magoho, who cut his soccer teeth playing in the bush of Mawali, Africa.

At center Bruce Allen and Marty Smith, both seasoned performers, are joined by newcomer Ralph Miller, a transfer student ineligible last year.

GERRY CELLILLI
Co-captain on wing

The inside positions have Charlie Stacy, Rick Rosoff, Wilkie Ward and Smith competing for the nod, while Co-Captain Gerry Cellilli and Gary Gibbons appear to have the wings sewn-up.

UM-Dartmouth Fray: TV's 'Game-of-Week'

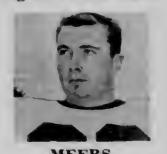
By GLENN BRIERE
Staff Reporter

It's going to be hard for Vic Fusia to replace six of last year's UMass All-Yankee Conference picks who have graduated.

Defensive stars Ed Toner, Dick Qualey, Rod Brooks and Dave Giarla, plus offensive standouts Bill Connor and Bob Detore, all have departed. The other All-Conference nominee is quarterback Greg Landry who made the mythical team last year as a junior.

The first home game of the season, Dartmouth, will be televised by the American Broadcasting Company as one of its regional games-of-the-week. The game will be seen only in Nw England, with WHYN-TV, Channel 40, carrying it locally.

When the Redmen take the field against the Indians on September 30, they will be trying to beat Dartmouth for the first time in 18 games in a series that goes back to 1902. The first game was a scoreless tie, and the Big Green has won the subsequent 17.



Little All-American halfback Bob Mitchell of Vermont has been running in shallow water this summer to improve his one "weak" point: speed. Mitchell, who works as a lifeguard at a beach near Burlington, is trying to build up his legs. If he succeeds, he could surpass last year's record performance. Against New Hampshire last year, he rushed 47 times for 205 yards, tying an NCAA mark.

SWANSON

MORIN

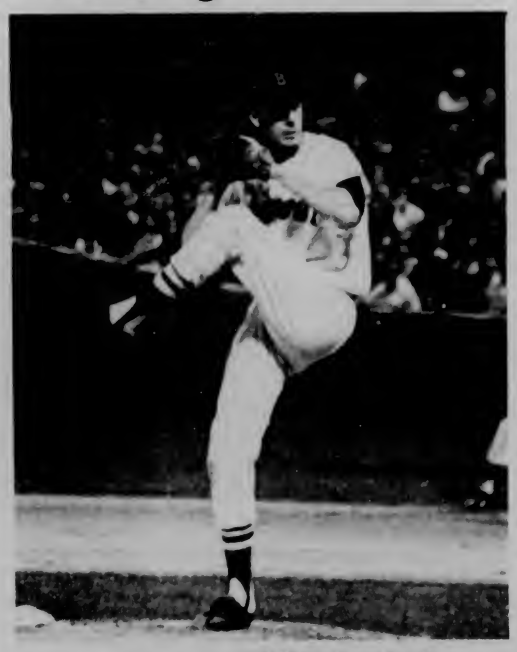
MEERS

QUOTABLE QUOTES: By Bob Clifford, Vermont football coach: "The Yankee Conference is made up of two divisions this year —UMass is one and the rest of us are the other."

Fusia has compiled a record of 40-13-1 in his six years at UMass. That includes a Yankee Conference record of 26-3. And each of the three losses was by a field goal and each cost the Redmen the Conference title.

Fusia plans on using many different offensive formations this year. That includes everything from a multiple-T to an "I" formation. "There's nothing simple about college football," he says.

Milt Morin '65, who starred at tight end last year as a rookie with the Cleveland Browns, is expected to be out of action four to six weeks. His former teammate, Bob Meers, was cut by the San Diego Charges.



Phil Vandersea, with his Super Bowl loot in his pocket was traded by the Green Bay Packers to the fledgling New Orleans Saints and has been working at linebacker and on the kick-off unit.

Two former Redmen are playing with the Boston Patriots. Terry Swanson '66 handles the punting chores, and Ed Toner '67 is a backup man at tackle.

Bosox Regain Tie for Lead in Sizzling AL Race

Lonborg Wins 20th over K.C., 3-1; Twins Bow

BOSTON AP — Pitcher Jim Lonberg socked a tie breaking triple in the eighth inning last night and became the second 20-game winner in the majors as the Boston Red Sox trimmed Kansas City 3-1 and regained a share of the American League lead.

Righthander Jim Lonborg became the first Boston pitcher to win 20 games since Bill Monbouquette in 1963 as he beat the Kansas City A's 3-1 last night at Fenway Park to lift the Bosox into a tie for first place in the American League.

The Red Sox's sixth victory in their last seven starts, sent them into a flat-footed tie for first place with the Minnesota Twins, who lost to Washington 5-4. The third place Detroit Tigers, who beat Baltimore 6-4, trail the leaders by one game.

Boston caught up with Jim "Catfish" Hunter in the eighth after the Kansas City righthander held them to three hits over the first seven innings.

After Hunter fanned Reggie Smith for his 12th strikeout of the game-tying the club record —Mike Ryan singled to center. The A's, expecting Lonborg to bunt, drew their defense in, but the Red Sox's ace crossed them up by lacing the first pitch up the right center field alley, scoring pinch runner Jose Tartabull to break a 1-1 tie.

Lonborg then tallied an insurance run on Mike Andrews' sacrifice fly to center.

Lonborg checked the A's on eight hits and struck out eight in boosting his season record to 20-7 and joining Detroit's Earl Wilson in the 20-victory circle.

The tall right-hander pitched out of several serious jams in the early innings with the aid of four double plays by the Boston infield. He blanked the A's until Bert Campaneris' leadoff homer in the eighth tied the game 1-1.

Smith's solo homer in the fifth —the first hit off Hunter—had given the Red Sox a one-run edge.

Lonborg retired the first three batters he faced, but the A's tested him in each of the next four innings.

In the second, he hit Ramon Webster with a pitch and the fleet rookie raced to third on a single by Jim Gosger. But Sal Bando fanned and Andrews threw out Phil Roof to end the threat.

Campaneris doubled with one out in the third and John Donaldson followed with a single to left, but Carl Yastrzemski's throw to the plate held Camperis at third. Mike Hershberger then struck out, and Campaneris was caught off third on a delayed double steal and tagged out.

Kansas City loaded the bases with none out in the fourth on two singles and a walk, but Bando fouled out and Roof bounced into a double play.

Campaneris' singled in the fifth and stole second before Donaldson walked and Hershberger rapped into another double play.

Fulbright - Hays Scholarship Enters Final Month of Competition

The competition for the Fulbright-Hays scholarship program, which awards grants for foreign study or training in the creative or performing arts to qualified graduates, is entering its final month.

The deadline for filing applications through the Fullbright Program Advisor on this campus is October 20.

The success of UMass in the competition is most encouraging. Two years ago the University boasted four winners and last year had five winners. Those students who were granted awards last year are: Miss Johanna Butler now studying in France; Miss Ruth Reuben, also studying in France; Harvey Liszt, studying in Germany; Carmen Grosse, studying in Germany; and Chester Jablonski also studying in Germany.

IIE conducts competitions for U.S. Government scholarships provided by the Fullbright-Hays Act as part of the educational and cultural exchange program of the U.S. Department of State. Under this program, more than 850 American graduate students will have the opportunity to study in any one of 54 countries. The purpose of the awards is to increase mutual understanding between the people of the U.S. and other countries through the exchange of persons, knowledge and skills.

Candidate's Qualifications

Candidates who wish to apply for an award must be U.S. citizens at the time of application, have a bachelor's degree or its equivalent by the beginning date of the grant and, in most cases, be proficient in the language of the host country. Selections will be made on the basis of academic and/or professional record, the feasibility of the applicant's proposed study plan and personal qualifications. 'Daily Collegian' Coffee Hour Attracts More Than 200 Students

By RICHARD S. KLINE

The largest daily college newspaper in New England may soon also be able to boast of the largest staff of any college paper in the New England area, if the attendance at last nights' coffee hour was any indication.

Upwards of 200 people turned out to meet the editors of the journal and volunteer their services. This exceeds all other turnouts for similar meetings in recent years.

Editor-in-Chief Chet Weinerman, who was extremely enthusiastic over the turnout, felt that "While the turnout was encouraging we can still use more help."

He stressed that "We have a need for hundreds of people to do the thousands of jobs that must be done to put out a quality daily."

"I was extremely pleased with the large turnout, and particularly the number of freshmen," said Daily Collegian Managing Editor Jack Dean.

"It looked as though we might have personnel problems while reorganizing for daily publication, but if all those who came to the meeting last night stay with the paper, we won't have any trouble at all," he continued.

Both Dean and Weinerman emphasized that the Collegian is open to everyone, and anyone can be an active member by putting in merely two hours a week. If you want to write, it takes less than two hours to write a news story.

If you can't write, it takes an hour to compose (or makeup) a page. It takes two hours to copy-ready the stories for the day. It takes two hourrs to help with general office duties, typing, rewriting, etc.

Teacher Strikes Continue To Defy Court Orders

A week-long teachers strike in Broward County, Fla. ended Wednesday, and optimistic notes were sounded in negotiations to settle teacher walkouts that have crippled the giant New York and Detroit school systems.

In Houston, Tex., Providence, R.I. and 18 Michigan counties, school disputes dragged on with no end in sight.

In New York, the teachers' union, while talking hopefully on negotiations, continued to defy the courts.

Working against the ultimatum of a court injunction to reopen schools, Broward County teachers and school board officials accepted a compromise salary offer that would boost starting pay to $5,600. The teachers had asked $5,650 and turned down a school board offer of $5,508.

The county's 90,000 public school youngsters were told to report to class Thursday morning after both sides announced a compromise had been worked out in conference with Circuit Court Judge L. Clayton Nance, who had issued the ultimatum.

In New York, behind the scenes negotiations were reported under way to end a three-day walkout that has disrupted classes for the city's 1.1 million public school youngsters.

At one point, Albert Shanker, president of the striking 49,000 member AFL-CIO United Federation of Teachers, said "something may happen soon."

However, a State Supreme Court justice, after a vain effort at peacemaking, issued a temporary injunction prohibiting a continuation of the strike.

The union ignored another anti-strike order when it

Armed Forces Announce Pilot Shortage

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Air Force, Navy, Army and Marines all have a shortage of pilots-nearly 17,000 in all-and the deficit will continue well into the 1970s, a Senate Armed Services subcommittee reported Wednesday night.

The chief cause is the unexpected airpower demands of the Vietnam war, said Sen. John Stennis, D-Miss., chairman of the group. Another cause given was the lure of higher paying and more comfortable jobs in commercial aviation.

All cockpit requirements at the battle front have been met, Stennis said, but he added this was accomplished by drastic ac-

In East Berlin Prof. Arrested

BERLIN (AP)—Ronald Wiedenhoeft, 30, a Columbia University instructor and graduate student from Wisconsin, has been arrested by Communist authorities in East Berlin on undisclosed charges, U.S. officials said Wednesday.

Wiedenhoeft, a Milwaukeean, has been doing research on Berlin architecture for a Ph.D. degree, his Berlin-born wife, Renata, 24, told newsmen. He went to East Berlin on Sept. 5 and did not return, she said. Communist authorities told her he was being held but refused to say why, she added.

In Washington, a State Department spokesman said he understood Wiedenhoeft had taken photographs of buildings in East Berlin in connection with his studies. Camera users frequently run into trouble with police in Communist countries.

The spokesman said the U.S.

Poll Shows Reagan and Percy As Republican Contenders

BOSTON (AP) — The Christian Science Monitor reported Wednesday that a poll showed Gov. Ronald Reagan of California and Sen. Charles H. Percy of Illinois as the leading contenders for the Republican vice presidential nomination next year.

Godfrey Sperling, Jr. of the Monitor's Washington staff, basing the report on a survey of political leaders in the 50 states, said the choice between the two men likely will depend upon the political coloring of the presidential nominee.

The poll showed Percy would be the choice if the presidential nominee was a conservative like Reagan or former Vice President Richard M. Nixon.

Reagan would be the choice with moderates like Percy, Gov. George Romney of Michigan or Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller of New York.

Percy was favored for vice president in 14 states with 450 delegates and Reagan the choice in 13 states with 298 delegates.

Associated Press Wirephoto

Gov. Ronald Reagan is Sacramento, Calif., yesterday.

But Sperling notes: "The fact that Sen. Percy is being given more mention for the vice presidential spot than Gov. Reagan must be attributed, in large part, to the considerable support being given Reagan for the first spot on the ticket."

U.S. Winning Vietnam War

BOSTON (AP) — Officials in Washington have compiled new figures to show that the United States is winning the war in Vietnam, the Christian Science Monitor reported Wednesday in a copyright article.

The newspaper reported that the Johnson Administration from the President on down "live with a growing amount of information that, they say, leads to conclusions:

"That Hanoi is just hanging on now; that it is losing the fight; that it knows it; and that the allies are visibly closer to their goal of forcing the enemy to turn from war to politics to achieve its goals."

"According to figures never before released," the newspaper said, "the number of people under allied control or influence in South Vietnam has risen from 8 million in December of 1964 to more than 12 million today. This is about 75 per cent of the total population.

"Those under Viet Cong control or influence have fallen from 6.3 million to 4.6 million in the same period."

The Washington officials told the Monitor that their figures are based on information from U.S. military headquarters in Saigon backed up by captured enemy documents.

They quoted one such document as saying the population in Viet Cong "liberated and base areas is decreasing in an alarming manner." Another document was quoted as saying the Communists lost a million men from areas under their control in 1966.

The officials also noted that "enemy weapon losses and the rate of enemy desertions are up. The number of enemy-initiated attacks, battalion size or larger, is down."

"Current Hanoi tactics," the newspaper said, "now appear to be quick strikes near the demilitarized zone and near the Cambodian border, jumping back to the safety of Cambodian or North Vietnamese sanctuaries."

Vietnam War Causes Rise in Employment

WASHINGTON (AP)—The escalation of the Vietnam war created more than one million U.S. jobs in the past two years, the Labor Department said Wednesday in the first such comprehensive report since the war began.

The sharp rise in employment due to the military buildup amounted to some 23 per cent of the total increase of more than four million jobs in the U.S. economy since 1965, the report said.

A further expansion of war work could create shortages of skilled workers of "considerable magnitude," said a companion report.

Defense work now accounts for 5.2 per cent of the nation's total civilian employment, up from 3.9 per cent two years ago.

The report said civilian jobs in defense work rose from about 3 million to 4.1 million the past two years, with sharpest increases in the weapons, aircraft and communications equipment industries.

During the same period, Oliver said, the number of military personnel rose from 2.7 million to 3.4 million.

Thus, the total of civilians and military personnel whose jobs stem from the Vietnam war and other defense commitments totals about 7.5 million Americans-nearly 10 per cent of the total labor force.

The detailed 23-page report was made to the parent Armed Services Committee after secret testimony and months of investigation.

The eight-senator panel said statements by some defense witnesses "failed to face up to the facts and were better calculated to obscure than to inform."

"Veiling and masking the facts and issues has little justification," the report said of this testimony, adding that it was "directed or counseled-and certainly approved-by higher authority."

The senators said some of the classified testimony obscured the pilot shortages behind a screen of semantic and statistical sleight-of-hand."

The caustic report listed these pilot shortages for the current fiscal year which began July 1: Air Force 9,269; Navy 2,430; Army 4,378; Marine Corps 886.

"No one wants our aviation forces to come out of this conflict with a surplus of pilots such as existed after World War II," the report said, but added there was no evidence this would happen "even if the war in Southeast Asia should come to an early end."

A limited number of travel grants is available to supplement maintenance and tuition scholarships granted to American students by universities, private donors and foreign governments.

Countries participating in the full grant program will be: Afghanistan, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belgium - Luxembourg, Bolivia, Brazil, Ceylon, Chile, China (Republic of), Columbia, Costa Rica, Denmark, Ecuador, El Salvador, Finland, France, Germany (Federal Republic of), Greece, Guatemala, Honduras, Iceland, India, Iran, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Korea, Maylasia, Mexico, Nepal, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Pakistan, Paraguay, Peru, the Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Rumania, Spain, Sweden, Thailand, Turkey, United Arab Republic, the United Kingdom, Uruguay, Venezuela, and Yugoslavia.

Travel grants will be available to France, Germany, Israel, Italy, the Netherlands, Sweden, and Turkey.

Because of the growing interest in inter-American studies, there are grants available to a number of countries in the American Republics area in the fields of history, the social sciences, law, the humanities and other suitable fields. All applicants for these grants must be proficient in the spoken language of the country for which they apply, and should have an interest in the knowledge of the American Republics area, specifically in the country or countries for which they are applying. A major in Latin American studies is not required.

Applicants should have a good academic record and should be well informed on the American political and social scene. These grants are provided especially for graduating seniors and graduate students up to and including the M.A. level who are interested in a year of course work in a university in the American Republics area. The grants are not intended to support doctoral dissertations projects. Candidates for these grants may be called for personal interview at university locations throughout the country.

For the grants to the American Republics area, preference is given to single applicants. Although married students may apply for the grants, the awards make no provision for the travel expenses or support of dependents and are thus better suited to single persons.

There will also be opportunities for teaching assistantships in India and Italy for students interested in teaching English as a foreign language; teaching fellowships at universities in Italy for the teaching of the English language and English or American literature; and teaching fellowships at universities in Sweden for the teaching of American literature and /or civilization.

Rockefeller Announces Disinterest In Presidential Nomination

NEW YORK (AP)—Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller of New York says he has passed a psychological turning point in his life and now is totally uninterested in striving for the Republican nomination for president in 1968.

"Something happens in life and you lose ambition because you have a sense of fulfillment," Rockefeller said in an interview. "I have no ambition—no inner drive—to get in this thing again."

He said he considers his reelection as governor in 1966 a "climax" of all his political desires and he repeated the term, "fulfillment," several times during the conversation.

Rockefeller supports Gov. George Romney of Michigan for the GOP nomination.

Last week, Romney drew intense criticism for his statement that he had changed his position on the war in Vietnam because American diplomatic and military officers there had "brainwashed" him.

In the ensuing furor, the Detroit News withdrew its support for Romney's candidacy and said in an editorial:

". . . It is time for George Romney to turn over the wheel of his bandwagon to Nelson Rockefeller who did so much to create it and who, in recent weeks, has been responsible for any forward motion it has achieved."

Similarly, the New York Times praised Rockefeller's record in domestic and foreign affairs and said, "Logically, he would seem to be his party's strongest candidate."

Rockefeller said he was grateful for such expressions but that they in no way change his position. "I'm just not going to be a candidate," he said.

Of the Romney incident, he said:

"It's too earl to tell the effect of this thing. He has taken the offensive. He is bringing home to the American people the importance . . . of knowing all the facts. It's conceivable that he can turn this liability into an asset.

"I will continue to support Romney."

Rockefeller said:

"There are things that happen inside. I'm not a psychiatrist or a psychologist. I can't analyze it for you exactly. But I just don't have the ambition or the need or inner drive, or whatever the word is, to get in again.

"It's not an intellectual thing. I'm not doing this because of any fear or soreness. I achieved a satisfaction in the last gubernatorial election that meant everything to me. I've never been happier or more relaxed or getting more enjoyment or satisfaction out of what I'm doing now."

Politicians and political observers have expressed skepticism at times about Rockefeller's sincerity in saying he will not enter the race.

It has been suggested that he is engaged in an intricate set of political maneuvers designed to win the nomination.

He grinned and said he knew this.

"What I'm doing is too simple," he said. "The press has never understood or believed what I say. They think there must be something complicated behind it, but there isn't."

launched the walkout Monday—and a union leader said this one would be defied also.

In Detroit, negotiators for the city's 11,000 striking teachers and the Board of Education were loking to a two-year contract as a possible solution to the dispute that has kept 300,000 youngsters out of classes since last Wednesday.

But Mary Ellen Riordan, president of the Detroit Federation of Teachers, warned: "Any two-year contract would have to be fair to both sides."

The Inter-Fraternity Council, with the consent of the fraternity presidents, decided last Spring to hold freshman rush during the first semester this year.

The Greek governing body, supporting that decision, recently vetoed an attempt to delay the opening of rush from October 1 to November 1.

A Round Robin will be held this Sunday. And before freshmen men have spent four weeks at UMass, they will be allowed to begin participating in Greek life. Within a short time, the freshmen rushees may become pledges—entitled to fraternity life nearly as active as that of regular brothers.

Unlike the 2.0 cume required last February for second semester rushing, the Class of 1971 faces no minimum cume requirement.

We feel that this action is unwise.

But although the IFC and the brothers have made their decision, one remains to be made. It is up to each individual freshman whether or not he will involve himself in the whirlwind of an active Greek life.

It is up to each freshman to weigh the advice of the upperclassmen he talks to (that of the girls would be good too). It is up to the individual to weigh the urging of fraternities eager to recruit.

Which house to choose is not half so important a question to answer as whether to choose any house.

It is highly unlikely that in four short weeks a new student will be able to explore the extra-curricula life of the University.

He will not have had his first set of Hour Exam grades.

We make a very simple point—you cannot get to know UMass in four weeks.

We recommend that the men of the Class of 1971 examine the facts of fraternity life . . . before they rush into rushing.

Hotel

The hotel concept of the Southwest "high-rise" buildings is acceptable enough to us. The interior design, in fact, brings us pleasantly back to the era of the grandiose old hotels of New York, with th deep blue and green and red carpets, the distinctive lounges, the individual room telephone service, the common toilet.

The rooms fit in with the hotel idea. It is possible to reserve the traditional double-occupancy room, or, upon request, to hire a single room, or, if you are a dignitary of sorts, to secure a suite.

Each of the five twenty-two story buildings is furnished with three public lounges. More private lounges are on each of eighteen other floors. Each public lounge is divided into several areas, by floor-to-ceiling sheets of plate glass, in some cases. There is a main lounge and a TV lounge. There are separate rooms for private gatherings. There is the date nook—an area walled off from the main lounge—two of which are hidden from each public lounge.

The elevators are automatic, though, and we sometimes greet the morning sun with slightly hunched shoulders, feeling, in a way, the absence of "Eleventh floor! Going down!" droned that awakening way.

The lobby is the lifeblood of any hotel, with the elegant entrance, the desk clerk, the tropical plants, the hundreds of mailboxes, the people. At any hour at the day or night we choose, we are welcome to come down from our room, plop ourself in one of the overstuffed chairs, and observe, over our newspaper or magazine, people whom we should like to meet.

The absence of the newspaper-magazine-gum-candy-cigar-cigarette counter, although noticeable to the degree that we notice a letter in our mailbox, is nothing that concerns us. In our otherwise complete hotel, this void exists, we are certain, because the racks for the provisions haven't arrived yet. Much to our immediate fulfillment, though, we regard the vending machines as temporary installments in rooms that were first designed with small cocktail lounges in mind. And, as we are not the person to criticize others for delaying, we can wait.

And while we are waiting for the finishing touches to our hotel, we think of the building as more of an office building—the walls dreary, the people solemn.

A funny thing happened to me on my way to my Botany 101 class.

Yesterday afternoon at 3:35 Mahar Auditorium was filled with hundreds of uneager students waiting to begin a semester of boring lectures and countless insignificant fact, presented in their customary spoonfed manner.

But as the lights softened and music started to float from the speaker system, the dumbfounded class began to sense that this Botany course was to be anything but customary. A young man named Drum casually stepped to center stage, sat down, and amid the background of the movie screen and music, began to talk to the students.

Spurning traditionally dry lectures, Dr. Drum quoted Dylan, took attendance with a camera, urged the institution of a pass-fail system and imparted some philosophical wisdom to the spellbound audience as the loudspeakers softly played selections from Sgt. Peppers Lonely Hearts Club Band.

Unquestionably there will be objections from some administration, parents and faculty. But as Dr. Drum concedes the format of the class is experimental.

"I'm here to open your minds," he announced.

It's about time somebody tried.

". . . and you get one with real brass buttons and everything!"

Campus Comment

The Waiting Game

To the Editor:

This letter is a simple protest concerning the lines at Dining Commons #7. When the University planned to build four new d tories they might have guessed that ere would be a great increase in the number of students using the commons.

Obviously, these students must eat somewhere, but the half-hour wait just to get into the commons is a bit ridiculous. When the colder weather arrives it will be even more so.

We know that a new Dining Commons is being built, but until then must we wait in line a half-hour for the food which is'nt so great anyway?

May I Say . . .

To the Editor:

I don't remember writing "The All-stars," which erupted on the editorial page of Wednesday's Collegian.

I do not use pot or take drugs or acid, so I could not have written it under these conditions. As much as I like to abstain from alcohol, there are exceptions, but I never write under these conditions. I smoke a lot, but that doesn't mean much. My dog Tuesday couldn't have mailed it, for she is home and wouldn't have spent the nickel. I don't think she would have written it anyway. She doesn't like to listen to confessions (she noses her way into her house when people start to talk to her about things she thinks she shouldn't hear) and feels the same way about talking herself. I'm quite certain my parents wouldn't have written it. And if, by some impossible chance, I did write it, I wouldn't have handed it in. I edit my material carefully.

If the editorial I did write is on this page today, it will, to an extent, please me. If it is not, it should appear soon. I hope you will read it.

UM Band Begins New Year Monday

The University of Massachusetts Symphony Band will rehearse for the first time on Monday, September 18 at 4:40 p.m. in Old Chapel auditorium. Students who have not yet auditioned should call the band department, 5-2106, for an appointment.

The Symphany Band is conducted by John A. Jenkins, and by assistant conductor, Larry Weed. The band performs serious, contemporary, and traditional band selections in several campus concerts and throughout the state on its spring tour.

The University of Massachusetts Concert Band, directed by Larry Weed, will hold its first rehearsal on Tuesday, September 19 at 4:40 p.m. in Old Chapel auditorium. No auditions are necessary.

The group gives students with limited time an opportunity to maintain their interest in music by performing a wide repertoire in several concerts on campus in the spring.

Instruments wil be available to students of both bands.

UMass Presents Innovations in Music

This semester the UMass is being presented with a new innovation in musical activity. Membership is now open to all musicians who are interested in participating in a big band jazz workshop.

Skip Spiro, veteran of the New York big band scene and present head of the University Jazz Workshop sees the purpose of this new organization as basically three fold.

"The workshop", Spiro relates, "will provide musicians with an opportunity to learn and swing in the context of old and new forms of big band jazz.

The aggregation will also act as a laboratory for composers and arrangers who wish to experiment and express new musical ideas in this rather unique framework.

Perhaps most important, the workshop will serve to acquaint the campus community and general public at large with another aspect of artistic expression.

The format of the workshop will for the most part, be that of the conventional big band setup. "Most of the charts", explains Spiro, "will swing in the "classical" jazz idiom housed by a reed section, a brass section and a hard working rhythm section.

However, continues Spiro, "I do not wish to confine myself merely to this type of staging at all times. Depending on the charts, I will perhaps incorporate strings and extended percussion sections into my usual big band format. These alterations will allow the band to extend itself and experiment with a myriad of different sounds."

The University Jazz Workshop begins its regular Monday night rehearsal sessions Sept. 18 at the School of Education Auditorium. Rehearsals begin at 7:30. Musicians are encouraged to attend. For additional information, contact Skip Spiro at 253-5920.

Red China Seizes British Consulate

LONDON (AP)—Red China has seized the 116-year-old British consulate in Shanghai and Britain is planning a formal protest.

The Foreign Office said Wednesday night official word of the takeover was received from Peking four days ago.

An immediate protest was filed by the British official who was given the news at the Chinese Foreign Ministry.

Now the British government intends to follow up with a note that will reserve Britain's rights to the property and to compensation.

The seizure, effective Sept. 9, was by the Shanghai Revolutionary Committee. At the time the consulate was unmanned.

Pope Paul Ailing; May Need Surgery

VATICAN (AP)—Pope Paul IV, who will be 70 years old in two weeks, may undergo surgery to correct what a Vatican informant described Wednesday as an enlarged prostate gland. This ailment is not unusual for a man of his age.

The Pope's personal physician and two of Italy's most famous doctors raised the possibility of an operation after an examination Wednesday.

They said the Pope had "improved notably" from an inflammation in the urinary system described as acute cystopyelitis. The doctors also said they were "reserving the possibility of modifying the treatment with surgery to achieve the complete and definitive cure of the august patient."

H. Rap Brown Arrested By Virginia State Police

ALEXANDRIA, Va. (AP)—Black Power firebrand H. Rap Brown was jailed Wednesday as his attorneys temporarily blocked his extradition to Maryland but failed in two bids to keep him free on bond.

Brown was whisked by auto to the Richmond city jail, 100 miles south of Alexandria, by state troopers in what his attorney, Philip J. Hirschkop, called a "legal kidnapping."

Hirschkop said he had been assured by Alexandria authorities Brown would be held at the city jail here but then was told after the switch that officials there felt their facilities and personnel are inadequate for the task.

The transfer to Richmond came after Hirschkop and William M. Kunstler, a New York lawyer also representing Brown, won at least a 20-day delay in Brown's extradition to Cambridge, Md., where he faces two felony charges growing out of a July 24 riot.

Corporation court Judge Franklin P. Backus set Oct. 3 for a hearing here on a writ of habeas corpus by Brown's attorneys seeking to permanently block his extradition on grounds he could not obtain a fair trial in Maryland.

Brown, 23, chairman of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, is charged in Maryland with inciting to riot and inciting to arson. Each carries a maximum penalty of five years in jail and a $10,000 fine.

The rioting in Cambridge, which resulted in the burning of a school and several other buildings, began shortly after Brown addressed a large Negro crowd.

At Richmond, after being processed and dressed in prison khaki, Brown told reporters "I might be in here until I break out. When? I don't disclose my plans to the enemy."

Brown argued that everything connected with the charges against him, his arrest and his incarceration supported his feeling "the black man can't get justice in the United States." He contended the Alexandria court hearing "was a kangaroo court proceeding."

The triumph kept Boston tied with Minnesota for first place in the close American League pennant race. Twins beat Washington, 3-2, Wednesday night.

Petrocelli's two - ou' double broke a 1-1 tie. The drive scored pinch-runner Joe Foy and Ken Harrelson, who received an intentional walk with two out. Reggie Smith's single scored Petrocelli with the third run.

The Red Sox took a 1-0 lead in the fourth, but missed an opportunity to add to their total when George Scott left third base too soon after an outfield fly with one out.

Jerry Adair opened the inning with a single. After Carl Yastrzemski fouled out, Scott singled to center. Adair raced to third and Scott to second on the play. Harrelson drew an intentional walk, filling the bases.

Petrocelli then singled to left, scoring Adair with the game's first run. Reggie Smith followed with a fly to Mike Hershberger in right field and Scott was declared out on an appeal play for leaving third base before the catch was made. The play went from Hershbergesr to catcher Dave Duncan to third baseman Sal Bando.

Two errors by first baseman Scott enabled Kansas City to tie the score in the fifth. Jim Gosger reached first when Scott bobbled his ground ball and Cater's single to left put runners on first and second. After Bando popped out, Scott made a diving stop of Duncan's grounder, but threw wild to first on the single and Gosger raced home.

The A's scored third second run in the ninth when Gesger tripled and came home on Cater's ground out.

Boston threatened in the sixth when Yastrzemski walked and Scott singled putting runners on first and second with none out. However, Diego Segui relieved Bill Stafford and retired the next three batters.

TWINS WIN

WASHINGTON (AP) — Dean Chance came out of the bullpen in the ninth inning Wednesday night and saved a victory for the faltering Jim Kaat as Minnesota beat Washington 3-2 and remained tied for the American League lead.

Kaat had shut the Senators out on six hits through the first eight innings, but singles by Frank Howard and Paul Casanova and a double by Fred Valentine in the ninth cut the Twins' lead to 3-1 with none out.

TIGERS TOO

DETROIT (AP) — Al Kaline smashed three hits including his 24th home run and scored three runs and left-hander Mickey Lolich won his sixth straight game on a five-hitter as the Detroit Tigers beat the Baltimore Orioles 6-1 Wednesday night.

The victory kept the third-place Tigers one game out of the American League lead.

Lolich, 11-12, who lost 10 in a row before beginning his winning streak, struck out eight and had a two-hit shutout going until the Orioles scored on Dave Johnson's double and Sam Bowens' single in the seventh.

FRESH FACES — Among the newcomers to the '67 football squad are from left, Don Dotson, Mark Toner and Larry Fortunoff. Dotson and Fortunoff are offering stiff competition for the linebacker berths, and Toner, who is the brother of Ed, now with the Boston Patriots, is a tackle.

Boston Stadium Inches Onward

The committee voted 8-6 with one member not voting to report the bill to the House.

The committee added a series of amendments which would require leases for 20 years by the Boston Red Sox and Boston Patriots.

Rap Brown Seeks Transfer From Richmond Jail Cell

ALEXANDRIA, Va. (AP) — Fear of assassins was voiced Thursday at a hearing on Black Power advocate H. Rap Brown's request to be returned from Richmond to the Alexandria city jail.

Maj. R. A. Hawes, Alexandria chief of police, said "Mr. Brown is a national figure and he utters a lot of controversial remarks."

"I wouldn't fear mob violence," the chief said, "as much as the act of some paranoid, and we have a great many of them in the Washington area who conceivably want to kill Mr. Brown."

Brown's attorney, Philip Hirschkop, contended Brown's transfer to the penitentiary in Richmond made him "practically inaccessible" and denies him adequate right of counsel.

The assistant attorney for Alexandria, John A. Scariot, asked Commonwealth Judge Franklin P. Backus to direct Brown be held in Richmond until a hearing Oct. 3 on the Negro militant's efforts to avoid extradition to Maryland.

Brown, leader of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, is charged in Maryland with inciting riot and arson following a July 24 speech in Cambridge.

He was jailed Wednesday after he appeared before Judge Backus on a fugitive warrant and was then arrested on the extradition warrant.

Backus ruled he had no authority to set bail and again Thursday denied a defense motion to set bail.

The judge said he would "think it over" and rule Friday or Monday on Brown's request to be returned to Alexandria.

Hirschkop said it is unreasonable for him to have to go 100 miles to Richmond every time he wants to consult with his client.

Soph. Arrested On Dope Charge

A 19 year old University student was arrested in Brett House early yesterday morning on charges of possession of marijuana. Martin C. Tankuns, a sophomore from Braintree, pleaded innocent yesterday morning in Hampshire County District Court and was released on $1000 bail. The case has been continued to September 21.

Campus police were unavailable for comment on the arrest. It was learned by the Daily Collegian that the Administration is currently attempting to set a University policy on disciplinary action to be taken with students charged with drug involvement.

Rep Group Formed In Southwest Complex

A new campus organization has been formed to promote spirit and unity in the Southwest Complex. The twenty-eight members call themselves the Patriots. One of their main purposes is to introduce newcomers to the residential College Program.

The Patriots worked closely with the colleges to make Freshman Week successful. One member was assigned to each house to introduce the freshmen to college life and answer any questions they might have.

A dance, a folk sing, and a field day, all arranged by the Patriots, kicked off the first week to an active start. These events sparked the brother-sister dorm concept, which is one of the residential college's major goals.

Through the points system, the Patriots hope to build cooperation and competition between dorms. According to "Linda" Zinkofsky, one of the Patriots' founders, "By inspiring spirit within the Southwest Complex, and pride for their college, the Patriots believe they are actually achieving a student body proud of its university."

Like the Scrolls, Keys, and Revelers, they have their own jackets which are blue and yellow. The Patriots' purposes and activities, however, sets them apart as a residential college innovation.

Gun Laws Changed

BOSTON (AP) — The Massachusetts Senate gave initial approval Thursday to a bill overhauling state laws on deadly weapons.

The legislation would tighten laws on purchase or sales of guns, and require yearly licenses for civilians to own pistols.

The bill stemmed from the report last March of a special commission studying crime and violence in the state.

Anguilo Transferred To Plymouth Jail

BOSTON (AP) — Under heavy guard, Gennaro J. Anguilo, 48, under indictment on charges of conspiracy to murder and being an accessory before murder, was transferred secretly Thursday night from Boston to the county jail at Plymouth.

Anguilo had been held without bail in the Suffolk County jail, along with three other men indicted with him. The transfer was ordered by Dist. Atty. Garret H. Byrne of Suffolk County.

One of the others, Bernard Zinna, 34, last week was quietly transferred to the Essex County jail in Salem, and the other two, Richard E. DeVincent, 34, and Marino Lepore, 48, still are in the Boston jail.

All are named in the indictment for conspiracy, and in addition, DeVincent, Zinna and Lepore are charged with murder.

The indictments were returned in connection with the death of Rocco DeSeglio, 26, of Newton, a former boxer, whose bullet-riddled body was found in an abandoned car in Topsfield in June of 1966.

Hatch Addition Closed By Heavy Traffic Above

By BOB GORMAN

The new addition UMass Student Union Hatch, the dining area, has been closed for a few days for safety reasons, according to university officials. The dining area, which was open during the end of the summer, was closed because of an overload on the floor above it.

The university bookstore uses the Comonwealth Room and the ballroom, located above the Hatch, at the beginning of each semester for the sale of textbooks required in the numerous courses offered by the university.

This year the increase of students, some 3000 students more than last year, has caused an increase of books. When the university engineers saw the stacks of books they found that the load on the floor was greater than the safety load specified by architects for the dining area.

Therefore, Harold Hugill, director of the university's physical plant, ordered that the books be restacked and spread out over the floor to reduce the load above the Hatch addition. Before the stacks were broken up some were four feet high.

As an added measure, Hugill suggested that the dining area below be closed for a few days. Student Union officials complied with the suggestion. However, university officials were quick to add that the floor had been declared safe by the time students began to flow into the area to purchase books.

Even with these measures the Student Union has found it necessary to close the doors leading into the Commonwealth Room and ballroom at intervals throughout the day. Officials said the doors are closed to prevent overcrowding, to comply with fire laws, and for safety.

As the days go by the students buy their books and the situation returns to normal, a UM official said.

Pentagon and McNamara Agree On Bombing

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pentagon, in its eagerness to show that Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara was not overruled in recent war decisions, has given North Vietnam official word that port facilities of Haiphong are safe from attack at present.

This unusual tipoff on administration thinking followed this week's U.S. raids on the Communist port of Cam Pha and near Haiphong's vital docking facilities.

McNamara only days before had briefed Congress rather elaborately on why North Vietnam's ports need not be struck, saying the Communists would find other ways to get arms southward.

When Cam Pha was hit Monday and Haiphong Tuesday, the immediate assumption arose: President Johnson is paying less attention to McNamara at the moment while favoring the hardline approach of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, who wanted these targets hit.

Adding to this belief, information drawn from communiques administration statements and interviews showed that at least 20 new, major targets have been authorized for attack by the administration since February.

The While House press office felt compelled for the second time in two weeks to say there was "general agreement" among the top civilian and military heads over the conduct of the war.

The Pentagon followed up with its statement, mainly responding to a story that U.S. planes could attack Haiphong port provided Soviet ships weren't damaged.

Said Phil G. Goulding, chief Pentagon spokesman: "Published reports are untrue that approval has been given to bomb the port of Haiphong and its environs have been authorized for attack and have been attacked, some more than a year ago and some more recently. Attacks on the port facilities are not approved."

This declaration was unusual since the administration rarely has given North Vietnam any indication a particular military move might or might not take place.

In addition to the denial, the Pentagon statement also drew a fine distinction to show that, after all, McNamara's opposition to striking the docks was not overridden.

The Haiphong raid was aimed at bridges, a rail yard and supply warehouse, it said. These were hit in an attempt to create a massive port problem and thus slow down the importing of communist war supplies.

Speculation that McNamara's views are becoming less decisive in high administration war planning was based mainly on the Cam Pha attack coming so soon after he downgraded the value of port raids.

McNamara told the Senate preparedness subcommittee in a lengthy statement Aug. 25 that no decision to close Haiphong, Hon Gai and Cam Pha "by whatever means" would prevent "the movement in and through North Vietnam of the essentials to continue their present level of military activity in South Vietnam."

There is reason to believe McNamara has had reservations about expanding the bombing to new targets the past six months. He has said flatly that bombing won't drive Hanoi to bargaining.

He ordered the trial to begin in the California city Nov. 16 before a judge to be designated later.

Romney Gives No Indication of Plans On Present New York Inspection Tour

NEW YORK (AP)—Gov. George Romney has given no indication to his aides of when, or if, he will announce his candidacy for the Republican presidential nomination, a Romney source said Thursday.

The Michigan Republican's dinner meeting Thursday night with New York Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller, one of his chief supporters, was considered important in charting Romney's future course.

The Romney source acknowledged that the Michigan governor has been urged by some of his advisers to speed up the formal announcement of his candidacy.

Romney himself has declined to discuss any politics while on a tour of urban areas coast to coast.

Asked Thursday whether it was true that he was under pressure to speed up his timing, Romney said he would not talk public politics on or off the record.

Romney kept this vow of political silence on arrival in New York City. After giving some praise to California Gov. Ronald Reagan during a brief airport news conference, Romney was asked, "Do you envision a Romney-Reagan ticket?"

"I don't envision anything now but urban problems," retorted Romney.

The Michigan governor spent Wednesday night and much of Thursday inspecting programs in Rochester, N.Y., a city struck by Negro rioting in 1965. Romney praised the progress being made by business and local groups.

He contended that one of the main reasons for his extended trip is to study whether U.S. priorities are in proper balance, such as whether Vietnam is given emphasis at the expense of programs aimed at solving problems in the Negro slums across the country.

The Seniors Might Starve

Along with the IBM card indicating this semester's fees, a description of the University Food Services was sent to parents of students or the students themselves.

In that innoculous Dining Commons letter was the information that UMass seniors will continue to enjoy an exemption from the mandatory meal ticket for a short time only.

Starting in the senior year of the Class of 1971, according to the Associate Director of the Food Services, Joel Stoneham, all students living in University residence halls will be required to buy meal tickets.

The rationale for this change according to the Commons spokesman is that dining on campus is a part of the total University experience. Economic factors, said Stoneham, are not the reason for the new policy although they "could" sustain it later on.

We feel that this is a poor policy to implement because it will deny to seniors and students over 21 the opportunity to choose.

We feel that this is an unnecessary policy to implement because if compulsory dining at SW #7 or #11 is needed "to make" seniors enjoy a full University life, then the job itself is pretty hopeless.

We feel that this question has not been discussed with the students. We feel that this issue should at least be dealt with in the formal organizations representing the students' interests such as the Student Senate, Student Life Committee, and Class Executive Councils.

There are valid points to make in favor of compulsory dining: costs, keeping the Health Services people and parents happy, relieving the burden of the Hatch . . .

But there are valid points to make in opposition to compulsory dining: the current high absentee rate (once quoted at 17%), the quality of mass-produced food, the lines, the length of meal hours . . .

There should be limits to big brotherness, and we suggest that rescinding this policy would be good for the soul (and stomach?).

Teachers Deserted Their Posts

In rejecting the demand of the United Federation of Teachers that the city schools be closed until a contract settlement can be reached, State Supreme Court Justice Emilio Nunez has underscored the union's impossible position.

There has never been any justification for the teachers' walkout; consequently there can be no excuse for the closing of the schools, either by the Board of Education or by the courts.

While it is clear that the teachers' desertion has interrupted education—totally for some children and partially for most of the rest—this could not condone the unconditional surrender of the school authorities and the abdication of their duties.

Based on the union's past action in rejecting the favorable terms recommended by the mediation panel and accepted by the Board, there is no reason to believe that further negotiations would take a more fruitful turn if the Board first acceded to the blackmail terms of closing up shop first.

The court, apparently in support of this view, today will order the teachers back to work. This is the proper course. It is unthinkable that teachers will continue to defy the law and desert their vital posts. It would be a sorry lesson for the community and, above all, the children, were the union to force the city to carry out the law and treat the teachers of this city as common lawbreakers.

Greeks
It's For You To Decide

TO THE CLASS OF 1967 AND UPPERCLASSMEN: FROM: THE UNIVERSITY GREEKS

We are all beginning another year which will see many successes and setbacks for all of us individually and as groups, which will stem largely from the decisions that we make concerning our courses as students in this University.

The Greek system at the University would like to extend its best wishes and hopes to the entire student body for an extremely successful and well-rounded year.

At this time we would also like to extend an invitation to every man on this campus to make just one [decision] but we feel a major one, of the many decisions he will be called upon to make during the course of his stay in this University.

Will he be a Greek? Many of the upperclassmen who read this may smile and say never, while you, members of the class of '71 have only a vague idea of what a Greek is and, like all new members of a strange community, will be eager to explore every house.

The men of the Greek system are offering you the opportunity to get to know us as individuals and not just as figures in the blue jackets with strange letters, that you see in the Union or pass going to class.

We urge all of you to take advantage of this opportunity as it is the only way you will ever truly understand what it means to be Greek and know the bonds of brotherhood.

On Sunday, September 17, 1967 the Greek system will have its annual open house Round Robin, which is a tour conducted by the University Guide Service, Argon, a Greek service organization of every fraternity on campus. We sponsor this tour in order that you will be able to see every house on campus. A task that would be difficult if attempted individually.

Round Robins will begin at 1:30 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium with a brief convocation which is then followed by the bus tour. Round Robins are for all freshmen and upperclassmen interested in rush.

Fraternity rush for Upperclassmen will begin at 12 noon on Sept 18 and at 12 noon Oct. 1st for freshmen. We again wish you all the best of luck in the coming year and we hope to see many of you this Sunday

Ode To An ID

To the Editor

I realize that the mess I'm in is partly my own fault. I made the initial mistake; I withdrew from the University (of course handing in my ID) and then changed my mind over the summer.

Now, I know that changing one's mind in a bureaucracy is inevitably a complicated business. I was prepared for all those muddled, apologetic little episodes at the Registrar's office, the Housing office, and the Scheduling office. I did not expect to breeze through on a red carpet during my lunch hour.

But I did arrive on campus with the naive expectation that I would be able, with a little effort, to recover my ID card so that I could use the library, cash checks, and eat.

But now I find to my horror, that the ID office will not exist until more than a week after registration, and that there is no other possible source of even a temporary ID.

I know it's hard to keep bureaucratic machinery well-oiled for 15,000 students, and I know that moving to a new administration building unsettles things for a while.

But simple human compassion calls for some way, somewhere, for lost souls to obtain official identification before they either waste away from malnutrition while their money lies useless in the bank, or suffer nervous collapse as a result of wandering about unable to prove who they are.

Black Power Advocates Arrested In New York School Incident

NEW YORK (AP)—A group described as Black Power advocates trapped a top school official in his office Thursday night, demanding a part in negotiations under way in New York City's teachers' strike.

Police broke up a melee, rescued Acting School Supt. Nathan Brown and seized six men and five women for questioning. All were Negroes.

It was the most serious incident of violence in a four-day strike of teachers in the city's 1.1-million-pupil public school system. Considerable Negro hostility has been engendered by the walkout.

Brown was heading Board of Education negotiations in the absence of School Supt. Bernard E. Donovan.

FRESHMEN HEAR ADVICE ON UNIVERSITY COURSES

Freshmen in School & College meetings last Friday heard talks by their respective Deans and in six sessions heard student speakers as well. Sophomore members of Alpha Lambda Delta, women's scholastic honor society, offered study hints and suggestions for getting off to a good start in university courses.

Linda Gibbs spoke at the College of Arts & Science meeting, Kathleen Donovan, College of Agriculture, Irene Karakla at School of Education, Dale Cashman, School of Business, Jean Sandstrom at School of Nursing, and Gail Geiver at School of Home Economics.

Miss Bonny Waye, alumna, class of '62, and a charter member of Alpha Lambda Delta, was a special speaker at the School of Home Economics Convocation. She has served as a Nutritionist in the Peace Corps in Guatamela and on the staff of the Training Center in Puerto Rico. Since then she earned a Masters degree from Cornell University where she held a full Fellowship from the Ford Foundation.

This fall she is on the staff at the University of Kentucky to train a Peace Corps group for a Family Planning project in India and then will go to East Pakistan as a nutritionist and teacher under the Ford Foundation.

Miss Waye had not been in Amherst since her graduation five years ago and was very excited about the new buildings and new developments such as residential college. She knows the need for trained nutritionists and was much impressed with the growth of the School of Home Economics.

An excellent flutist, Bonny was a member of the band but was very disappointed that the University at that time, had no orchestra. She was a "promoter" for the Music Dept. and was glad to learn of their recent achievement.

After the Freshman meetings Miss Bonny Waye was a special guest at lunch with the Alpha Lambda Delta speakers at the Home of Miss Helen Curtis, Dean of Women.

Pres. Johnson Lashes Out At Leaders of City Violence

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP)—Leaders of violence in the nation's cities were lashed by President Johnson Thursday as wretched vulgar men who posed as spokesmen for the underprivileged and capitalized on the real grievances of the suffering people.

Johnson flew to Kansas City to speak to a meeting of several hundred police chiefs and challenge them to redeem the faith of the poor in the law.

He also worked in a brief, private meeting with former President Harry S. Truman.

"What America needs is not more hand-wringing about crime in the streets, Johnson told the International Association of Chiefs of Police. "America needs a policy for action against crime in the streets."

The police chiefs broke into the President's speech with hearty applause when he asserted:

"Much can explain—but nothing can justify — the riots of 1967."

Johnson declared one way to redeem faith in the law among the urban poor is to "make certain that law enforcement is fair and effective—that protection is afforded every family, no matter where they live—that justice is swift and blind to religion, color and status."

The President urged the police chiefs to suport congressional action on the administration's proposed Safe Streets and Crime Control Act. He described the measure as a tool for crime research, raising police salaries and providing better training.

Passage of a federal statute controlling sale of guns also was supported by the President, who said it's adoption "would plug up one more loophole to save your life, or mine, or the life of some innocent child down the street."

Johnson added he does not believe the nation's moral standards are crumbling.

"The responsibility of this nation has shown, in meeting its human obligations at home and abroad, convinces me that America is morally strong today," he said.

Red China's Army Splits

TOKYO (AP)—Red China's official People's Daily declared Thursday it would be necessary "to move a mighty army into action" to gain victory over President Liu Shao-chi and his supporters.

The newspaper did not say whether this meant military force against the supporters of Liu, who have held out in most parts of the country through more than a year of the power struggle.

Probably, it meant an army of supporters of party Chairman Mao-Tse-tung, for the newspapers emphasized the need to "vigorously promote the revolutionary great alliance."

The loyalty of the army is in doubt. The army in various parts of the country is reported split over whether to support Mao, his foes or to remain neutral.

Earlier in the day, Shanghai radio in a Chinese-language broadcast designed for home consumption demanded an end to what it called spreading anarchy in the army.

Radio Peking broadcast the People's Daily article, which called for mass struggle "against the handful of persons in authority, headed by China's Khrushchev Liu, taking the capitalist road."

The newspaper conceded splits exist among Maoists themselves and called on the factions to patch up their differences. It blamed the splits on Liu's followers who have "hood-winked, misled and manipulated" Maoists organizations.

From Hong Kong came reports that army units loyal to Mao were trying to get trains running again after serious disruptions caused by fighting between rival factions.

Labor Relations Center Receives Federal Grant

Two years of helping labor solve its own problems has brought the University of Massachusetts Labor Relations and Research Center to a new role of helping those in the labor movement to solve the problems of others.

Beginning this fall under a $287,766 grant from the Office of Economic Opportunity (OEO), is a New England-wide program to train one hundred and fifty key trade unionists to take part in the war against poverty within their own unions or as members of community action agencies.

A second federal grant of $43,931 has been awarded the center to support a new phase of a project begun last year. The grant, from the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare, extends for another six months the original one-year program, designed to enlist the skills and experience of organized labor to fight youth delinquency.

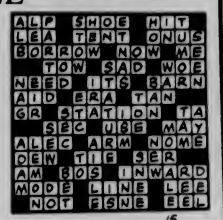
In the planning stages, according to Prof. Ben B. Seligman, Labor Center director, is a project designed to help the elderly meet the problems of retirement. "We would take union members on the verge of retirement and give them training sessions on health, community affairs, housing and other concerns of the elderly," Prof. Seligman said. The aim would be to help them meet their problems and how to usefully spend their time.

The OEO project will begin training its 150 unionists at a one-week session this fall to brief them on the extent and causes of poverty and the anti-poverty legislation and programs. Later will come three linked two-day training sessions dealing with special problems and programs in each state, a second week of resident training, and at the end of the year, a final three-day conference focusing on future action.

Trainees, chosen from a million union members in 3000 New England locals, will not necessarily be union leaders but they will be "union activities," in the words of William Kemsley, director of the project. He has spent over 30 years in the U.S. and international labor movement and heads a staff recruited from the ranks of labor.

Opposition Forms Alliance Against New Government

In Saigon, the six defeated presidential candidates issued a statement saying they had formed a "militant democratic opposition front" against the new government of Chief of State Nguyen Van Thieu and Premier Nguyen Cao Ky.



The six polled a total of 1,864,000 votes in the presidential election Sept. 10, about 200,000 more than the winning military ticket of Thieu for president and Ky for vice president.

They all had previously charged the election was rigged. Their statement said: "We solemnly denounce the oppressive and corrupt practices of this government."

The front is headed by Truong Dinh Dzu, the peace candidate who finished second to the Thieu-Ky ticket.

Harvard To Test Young Redmen In Scrimmage

UMass Travels To Cambridge

By MIKE CURRAN
Staff Reporter

After four weeks of drills and inter-squad games, the Redmen taste their first year competition in a full scrimmage against Harvard tomorrow at Harvard Stadium at 1:30 p.m.

Harvard, tabbed one of the Ivy League's top teams, finished in a triple tie for the title last season and compiled an excellent overall record of 8-1.

has a nucleus of 15 outstanding has a nucleus of 15 outstanding lettermen, a large group of talented reserves and a wealth of excellent sophomores. Most experts give the Crimson an even shot at the title

The offense, minus Bobby Leo and Tom Choquette, stands to be somewhat weaker than that of a year ago, when Harvard was first in the nation in rushing, averaging 269 yards on the ground each game.

Shifty Vic Gatto, who gained 556 yards last year, will of course start in the backfield, along with quarterback Rick Zimmerman, halfback Will Stargel and fullback Gary Strandemo.

Ends Carter Lord and Joe Cook give the Crimson a solid receiving tandem, and guard Al Bersin and tackle Bob Brooks are topnotch holdovers in the offensive line. Tommy Lee Jones, Chris Burns, Dan Wilson, Fulvco Gentile, Tom Weiss Ted Skowronski and sophomores Dick Berne and Tob Teske are fighting for the other three line positions.

Six defensive starters have returned, including All-Ivy linebacker Don Chiofaro. Middle guard Stan Greenidge, end Bob Hoffman, cornerback Bill Cobb and safeties John Tyson and Tom Williamson are the other veterans.

The Crimson's top soph, Fritz Reed, will probably start at end, while Joe DeBettencourt, Jim Hughes, Bob Panoff and Steve Zebal battle it out for the tackle positions. John Emery could be one of the linebackers.

With a large number of sophs in the running, the remaining positions are still up in the air.

Harvard has the experience and depth to give the Redmen a rough afternoon. It should be an interesting match between the Crimson's rugged vets and the Redmen's precocious sophs.

UMass Coach Vic Fusia may hesitate to employ the new formations and plays the team has been practicing, although the scrimmage is closed to the public.

The two teams, who last met in the regular season in 1963, have scrimmaged the last two years. The Redmen won in '65, 20-13, and last year's battle resulted in a 7-7 deadlock.

Quarterback Greg Landry was the star of the day for the Redmen in the tie game, connecting on 13 of 18 passes and hitting Nick Warnock for the only UMass score. A deflected pass that was caught by the now departed Leo produced Harvard's touchdown.

The Redmen may have the best kicking and punting they've had in some time this year. Soph George Andersen is earning a "can't miss" tag as extra-point kicker, and Marty Scheralis, a hugh soccer-style kicker, can split the uprights from afar.

Scheralis and Andersen may become a long-short field goal team.

Tackle Ed Sherman has been booming mammoth belts on kickoffs in recent practices.

UMass plays only four home games this season, the "off" year in a nine-game schedule. Next season, the Holy Cross series will be resumed, to even the home and away games.

INTRAMURALS

Smashers To Defend Campus Football Title

Adams Smashers will be defending their campus championship in touch football program, which kicks off the new intramural season Sept. 25.

Last year the Smashers took the measure of Sigma Phi Epsilon, fraternity kingpin, and Hampshire Hardnoses independent champ, in post season play. But the competition is expected to be tougher than ever this year.

Ted Schmitt, intramural director, has announced that fraternity rosters are due Sept. 18, and dormitory and independent rosters are due Sept. 20.

Besides the regular trophies to the campus, frat, dorm and independent champions, awards will be given this year for best team offense and defense, leading scorer and passer and best pass rusher. All-Star selections in each division will of course be announced after the season.

A singles tennis tournament will commerce Sept. 28 on the courts near the Boyden Building. Ed Goltz of Alpha Epsilon Phi and Warren Kahn, independent, will defend their division championships.

Trophies will be awarded to dorm, frat and independent champs. Entries close Sept. 21.

One innovation in this year's intramural scene is a "Tug-O-War" tournament. Separate battle will be held to determine dorm, frat and independent champions, and then a campus champion will be determined in the grand finale.

Dates for the elimination tourney will be announced. Team rosters are due in the intramurals office, Room 215, Boyden Building, by Sept. 21.

Southern Cal. vs. Wash. Features College Kickoff

South California, ranked seventh in the preseason Associated Press poll, is a six-point favorite to beat Washington State in one of two major games tonight that kick off the first big weekend of the college football campaign.

The Trojans, 7-3 and the Rose Bowl's Western representatives last season, have come up with another powerhouse led by Mike Hull, a pile-driving fullback and speedy flanker Jim Lawrence.

And if it's what's up front that counts, USC has plenty of strength there, too, including star tackle Ron Yary, linebacker Adrian Young and end Ron Drake.

For Washington State, the game in Los Angeles begins a tough five-game grind. The Cougars, 3-7 last year, follow with tilts aaginst Oklahoma, UCLA, Baylor and Stanford.

Florida State is at Houston in the other major game tonight.

CLUTCHING VICTORY—Two UMass linemen grapple in practice this week. Superb line play is the chief reason that the Redmen have won the Yankee Conference title four out of the past five years.

Two Years Off

The UMass basketball team will play in the 1969 Quaker City Tournament, not this year's 1967 tourney as was erroneously reported in yesterday's Daily Collegian.

The Redmen's tournament action this season will consist of the Pittsburgh Steel Bowl (Duquesne, Pitt, Air Force), and the Connecticut Classic at Storrs (Texas Christian and William and Mary).

Students all over the UM campus are sitting down and taking time out to read the Daily Collegian. The Daily Collegian is but one of the many college newspapers produced in the country.

New Magazine "Spectrum" to Debut By the End of This Coming October

A new campus magazine, Spectrum, born out of the ruins of other UM publications, is expected to make its debut by the end of October, according to editor Fred Pilon.

However, although production is beginning to move along on the magazine, the editors have registered disappointment with the campus reaction to the new magazine and faculty and student apathy toward the infant publication may well cause a stumbling block in the months ahead.

Pilon said the original Spectrum magazine on campus was published two years ago as a means of orienting frosh with aspects of campus life. At the request of the Student Senate the magazine was changed last fall to include more of the vital statistics of U M, phone numbers, regulations, etc.

"Last fall's Spectrum was worthless," Pilon said, "The magazine contained very little original information and was a waste of the student's money."

Last Spring, Pilon established a new organization for Spectrum. The Senate approved its budget request and Spectrum is now scheduled to publish four times a year with a wide open general interest format.

According to Pilon, Spectrum will contain non-fiction pieces, prose, poetry, art, photography, in fact, anything that people are willing to submit. "The sky is the limit as far as the type of material we will accept," Pilon said, noting however, that the usual literary journalistic standards will be applied before final approval.

Although the magazine is slightly behind production schedule, Pilon expects the issue will be out by the first of November. His only disappointment so far has come from the lack of campus response to what he calls "a whole new concept in UM communications media".

Lack of campus support has killed other communications media on campus, according to Pilon, and it could hurt the success of Spectrum.

"The whole idea of the magazine is to provide a media through which the campus can express itself on any subject and display its creative talents. This is not a magazine for our benefit, it is for the benefit of the University community," the editor said.

In order to insure the success of the first issue, Pilon and crew solicited material off-campus. "We are not devulging the contents of the first issue," Pilon said with a grin, "Let's just say that it should be interesting."

According to Pilon, Spectrum editors will be keeping office hours all day Tuesday and Wednesday in the Franklin Room aside of the Student Senate office to sign up new staffers. According to Pilon an art editor and a non-fiction editor are still being sought and positions are open in the area of photography, lay out, advertising, business, copy-editing and general secretarial work.

College Newspapers Increasing In Production Across the Nation

More campus newspapers than commercial dailies are now produced in the United States, according to the first edition of a Directory of the College Student Press in America, appearing this Fall.

"Based on data collected, there are about 2,600 college newspapers of varying sizes and frequencies being published on the 2,000-odd campuses around the country," says Dr. Dario Politella of UMass, who compiled the work.

Industry sources say that the total number of commercial daily newspapers is 1,844.

The 342-page college Directory is published by the National Council of College Publications Advisers. Besides newspapers, the Directory also lists 1,389 yearbooks and 632 magazines produced by students in all of the 50 states, the District of Columbia and Puerto Rico.

Estimates based on available Directory data indicate that the press runs of all student newspapers total more than 6,000,000 copies per issue at an annual cost exceeding $24,000,000.

"Although the listings are not exhaustive, the Directory does represent the most complete compilation now available of data on the college student press," says Dr. Politella.

The Directory lists 1,742 college newspapers from 1,489 campuses. Of this total, 71 newspapers appear daily (three or more times a week). Those that appear more often than weekly total 103; weeklies, 525; monthlies, 197; and 846 appear at other stated intervals.

Data for the Directory was compiled over a two-year period by contact with the more than 2,000 institutions of higher learning listed by the U.S. Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare. Assisting in gathering the data were members of NCCPA.

Listed alphabetically by states and by school names, each entry carries the vital statistics of the location of the school, zip code and enrollment figure. Each section of the Directory provides the name of the publication, the year it was established, physical size of the publication, availability of space to advertisers, frequency of publication, amount of circulation and annual budget.

Also included are the names of the faculty advisers, both business and editorial.

A limited edition of 1,500 copies has been published by NCCPA as a result of the joint effort of Institutional Directories of Lubbock, Tex., and the Univ. Division of the Taylor Publishing Co. of Dallas.

The book will be distributed free of charge to the 500 members of NCCPA. Additional copies will be offered for sale at what Dr. Politella says would be a "modest" price.

"We aren't trying to make big money on this project," he says. "We are more interested in assuring that this vital information can go to those who would make the best use of it to advance the college student press in America.

Dr. Politella is associate professor of journalistic studies at the Amherst campus of UMass.

Class of '69 Holds Exec Meeting To Discuss Winter Carnival Plans

By RICHARD S. KLINE, Daily Collegian News Editor

"This is The year." So with these and a string of other resounding and enthusiastic terms Junior class President Wayne Thomas opened a meeting of the Executive Council of '69 in the Council Chambers room of the Student Union Sunday night.

After a few opening remarks by the class advisor, Mr. Ernest Beale of the Admissions Office, Thomas took the rostrum and drummed up enthusiasm by flatly stating that the juniors were going to, "outclass anything ever seen up here before."

According to plans the Winter Carnival in February will be the main focus of activities, at which time a "really big surprise" is to be revealed.

In connection with the Carni it was announced a 1968 Winter Carnival Planning Conference will be held next Saturday off campus at which time various matters, including the revealing of the so-called surprise, will be brought up.

Among the enthusiastic plans of the junior class are such innovations as the New York City trip in October, 6-7-8, and a

Many Students Partake In Student Activity Night

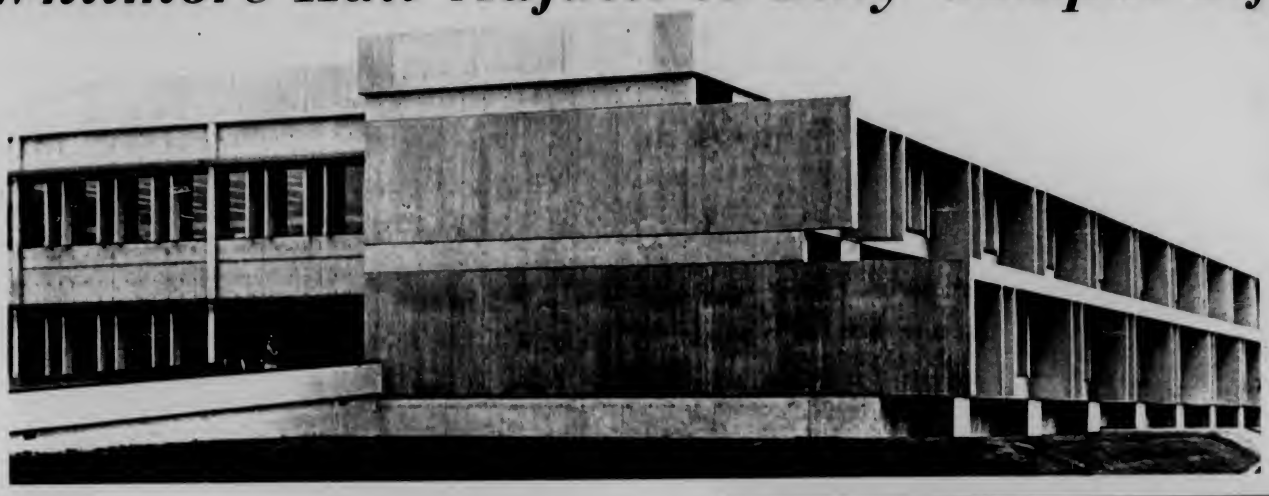
By DANIEL MADDEN, Staff Reporter

The Revelers scored a major success Friday with the enthusiastic reception accorded their Student Activities Night.

This annual event, held in the Cape Cod lounge, is intended to acquaint old and new students with the University's extra-curricular activities. In bringing it off effectively, the Revelers put on the brightest and liveliest performance of any campus service group thus far this term.

While the scope of the activities covered was, to be sure, extensive and nearly all-inclusive, extending from the Newman Club to the Greeks, and from the square dancers up front to the scuba-men in back, it was not the wide spectrum of the groups covered that gave the event its spark.

It was rather the presentation, unfettered by elaborate models and displays of the people of the organizations. W M U A's Bob Sawyer broadcast live from the lounge, the cheerleaders, even though caught in an uncharacteristically still pose, exuded enthusiasm, in a far corner the Greeks displayed their cool and up front the Judo club showed more than muscle and technique.



In making the realization that it is the people of an organization that make it a success and by projecting the activities through their individual members, the Revelers gave a valuable, complete and remarkably real picture of the campus life here in Amherst.

With the war in Vietnam becoming more and more important day by day, a faculty group on peace and war has been created. Above, one of the members of the group speaks to students in front of the Student Union.

Air Force Jets Strike Near Red Chinese Border

SAIGON (AP) — U.S. Air Force jets Sunday struck a highway bridge in North Vietnam only seven miles from the border of Red China. It was the closest raid of the war to China—less than one minute by jet from the frontier.

U.S. military spokesmen said Air Force planes hit the That Khe highway bridge 92 miles northnortheast of Hanoi. Pilots reported they dropped the center span of the bridge.

The closest previous raid to the Red Chinese border was 10 miles from the frontier on Aug. 13 when U.S. warplanes attacked the Lang Son railroad yards and highway bridge.

In other raids Sunday, carrier-based U.S. Navy jets bombed inside Haiphong in the second assault on the North Vietnamese port city in a week.

U.S. headquarters said strike planes attacked a railroad highway bridge one mile from the center of the city and a rail yard 1.7 miles northwest of Haiphong's center. Also hit, headquarters said, was a warehouse area 1.3 miles west of the middle of the city.

U.S. headquarters made no mention of any plane losses. North Vietnam claimed four planes were shot down Sunday, including three in and around Haiphong.

Sunday's raids over North Vietnam also included B52 raids in the southern end of the country and fighter-bomber raids in the Hanoi area.

It was the second time in a week that an American force launched an effort to rout Communist guerrillas from positions near Saigon. In a four-day fight that ended Saturday, a combined U.S. Navy and Army force shattered a Viet Cong battalion holding deeply entrenched positions in the swampy Mekong delta 45 miles south of the capital.

Supernatural Experiences Lead Into Psychic World

By Richard S. Kline
Daily Collegian News Editor

Do you feel that you can face things, however improbable as they may seem, with an open mind? Or, do you scoff at anything that does not seem completely logical?

Is the theory of life after death a possibility? Can you face this with an open mind, or would you scoff as so many do?

I am not a firm believer in life after death, nor do I claim to be an expert on the subject. I am not psychic nor am I a frequenter of seances or other such meetings.

I have never seen a ghost and I have never spoken with the dead. I have only had what may be termed a minor supernatural experience, at which you may scoff if you are a sceptic.

A short time ago I had a relative of mine at my house whose father is a well known expert on the subject of life after death. I had never read any of his works on the subject nor was I particularly interested in it. Life after death was to me a possibility, but I was an open minded sceptic on the subject (if such a state of mind is possible).

A number of other people were also in attendance at this particular evening and all were rational and well educated adults. The idea of a seance was mentioned and before you could say poltergeist, I was looking for the necessary materials.

A light wooden table was ordered and we were told that a wooden floor or a board to put on the floor were necessities. The scene was set and the players took their places.

Each person took a place around what was normally a simple dressing table. Our thumbs had to touch and our little fingers had to interlock with the people on either side of us. The lights were turned off and the grayness of streetlights covered the room.

We were told that it was not necessary to remain silent, as that was one of the many illusions about seances. In fact, we were urged to sing. With hands resting lightly on the table, we waited.

We were told if 'it' were to happen, and it didn't happen every time a group met, we would feel the table rise. Here, those who believed the entire thing to be a farse laughed, chuckled or smiled and the rest of us sat there in earnest silence. If the spirit wished to communicate he (or she) would tap one leg of the table. The taps would correspond to the alphabet. One for A, two for B, and so on.

Finally, it happened. The table slowly rose, only about an inch or two, bit it rose. The sceptics claimed that someone was lifting it with their legs. Someone looked—no one was.

The lifting was weak and somehow the table felt different than it normally did. The 'medium', if she could be called that, told us that it must have been a small child attempting to communicate. A small, weak, frail child she said. She called for it to come back, but nothing happened after the table fell from that one minute's rise.

Some people present still didn't believe it. Others were firmly convinced that a spirit was really attempting to communicate. The believers adjourned to another room, intent on repeating the experience. I joined the believers.

Yet, I still wasn't sure. Maybe someone was lifting up the table. There must have been a rational explanation.

The scene was again set. This time all the people believed, and all waited for something to happen. Again the table felt alive. It rose. I was sure I wasn't imagining it. It actually rose. Again someone looked for someone lifting the table. Again, no one was. Again, the table rested on the ground.

We were told that in other seances long messages had been given. In one, a man gave his name and claimed to be in the first graduating class of Amherst College. He had told of various experiences and of other people.

Curious about the possibility of this man actually having lived, someone checked on the first graduating class at the college. Not only was there such a man, but the things that he spoke of actually happened. No one in that room could have known of this man or the intimate details that he related.

We left the room in silence and with a feeling of awe. It had actually happened and we were a part of it. We knew that we had experienced something. But, just what was it? How is it explained.

I felt that table rise. I know I did. I hadn't taken a drink, I was in a normal frame of mind, yet I saw and felt the 'impossible' happen.

I still haven't been able to think of a scientific explanation. I still wonder about life after death. I still wonder about spirits. But, I know that I felt that table rise.

"new kind of activity" at the University.

The New York trip will include staying at the Hotel New Yorker and entertainment by Sid Caesar at the Latin Quarter. Tickets go on sale this week in the Union.

The other event discussed was a plan to mark the first appearance of the University of Massachusetts Redmen football team on regional TV (ABC) against Dartmouth in Alumni Stadium on Saturday, September 30.

Plans call for a grand display of fireworks, confetti, balloons and possibly an aerial display. There will also be an official welcome to the Class of '71 during the game.

It was announced that the Sophomore - Freshman Picnic to take place after the Dartmouth game on the Union lawn will feature Wilson Pickett and the Pezo Seco Singers.

The meeting also revealed a merger of the President's Council as well as the Winter Carnival Cabinet into one to coordinate and facilitate efforts.

Carol Robinson was announced by the class officers as being voted the council's most outstanding member over the summer months.

Getting back to the "surprise." Thomas stated only that it dealt with entertainment for the Winter Carnival and that it would probably bring the campus national coverage. The name is one of the biggest in show business according to council officers.

'Patroits' Attack High Court

At the end of August, the 49th annual convention of the American Legion met in Boston. The veteran's organization passed a number of resolutions including a series on Vietnam, of which the following is typical:

". . . that our military commanders be promptly given whatever men, material, and authority as required to accomplish this end."

The organization also passed three strong statements on rioting, insurrection, and the use of violence.

While everything the convention approved should not offend the so-called liberals, nearly every resolution was an exercise in political value judgment.

The trouble with the American Legion is its holier-than-attitude when it looks at political questions.

The organization recommended that: "Congress restore the constitutional balance of power by initiating corrective legislation after public hearings to ascertain the feasibility of legislation limiting or preempting the authority of the Supreme Court of the United States in one or more of the above specific areas; [Vietnam, law and order, and seditious statements]."

There may be some imbalance in the constitutional division of powers as Senator J. William Fulbright wrote on the Senate's advise and consent role in yesterday's Globe.

But there is no need to limit or preempt the authority of the Supreme Court to the extent that the veterans group recommends. What the Court has done recently and what the Legion apparently disagrees with has been to make real the civil and political liberties of the Constitution, such as freedom of speech.

The Legion, for example, recommends that "Congress enact legislation making seditious statements, uttered while United States Armed Forces are engaged in combat, a federal crime . . ."

The Court, for example, would ask that "seditious statements" be defined in the context of a "clear and present danger." Chances are that the Court's and the Legion's idea of "danger" would differ. The Court would probably allow more leeway to the individual to criticize his government engaged in a war which does not have the benefit of a Congressional declaration of war.

So the Legion says that in the name of America, "Let us preserve our Constitution."

The Legion maybe forgetting the old lesson in history—that constitutions are written to limit government, and governments are divided into three departments so that each may check the others against encroachment upon individual liberties.

Because of its views on specific issues, the American Legion has recommended a major change in the structure of the nation's government in the name of patriotism. Such a practice is sure to weaken the Legion's claim to that virtue.

"The Apathetic Majority"

It's really a sad experience to talk to the average college student. In a time of rapid social changes, many students have no real views on any subject relevant to the world around or even really care what is going on.

The complaint is frequently raised that the individual is being lost in a sea of bureaucracy. He is helpless to decide his own fate or the shape of the world. It's a shame about the riots, the ghettos and social conditions in general.

The government is inefficient or corrupted.

This sentiment is fine, but how many people of the younger generation care enough to get involved in anything in order to change what is wrong or inequatable? Sorry to say very few.

The college student is too busily wrapped up in getting grades or worrying about next weeks football game.

Involvement or commitment doesn't have to be a wild, earth-shaking thing. The individual doesn't have to become involved in drastic social revolution.

Join VISTA, or the PEACE CORPS, write for your college paper or join a political party and campaign actively for a candidate. One can work in a hospital or a ghetto as a volunteer during a summer and help in this way.

The worst part of this problem is that apathetic students become apathetic adults. They eventually acquire a feeling of worthlessness and self-hate. Everyone can shake off this aura of "I don't care" and do something worthwhile. All you have to do is try.

'I had a dream today, o boy'

by PETE WARD
Member, Student Senate Public Relations Committee

Some dreams are so vivid and disturbing that you have to tell people about them, so that's why I'm writing this for all to read. My dream was about YAHOO, the humor magazine of the University.

Now perhaps some of you don't know much about YAHOO, so let me fill you in a bit. YAHOO has been known to do naughty things. For example, expressing opinions, common to many students, about religion and state government in the magazine. Last year, as a result of printing some unpopular views, the Administration put YAHOO out of business, and at the time, many students agreed that a re-evaluation was in order. And this is where my dream comes in.

I dreamt that I was one of the people involved in the problem. In my dream all sorts of strange things happened. First, I was told by the Administration that there was no intention on the part of the University to suppress the students right to free speech and press. Boy, was I relieved, because I assume that we have the right to these freedoms, even if what we say is unpopular.

Then lo and behold, the faculty also was asked by the Administration how they felt, and they too said that YAHOO and any other publication should not be suppressed for printing unpopular truths and opinions. Once again, I was relieved to see the administration acting so responsibly.

Then after weeks of talks and votes, everybody on campus up to the Dean of Students agreed that YAHOO's problems were solved and the free press ideal was safe at UMass Golly, even the Provost said there were only a "few" problems remaining and he was "sure they could be worked out soon", and he was willing to facilitate a speedy decision. I tell you, I just burst with pride at the maturity of the statement.

But then my dream began to change into a nightmare. Cold sweat beaded my brow as the Provost's "few" remaining problems turned out to be nothing short of complete surrender of student-faculty responsibility in the affair. But I did not despair, once again we had meetings and votes and the day finally arrived when the Provost once again said a decision was coming in a matter of days. Oh, the happy feeling I had to know the Administration had not just been stalling the efforts of the students and faculty to save free press at UMass.

Now listen carefully, for here's where I began to get scared. You know how it is when a dream turns into a nightmare, suddenly you feel trapped, and you scream to escape but you can't. Yes, my dream reached the point where the YAHOO issue sat on the Provost's desk with assurances of action before summer was underway.

And this is where my dream has stayed. Each night when I go to sleep, I see YAHOO sitting on the Provost's desk as he draws up a new list of objections that gets wilder all the time. I hear him say he has no constitution for YAHOO and I seem to remember giving him one personally. Now its reached the point when I see YAHOO on his desk even when I'm awake.

Well, that's my dream.

Please somebody help me get YAHOO off the desk.

Among the bags that UMass people are fond of crawling into these days is the one that places the entire blame for the shortcomings of student publications squarely on the shoulders of the editors. The administrators who send memos to the Collegian labled "Page One Please", the faculty who pre-judge a member of their class because of his extracurricular affiliations and the students who mock every literary effort of the "dedicated few" are all in this bag. It's a big bag and like most bags the view out is clouded by pre-conceptions, mis-conceptions and, the old hang up, apathy.

Last spring was a tough time for student publications. Critique editors abandoned a sinking ship, the exclusive writing club called Caesura never even submitted a budget to the Senate and Yahoo almost died of strangulation at the hands of administrative red tape and a staff of questionable competency. At the root of their failure there was one common denominator which had plagued them all from the start — the lack of faculty and student support.

It is obvious how a lack of student manpower cuts down on the quantity of material available for publication. But even more important, the complaints about quality that fly about every year are not the result of poor workmanship by a few, but result from a lack of good, consistent work by many. Creativity, be it in prose or satire, can only be sustained by a few people for so long. Fresh talent and new ideas are constantly needed.

The only encouraging sign that came out of last spring's media melee was the introduction of a new general interest magazine called Spectrum. Spectrum was going to be all things to all men. A wide open magazine that would accept all types of creative work from all aspects of the campus.

Although interest ran high among many students and faculty, that's all it ever amounted to was interest. Already the editors of Spectrum report few campus contributions and the first issue will contain a good deal of material from solicited off-campus.

Maybe UMass writers are too commercial to write for free. Maybe they're too lazy. Or maybe UMass writers can't write at all, they just talk a good short story. Whatever the correct answer, the fact is that students aren't submitting material, faculty aren't encouraging their classroom talent to publish in Spectrum, and the faculty themselves aren't writing anything.

Campus Comment

To the Editor:

Do not be alarmed by the presence of many of the "older-looking" people on campus. You might think that they are your superiors, but read on, and you will discover some astounding statistics.

Of the people that you presently see walking around the campus:

50% Janitors, kitchen workers
25% Construction Men, Campus Police
12½% Slow-packing summer students
12½% Campus visitors

Of the people that you will see in the football stands:

50% Alumni
25% Swingshift freshmen — who want to see what they are missing in the Fall session
12½% Injured players
12½% Yankee Conference scouts

Less than 1/10 of 1% Seniors who bought the booze for all these babbeling idiots

Where are the real upperclassmen?

99 and 44/100% Checking out the freshmen girls at the hatch.
66/100% STUDYING?

GIRLS

55% Shopping in Amherst
40% Trying on what they bought
5% Don't know

Speaking seriously, I say that we must all try to act and be individual and responsible. If we let ourselves be overshadowed by the older-looking people, we will find ourselves missing one important year.

Red Chinese Workers Have Split Over Rift in Communist Party

TOKYO (AP) — Red China acknowledged Sunday that Chinese industrial workers have become seriously split in the struggle between Mao Tse-tung and President Liu Shao-chi and that an attempt is being made also to split the Red army.

The acknowledgement came in an editorial in Red Flag, the theoretical journal of the Chinese Communist party, of which Mao is chairman.

At the same time, the Peking People's Daily and the Liberation Army Daily published calls for military unity behind Mao's effort to overthrow Liu and his followers.

The contents of the editorials in the three Peking publications were broadcast by the official New China News Agency.

Red Flag, although depicting a serious situation, contended that Liu and his followers in refusing to shape up to Mao's so-called Great Cultural Revolution are facing their doom.

The editorial blamed Liu and his supporters for creating the split in the ranks of the workers.

The editorial added that the Liuists are pursuing "a fruitless effort" to undermine and split the Mao leadership as well as the army, "the mainstay of the dictatorship of the proletariat."

The editorials in People's Daily-organ of the Communist party—and the military publication indicated there already may be some kind of split in the 2.5 million-man army.

The call for unity in the army followed a maoist warning Thursday that it will "move a mighty army into action" to oust Liu, presumably to make Mao president.

Junior Class Pres. Thomas Sets Plan For 'New York Happening' Class Trip

By PATT FRANCIS, Staff Reporter

Junior Class President Wayne Thomas recently announced final plans for the Class of 1969 trip to New York City Oct. 6, 7 and 8.

The trip, titled "New York Happening" is currently open to class members only. There is a possibility that it may be opened to the entire University, and an announcement will be made at a later date if the move goes through.

Members of the Junior Class have been planning the trip since last March. Letters were sent to class members during the summer with the announcement.

Several hnudred of the 69ers are expected to make the trip. Thomas emphasized that any number can be accommodated—at the Hotel New Yorker, Manhattan's largest hotel, which is 41 stories high.

Since the New Yorker is on the corner of 34th and 8th streets, near Macy's and Gimbal's, and across the street from Madison Square Garden, those who make the trip are not expected to be at a loss for things to do. The only planned activities, however, are a Sunday banquet brunch in the Hotel's Terrace Room, and Saturday evening at the Latin Quarter, New York's largest night club.

The "Happening" is divided into two separate package plans. One, at a cost of $21.00, includes the cost of two nights at the hotel, round-trip transportation, and the Sunday Brunch. The other includes accommodations, transportation and the brunch, as well as dining, dancing, cocktails, show and tips at the Latin Club, for $31.00. Sid Caesar will be appearing that night at the club.

The Class of 1969 Executive Council is preparing booklets which list discount rates on such activities as NBC tours at reduced rates, yacht cruises, bus tours, some of the better (but lower-priced) restaurants, and other useful hints. The booklet will also note hotel policies regarding liquor and parties in rooms.

Tickets for the trip went on sale Monday, and the sale will continue all week. Room assignments can be chosen at the same time. The only stipulation on the "name your own roommates" is that all three must be of the same sex.

Thomas said that the venture has met with the approval of program advisors, deans, and the unanimous approval of the 1969 Executive Council.

Among guests invited by the Class of 1969 are RSO Business Manager Jerry Scanlon and Class Advisor Ernest Beals of the Admissions Office.

Busses will leave from 2-6 o'clock Friday afternoon. Those who expect to make the trip can sign up for a bus when they buy tickets.

Questioned about the purpose of the trip, Thomas said, "We hope to spark enthusiasm for people to meet each other to have the best Winter Carni ever—as well as to have one heiluva time."

APO to Sponsor Panel Discussion For Both Students and Faculty

A panel discussion on veneral disease in young people, open to all students, faculty, and residents, faculty, and residents in the area, will be held Wednesday, Sept. 20 at 8 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium, University of Massachusetts.

The panel wil be led by Dr. Nicholas Flumara, director of the Division of Communicable Diseases of the state Department of Public Health. A nationally recognized expert on venereal disease, Dr. Fiumara is professor of dermatology and preventive medicine at Boston University Schol of Medicine and clinical associate in dermatology at the Massachusetts General Hospital.

The program is sponsored by the UMass honorary fraternity Alpha Phi Omega, the state Department of Public Health and the University Health Services as a public education service. Since 1959, the rate of increase in venereal disease in the 15 to 25 age group has reached alarming proportions, according to the University Health Services. It is estimated that more than 200,000 cases of infectious venereal disease occur in U.S. teenagers annually.

Dr. William Darity, professor of public health, and Dr. Thomas McBride of the University Health Services will participate in the panel.

Pres. Kennedy is Voted First Place In Recent Russian Student Poll

NEW YORK, Sept. 18 — John F. Kennedy ranks first on the list of Americans most popular with Russian university students, a special poll revealed today.

Results of the poll, conducted this summer among 1,000 university students by the Soviet Novosti Press Agency, were published in a report appearing in the current issue of Look magazine. The Gallup organization conducted a similar poll among 500 U.S. college students.

Both polls, taken for the magazine's special issue on Russia, show that American and Soviet students know surprisingly little about each other's countries.

The Russian students ranked author Ernest Hemingway as their next most popular American, with Mark Twain, Franklin D. Roosevelt, William Faulkner and Louis Armstrong following in that order.

Also, there were a few votes for singers Paul Robeson and Pete Seeger and some for actor Gregory Peck.

When asked to name America's greatest political leaders, Soviet students listed Abraham Lincoln first, JFK second and FDR third.

The poll among Russian students indicated that most of them learn about the United States through the translated works of American authors. More than any other book they could name, the Soviet collegians listed John Steinbeck's Travels With Charley as giving the most comprehensive view of America.

The 500 American students polled by Gallup ranked Russia's cosmonauts as the Soviets they most admire; then came Soviet Premier Alexei Kosygin, Lenin, Dostoevsky, Tolstoy and Vladimir, Nabokov, the author of Lolita (who left Russia in 1919).

Listing their most admired Russian political leaders, U.S. students picked Kosygin number one by a wide margin, this perhaps because he is currently in office. A trickle of votes turned up for Soviet Communist Party chief Leonid Brezhnev and for Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko.

Soviet students listed Judgement at Nuremburg, On the Beach and the old version of War and Peace as their favorite movies. Some 87 percent of the Americans polled had seen no Soviet-made movies at all, and the few who had named Ballad of a Soldier as the best they'd seen.

M.H.C. Greets Class of 1971

The Class of 1971, which arrived at Mount Holyoke yesterday for three days of orientations, numbers 486 students and has been chosen from the largest application list in the history of the College, 2062, a 3½ percent increase in applications over last year.

There are thirteen National Merit Scholars and three National Achievement Scholars in the class. Eighteen students will enter with advanced standing including Miss Amarilis I. Puello of Panama, who is entering under the Latin American Scholarship Program of American Universities.

One fourth of the class, 114 students, was admitted under the Early Decision Plan. The plan of Early Decision, now in its ninth year, has proved very successful at Mount Holyoke. Statistics from the Class of 1970 show that forty percent of the Early Decision candidates placed in the top quarter of their class at the end of their freshman year.

There are thirty-three alumnae daughters in the Class of 1971 and twenty-one Mount Holyoke sisters, 14 of them are still undergraduates.

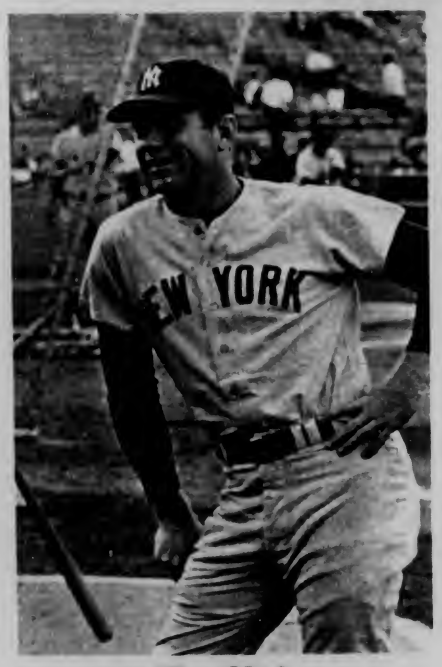
Determination Grips Sox As Flag Race Nears Wire

It is a noted phenomenon in September that as time dwindles in baseball pennant races, smiles or outward expressions of calm and looseness on the part of contenders diminishes in direct proportion

In these exclusive Daily Collegian photos taken by staff photographer Dick Kline during a recent visit to Fenway Park, the characteristic Red Sox September smile was missing. Instead were found looks of determination, which in the final two weeks of the season may bring the Red Sox their first pennant in 21 years.

The Boss

Red Sox manager Dick Williams surveys his players as they warm up prior to the start of a recent game at Fenway Park. Williams is in his first year with the Red Sox and is a prime candidate for American League manager of the year. To date, Williams has led the Sox to an 84-66 record, good for a tie for third place in the torrid junior circuit race.



The Catcher

Elston Howard, for 14 years a star with the powerful New York Yankees, has found himself this season in an enviable position. Though at 38 he is a year older than his manager and has admittedly had his troubles at the plate, Howard, since joining the Red Sox, has won three games with timely hits and has given the Sox their best backstop since Sammy White.

The Pitcher

Jim Lonborg is caught above in a pensive mood before taking the mound. Lonborg has blossomed this season into one of the finest righthanders in the American League and has given the Red Sox their first 20-game winner since Bill Monbouquette in 1963. Williams will count on his ace twirler to pitch every three days down the stretch.

The Hawk

When Charley Finley, owner of the Kansas City A's, cut loose the Hawk unconditionally in August, he didn't realize the contribution he was making to the Red Sox pennant drive. The Hawk, of course, is Ken Harrelson, above, who has given Boston an able replacement for ailing Tony Conigliaro and excellent insurance for the future.

The Mick

Mickey Mantle, the last pennant of the Yankee dynasty of the 50's and early 60's, leans on a bat during a series with the Red Sox. Mickey played in 12 World Series with the Yankees and is a former teammate of Howard.

Harvard Eleven Downs UMass In Scrimmage

Landry, Offense Look Good, Defense Sputters

By STEVE ROSS, Staff Reporter

Staff Reporter

Cambridge—Harvard's Crimson football team, led by the running of Will Stargel and Vic Gatto and the passing tandem of Ric Zimmerman to Carter Lord, outscrimmaged the Redmen 4-2 at Harvard Stadium Saturday.

The scrimmage marked the opening encounter for the Redmen this year against another college contingent and pointed out both good and bad aspects of the Redmen's game.

The first half was played almost exclusively in Harvard territory. Unfortunately for the Redmen, the only scoring was done by Harvard. The score came at 13:33 of the second quarter on a one-yard plunge by Stargel. Stargel also set up the three-foot bolt with successful runs of 48 and 47 yards to bring the ball deep into UMass territory.

Until the Crimson score, UMass totally outclassed the Ivys. Twice the Redmen drove deep into Crimson country only to be denied scores by inches.

Stopped at Goal

First, the Redmen drove 56 yards to the Harvard six-inch line when a fourth and goal sneak by quarterback Greg Landry was stopped cold. Tim Driscoll's 13 yard on a third and one situation after taking a pitchout from Landry on an option nearly worked, but the drive stalled.

A second drive featured the passing of Landry to soph Gerry Grasso. Grasso was open all day on a curl-in pattern from his flanker position, and Landry fired the ball to the Everett speedster with great accuracy. The drive bogged at the five, however, and George Anderson's placement from 23 yards hit the upright.

The second half saw Zimmerman passing with a one touchdown lead and he successfully exploited the inexperience of the UMass defensive secondary. After Bill Cobb picked off a Landry aerial at the Harvard 37, Gatto broke loose for a 26-yard gallop, and three plays later he bulled his way for eight yards to the UMass 20 on a fourth and one situation.

On the next play Zimmerman hit Lord in the end zone and the Crimson was up by two.

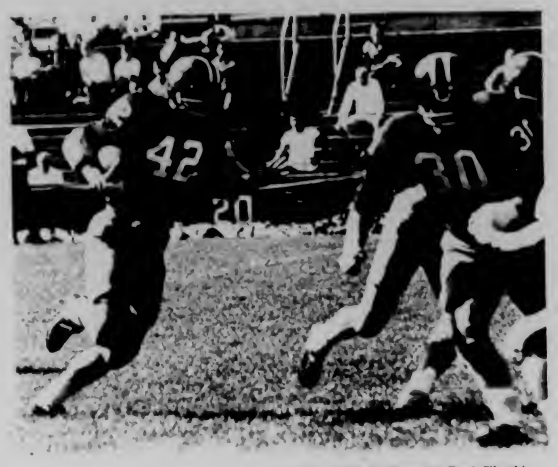
UMass got on the score board in the third period on a 10-play, 80-yard drive. After picking up a Harvard bobble on the 20, Landry and Bruce Cochrane worked the option for 21 yards. On second and eight from the 37 of Harvard, Landry hit Grasso to put the ball on the 23. A penalty pushed the ball to the 12 and one second down from the 10, Landry spotted Bill Carty in the end zone on a roll-out and it was 2-1.

Crimson Drives 78 Yards

Harvard used its second team in the final quarter. After the kickoff, the Crimson drove 78 yards for a score.

The second UMass score was made by Landry with four seconds left in the third period on a 20-yard gallop after he faked a pitchout. Earlier, a 28-yard pass from Landry to Craig Lovell and a 17-yard run by Landry set up Greg's touchdown run.

Harvard closed out the scoring on a 40-yard waltz by halfback John Ballantyne. The Redmen tried an onside kick that failed, and were assessed 15 yards for piling on the receiver of the kick.



Ballantyne then was given the ball as Harvard took over and, after bouncing off a myriad of UMass shoulders, found himself in the enviable position of seeing nothing but green grass and white lines between himself and the goal. He scored easily.

Redmen Rovings—This year's UMass team, judging by its performance in preseason drills and in the scrimmage, will be much more exciting than last year's edition. The starting backfield of Landry, Driscoll, Cochrane and Grasso appear to be quite capable of gaining yardage. Nick Warnock and Carty are two fine experienced ends who will put the passing game back into the Redmen book. This year's team will score a lot.

The defensive secondary is weak, however. It was hardest hit by the loss of Dave Giarla by graduation, and will have to improve swiftly if the Redmen are to have a great season.

Coach Vic Fusia will have to find a place-kicker this week. George Anderson was given a shot at it, but missed a field goal and two extra points in the scrimmage. Bruce Cochrane handled the job last year and may be doing it at Orono, Maine, next Saturday when the Redmen open their regular season.

Also in the running are Marty Scheralis and Ed Sherman. UMass defensive halfback Joe Colosi, reported to be a soph in last Tuesday's Collegian football special, is a junior and played well at Harvard.

White Sox Crowd Twins As Bosox, Detroit Bow

The Baltimore Orioles, powered by homers by Paul Blair, Andy Etchebarren and Boog Powell, handed Boston's pennant hopes another severe jolt with a 5-2 victory over the staggering Red Sox Sunday, sweeping a three-games series.

Despite the loss, the Red Sox remained just one game out of first place as the Detroit Tigers bowed to Washington 5-0. Boston which invades Detroit for a two-game series starting Monday night is tied with Minnesota for third place.

Detroit's loss, which snapped a four-game winning streak for the Tigers, trimmed their lead to one-half game over Eddie

The Orioles, in eighth place after winning the World Series in 1966, played the role of spoiler to the hilt while wrecking Boston pitching.

Blair, who had four hits Saturday, wasted little time in sending Baltimore off to a 2-0 lead. After Curt Blefary walked with one out in the first, Blair hoisted a towering drive into the left field screen for his 11th homer.

Boston starter Gary Bell retired the first two batters in the second inning easily. Then Etchebarren leaned into a pitch and cleared the high screen in left center for his seventh homer.

Southern Board Releases Report On Negro Schools

By WALTER GRANT
Collegiate Press Service

WASHINGTON (CPS) — "They tell us to lift ourselves up by our own boot straps, but we don't even have boots to put our feet in," says Lucious H. Pitts, president of Miles College, a predominately Negro college in Birmingham, Ala.

Miles College, like 32 other traditionally Negro institutions of higher education in the South is unaccredited. The quality of its education is far below that at most Southern non-Negro colleges and universities.

Even the 71 predominately Negro institutions in the South which are accredited do not provide equal higher educational opportunity for their students, according to a report released recently by the Southern Regional Board.

"I don't think anybody can deny that we are in real trouble," Pitts said in reference to the report. "But it's not our fault," he adds. "The people who sponsored this report are the same ones who are responsible for the poor quality of Negro education in the South."

Pitts explained that Southern governors and legislators form the backing of the Southern Regional Education Board. The report, prepared for SREB by the Commission on Higher Education-

UM Awarded Contract For "Project Themis"

The University of Massachusetts has been awarded a Department of Defense contract to participate in the important national "Project Themis," Mass. Sen. Edward M. Kennedy and Congressman Silvio O. Conte recently announced.

In competition with 171 institutions, UMass and approximately 40 other institutions throughout the country were named as "centers of excellence" and as a group will share a total of 20 million dollars to conduct research projects for the Department of Defense. UMass and Dartmouth College were the only New England institutions named.

Under Project Themis, the UMass School of Engineering is expected to receive at least $600,000 for the next three years to carry out interdisciplinary research on deep sea submersibles.

Project Manager will be Dr. K. G. Picha, Dean of the School of Engineering. Co-project manager will be Dr. Charles E. Carver, who will be responsible for technical management of the program.

The Department of Defense's aim through Project Themis is to develop new centers of excellence, and to give wider geographical distribution of defense research funds to institutions that have received less support in the past.

Criteria used by Defense Department officials in selecting institutions included: current capability to conduct research in specific areas, high caliber leadership, effective organization to cope with multidisciplinary approaches to research, and the "critical size" research competence of faculty to make a significant contribution to the defense department and to the institution's goal of excellence.

At the University, Dr. Carver will be chairman of a Deep Sea Submersible Board that will include members from five departments within the School of Engineering.

The UMass Themis Project will involve not only faculty members, but graduate students and visiting scholars.

UMass is interested in deep sea submersibles and the problems of small submarines at great depths, because of the national goal of exploring and utilizing the rich resources of the oceans.

According to Dr. Carver, "University Professors will be concentrating their research problems as propulsion and energy conversion, appropriate materials and materials processing, guidance controls, structures, deep sea environment.

Rap Brown Released on $10G Bail Continues Fight Against Extradition

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — A federal judge Monday granted the release on bail of Black Power advocate H. Rap Brown and placed him in the custody of his New York attorney.

District Judge Robert R. Merhige Jr. took the action at the close of a four-hour hearing in which the state argued that Brown was not entitled to bail while his fight against extradition was continuing.

"The law gives me no right to make him (Brown) a good guy or a bad guy, but I have the duty not to close my eyes to the fact that Virginia authorities have been so disturbed by his presence they have transferred him from Alexandria to Richmond and to the State Farm."

Merhige set bail at $10,000 and said Brown would be released provided he promises to appear at all scheduled legal hearings "in any court, anywhere."

Presumably this includes not only the Alexandria hearing, fighting the extradition to Maryland already approved by Virginia Gov. Mills E. Godwin Jr., but hearings in Maryland and in Louisiana.

Maki Made Vice-Dean Of UM Arts and Sciences

Dr. John M. Maki, chairman of the Asian Studies Program and professor of government at UMass, has recently been named vice-dean of the University's College of Arts and Sciences, UM Provost Oswald Tippo announced.

In this capacity Dr. Maki will serve as deputy to College of Arts and Sciences Dean I. Moyer Hunsberger in all affairs of the college, largest in the University. His primary duty will be to assist Dean Hunsberger with faculty personnel matters.

Since his arrival at UM in the fall of 1966, Dr. Maki has served as chairman of the Faculty Seminar on Asia and is one of the University's representatives on the Four College Asian-African Studies Committee. His duties as vice-dean will start full time on Sept. 1, but during the summer he will divide his time between teaching and administrative work.

Prior to his arrival to UM, Dean Maki spent 18 years on the faculty at the University of Washington in Seattle, where he was a member of the Far Eastern and Russian Institute and Chairman of the Modern Japan Project, a faculty research seminar.

At Washington he had been elected chairman of the University Senate and president of the local chapters of the American Association of University Professors and of Phi Beta Kappa. As chairman of the Senate, he initiated a broad reorganization of its structure and committees.

He was also elected to a four-year term on the Executive Committee of the College of Arts and Sciences. In addition, he served as chairman of the Senate Curriculum Committee and of a General Educational Policies Sub-Committee of the Senate Executive Committee.

In his research Dr. Maki has specialized in Japanese government and politics. His books include "Japanese Militarism," "Government and Politics' in Japan." and "Court and Constitution in Japan."

In discussing the need for Dr. Maki's services as vice-dean, Dean Hunsberger emphasized that the faculty in the College of Arts and Sciences at UM has increased from fewer than 250 in 1961 to more than 600 in 1967.

He added: "If present enrollment increases continue, the college will continue to add about 70 new faculty per year. With Dean Maki's able assistance, I look forward with renewed enthusiasm to the task of assembling a faculty of which any College of Arts and Sciences would be proud."

TANKS COULDN'T make it over this tank (or human) trap, that has appeared at the Campus Center site.

"I THINK I SEE a Vietcong," exclaimed this gentleman caught in the middle of the ravages caused by the construction of our Campus Center. Actually, it only turned out to be a UMass peacenik dressed in military garb.

ANCIENT RUINS of Mass. Aggie were discovered in this cavern. Until this important archaeological discovery, Daily Collegian editors believed that workers were intent upon making a journey to the center of the earth.

"WE'VE STRUCK oil, now what do we do?," seems to be the problem at the above conference. The final decision was to "just let it go" and see what happens after the center is completed.

TEARING UP THE TURF on the way to Grossman was the above crane. Unfortunately, he was stopped moments before the destruction job was begun.

STOPPING ABRUPTLY the digging of another trench was the above crane, when the operator suddenly discovered he had unearthed the remains of what appeared to be an Indian. For some reason, he appeared to resemble our spirit Metawampe.

Marijuana Case Opens With Dr.'s Testimony

BOSTON (AP)—A court test of a Massachusetts statute outlawing marijuana opened Monday with a California doctor testifying the drug is commonly used, has medical applications, and that there is "no relation between marijuana and dangerous behavior."

Physician — psychiatrist Dr. Joel Fort was the first witness called in the defense of two Philadelphia men, Ivan Weiss, 26, and Joseph D. Leis, 25. They are charged with possession with intent to sell.

Defense lawyer Joseph S. Oteri said he will test the statute barring the use and possession of the drug in the state.

Dr. Fort said marijuana has potential medical use in treating depression and headaches, as an appetite stimulator, and as a tranquilizer for the emotionally disturbed.

He added he knew of no one admitted to a hospital or mental clinic because of their association with the drug. It produces no malfunction of the body or mind, he told the Suffolk Superior courtroom.

In his opening statement, Oteri attacked the statute as irrational and arbitrary, arguing that use of the drug "cannot and should not be considered a crime."

James D. St. Clair, special assistant district attorney prosecuting the case against the pair, said he will introduce evidence to show marijuana causes distortion of time and perception, and that its use is harmful.

"Alcohol is a predictable drug — marijuana is unpredictable," he told the court.

Middle East

Soviets Denounce Israel

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) — The Soviet Union and Arab nations denounced Israel Monday for its continued occupation of conquered Arab territory, foreshadowing a bitter Middle East debate in the regular session of the U.N. General Assembly opening Tuesday.

The harsh words were sounded at the closing meeting of the Assembly's inconclusive emergency session on the Middle East, which the Soviet Union summoned in a futile attempt to obtain an Assembly condemnation of Israel and a demand for Israeli withdrawal from the Arab lands seized in the Arab-Israeli war in early June.

The emergency session, which convened June 17, finally ended after the Assembly voted without dissent to place the Middle East problem on the agenda of the regular session as a "matter of high priority."

Soviet Ambassador Nikolai T. Fedorenko, speaking after the vote, declared it was essential that the Assembly "take measures to insure the immediate withdrawal of Israeli forces from Arab territories conquered by them and liquidate other consequences of the Israeli aggression."

He said the June fighting resulted from a "criminal conspiracy of the most reactionary kind," and he accused the United States and other countries of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization of protecting Israel in two attacks on the Arabs in 10 years.

U.S. Ambassador Arthur J. Goldberg, replying to Fedorenko, said the United States regretted that the emergency session should end "with a new show of invective and harshness."

Accompanying renewal of the Middle East debate here was an announcement by an Israeli army spokesman in Tel Aviv that Egyptian and Israeli troops exchanged small arms fire Monday along the Suez Canal cease-fire line north of El Qantara. It was the fifth clash in the canal area this month.

UAW Rejects Ford Offers

Detroit (AP)—The United Auto Workers Union struck Ford on Sept. 7 in support of what the UAW says is its "longest and most ambitious list" of wage and fringe demands in history.

GM, Ford and Chrysler made practically identical new contract offers Aug. 29.

They would have provided an immediate 13-cent hourly increase and 2.8 per cent raises in the second and third years, but would have cut back on cost-of-living allowances and other contract features with which the union has said there can be "absolutely no tampering."

The union rejected the parallel offers.

The companies have declined to put a price tag on their overall wage offers, but some executives have estimated it would take $4 additional hourly to meet all the union's wage and fringe demands.

In their first negotiating session since the walkout began 12 days earlier, Ford and UAW bargainers took up noneconomic issues Monday.

Navy Raids Hit Four Targets In Monday Raids Over Haiphong

SAIGON, Vietnam (AP) — The Navy raids Monday hit at four targets inside Haiphong, all of which had been attacked for the first time Sept. 11. Three of the targets were hit in the raids on Sunday.

The carrier bombers pounded a highway bridge eight-tenths of a mile from the center of Haiphong and pilots reported one span of the structure destroyed.

They also bombed a warehouse area 1.3 miles west of Haiphong's center, a railroad yard 1.7 miles northwest and a railroad-highway bridge one mile west of the heart of the city. These three targets had been attacked Sept. 11 and again on Sunday. The raids Monday apparently attempted to finish them off.

Pilots reported direct hits on the railroad-highway bridge in the Monday strikes and said thick smoke prevented a full assessment of the damage on the other targets.

The two bridges that were attacked spanned a big canal that bisects Haiphong, the second largest city in North Vietnam, and connected the main rail and road route from Haiphong westward to Hanoi, the Communist capital.

While the carrier planes assaulted Haiphong once again, U.S. Air Force jets from Thailand bases struck rail facilities and bridges northeast and northwest of Hanoi.

The Air Force targets include a major rail and road intersection 76 miles northwest of the caiptal which was attacked for the first time in the war. The junction is at the intersection of routes 13A and 157 and pilots reported cutting up the complex.

Air Force fliers also struck the Huong Vi railroad yards 37 miles northeast of Hanoi and pilots said two strings of bombs "walked across the yards" from north to south.

Another raid hit at a highway bridge 38 miles northeast of Hanoi and pilot said they cut the approaches to the span and damaged one end of the structure. Still other Air Force pilots reported destroying eight military structures in an assault on a storage area near Dong Hoi in the southern panhandle.

Thank You

The Amherst Chapter of the Junior Chamber of Commerce, express their appreciation and gratitude to all those members of the Amherst community who helped to make this year's "Operation Housekeep" at least a three-fold success. You helped make available to foreign students on limited budgets many household furnishings that they otherwise would not have been able to buy; from the sale of the donated items we gained a net income of almost $200 and this will aid us greatly in our attempts to provide further opportunities for increased understanding and brotherhood among all segments of the Amherst community, and finally, those of us who participated directly in the collection and sale of these items, have experienced a warm sense of service to our fellow man.

We specifically would like to mention the following persons and institutions, without whose kindnesses our endeavor would have faltered: Mrs. Evelyn Russell, Foreign Student Advisor at the University; Mr. Ernie Watts of the Student Union; Miss Ann Whalen of the Hampshire Gazette; The Summer Statesman, Newspaper of the University; radio stations WTTT and WFCR of Amherst; Blair Cutting and Smith, and its secretarial staff; the University Police Force for its indulgences; and to all of the persons who donated items to our "Operation Housekeep" a very special thank you.

Bear With Us

The Seniors who have arrived on this campus for the past four Septembers have yet to see the grounds without tractors, trucks and workmen running all over it. All students might wonder what the completed campus will look like. Will grass really grow on all these bare patches?

With a new Business Administration complex, Orchard Hill, Alumni Stadium and now Whitmore Administration Building all completed with in the last three years, there hasn't been much time for growing grass.

With the promise of a new library, Fine Arts Building, more Southwest Complex dorms and a Student Center to come, the next few years show little hope for any change in landscaping progress.

Now think ahead. When all the dust settles and the mud dries up, UMass should be one of the best looking universities in New England, and possibly in the entire country.

With all the inconveniences and student hazards eliminated, walking to class will be much less tiresome. Automobiles will not be allowed on the campus proper, but will enter a parking garage near Machmer.

The students will be walking through a well groomed campus with impressive high rise buildings, some being able to spend a couple of leisurely hours having a full course dinner in the new restaurant atop the student center . . . quite a change from a pizza parlor.

Granted, the students that will be walking across the campus in 1975 won't be subjected to these little inconveniences, but they won't have had the opportunity to see a vibrant new campus in the making. So "'grin and bear it" and think of what is to come.

Examine—Don't Accept

by PATRICK FLAHERTY
Editorial Staff

There is a dangerous tendency among Americans to accept government policy statements as foregone conclusions, without investigating the situations involved through extra readings. The Johnson administration thrives on this and continues to give unsupported generalities as excuses for our involvement in Vietnam.

Our government claims to be fighting for 'freedom' or 'self-determination' in Vietnam are not borne out by actions there. The sooner people realize that such allegations are window dressing for propaganda purposes, the easier it will be to disengage our forces from Vietnam.

The nationalism of Vietnamese communists and their supporters has been naively interpreted for us as part of an 'international communist conspiracy'. Independence for South Vietnam is subordinate to our ill-conceived military objective of defeating a 'communist' force.

When has our concern for Vietnam's 'freedom' been evidenced? Certainly not during the Indo-Chinese War, when American aid subsidized 80% of France's military effort to recolonize that area. By March, 1964 we paid them $1.4 billion.

The machinations to undermine the Geneva Conference (1954) began when America advised France not to agree for 'free elections' as part of the peace talks and ultimate settlement. Then much to our embarassment, the French Prime Minister Bidault's principal adviser, R. de Margene publically revealed documentary evidence showing American plans to intervene in Indochina, if the conference broke down or whenever the French desired.

Of the nine parties at the conference only the U.S. refused to sign the Geneva Agreement of 1954. Although Bedell Smith, our representative, swore to uphold the agreements, plans were being laid to the contrary.

A month before the conference ended, Bao Dai, the figurehead leader of South Vietnam, was persuaded by the U.S. to appoint Nyo Dink Diem as the Premier. This man fitted the qualifications required for 'our' dictators; he was a rabid anti-communist. Yet typical of leaders cultivated with our tax money, he had no popular following.

With American support, Diem refused to hold the elections for reunification of Vietnam in 1956. Despite the official reasons given for this action, the fact remains that Diem could not compete with Ho Chi Minh in the political arena.

The Vietminh (Viet Cong) were very confident of an electoral victory on the local level too and had everything to lose by terrorizing voters. This political supremacy was noted less enthusiastically by Pres. Eisenhower and various observers in Vietnam like Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas and Leo Cheine, an important business figure in this country. The liberators of Vietnam from French colonialism were about to reap an electoral harvest.

Unfortunately the choice of the Vietnamese people was not condusive to American 'interests.' The reasoning seemed to be: You cannot elect Communists in a free election.

In attempting to build an 'independent' South Vietnam, the U.S. flagrantly disregarded the explicit wording of the Geneva Agreements which stated that the DMZ would be a 'provisional military demarcation,' not a political or ideological boundary as Rusk has interpreted it for us. Diem's repressive regime paved the way for the civil war which ultimately entangled the U.S., and then North Vietnam.

The Diem forces indiscriminately repressed all political opposition whether pro or anti-Communist. "Anyone killed (was) automatically a Viet Cong" (Christian Monitor 3/8/63). Vietnamese villages were napalmed as a show of force and more than 30,000 civilians were killed in the course of Diem's actions against the populace which supported the Vietminh.

To treat communism like a disease requiring eradication is avoiding the important issues involved. The poor turn to communism or do not fight it, because it offers an alternative to the unproductive American-supported dictatorships.

According to even Gen. Ky, the Vietminh are only 40-50% Communist. This force is no threat to Southeast Asia and its dominoes. We should not be obliged to protect dictatorships from their unpopularity, just because it manifests itself in the form of communist sympathies.

Don't worry about finding your station in life. Somebody will tell you where to get off.

If one h[illegible]ned to get there about 8 he was sure [illegible]e disheartened and do an about face. The place was altogether too small, few organizations were represented and organization at best was that of a second class Mickey Mouse Club.

"Spectrum Preview," which on Monday took to task both faculty and students on grounds of apathy, ignorance, arrogance and laziness, unfortunately failed to take into account the majority of Umies who were totally unaware of Spectrum and the revamping of its format.

True though it may be that the enthusiasm aroused by organizational meetings last spring met with regrettable setbacks over the summer months, the advent of a new semester and an extended deadline have renewed the efforts of the editors and the staff. It is hoped that through increased publicity, the efforts of UMass creative talents will also be realized.

Although past experiences predict its destruction or neglect, the future of SPECTRUM '67-'68 need not lie buried in pre-mature forcasts or intimidating innuendoes.

Paraphernalia TRUC

by RON LaBRECQUE, News Editor

The Leather Shed started it, followed this past summer by Heads Up. Last week Truc and Paraphernalia added their names to the list of stores giving birth to a new era in retail merchandising in the Amherst area.

The Leather shed is just that. Those who have not yet found the alley on North Pleasant Street which leads to the unique shop have missed a trip to a store abounding in more than its share of atmosphere. And if one is fortunate enough to find the Leather Shed one should also take the time to stop in Heads Up, where the customer finds himself in a room blocked off from daylight, treated to the aroma of burning incense, and left in quietude to ponder over the buttons and posters offered for sale.

Although more easily accessible than their predecessors, the two newcomers are no less devoid of the distinctive atmosphere associated with the Leather Shed and Heads Up. Truc and Paraphernalia cater exclusively to a youthful generation. Their merchandise is one of the many tremors in what Look magazine last Spring called the "Youthquake".

Military, mod and that unique paraphernalia design combine in this black mini-dress.

It is more proper to say that Truc and Paraphernalia deal in fashions than to merely say that they sell clothes. These stores are certainly not the place for the conservative, or perhaps better stated, the "traditional" dresser. The format of the Paraphernalia 'look' appears to be boldness in simplicity.

The shopper will find more than a new look in fashions at Truc and Paraphernalia. A multitudinous variety of candles, pop art diet pepsi bottles, and plastic see-through pillows are but a few of the items found at these stores.

After having become a member of the retailing establishment in Harvard Square, Truc and Paraphernalia have brought their originality to another college town, and this freshness of thought in merchandising should be beneficial to Amherst.

"Boldness in simplicity" describes the dress worn by Susan, a Paraphernalia model, standing amidst an array of multi-colored shades.

Described by designer Betsey Johnson as a veritable "designer's paradise," or a place where anything goes, The Paraphernalia concept of merchandising sprung into being with the opening of its first shop on New York's Madison Avenue in September 1965. The fantastic acceptance of the madison avenue shop encouraged Paul Young, president and originator of the Paraphernalia concept, and the Puritan Fashions Corporation to expand to other cities.

As of April 1967, Paraphernalia Shops had sprung up in 25 localities across the country. An opening in Paris is projected for later this year.

Paraphernalia—In Essence

PARAPHERNALIA From the Greek "para" meaning beyond and "perein" meaning To bring, does exactly that—it brings fashion beyond the dull, the routine, the passe, and often beyond the norm.

The fashions are up to the minute in style, wearable around the clock, futuristic in design, and most important, they are able to change with the hour, making Paraphernalia a permanent part of the ever-changing world of creativity in clothes.

There is a Paraphernalia "look" which hinges on youth, colors bold and bright, sizes 3-13. But the "look" is not a stereotype, because it caters to anyone who feels young and alive enough to be part of it.

The shops displaying the mode of Paraphernalia are decorated with simplicity to put the focus on clothes and accessories. The personnel is also attended to the Paraphernalia tempo concept: They are young, vivacious, aware and fast-moving.

Classes beginning on Wednesday, September 20 will mark the 93rd academic year of Smith College. The 616 freshman arrived on Friday for registration and several days of orientation activities. With upperclassmen registering Tuesday, the total enrollment this year is expected to remain close to the usual 2,300 students.

This year's freshmen represent 42 states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico and eleven foreign countries. Seventy-two Smith College students are participating in the Junior Year abroad program.

Johnson Denies Scuttling War Talks

WASHINGTON (AP)—The State Department flatly denied Monday charges that President Johnson's administration had "effectively and brutally canceled" a private peace probe with Hanoi by stiffening the terms for peace negotiations.

Asst. Secretary of State William P. Bundy, in charge of Far Eastern affairs told a news conference the charge by Pulitzer prizewinning editor and writer Harry S. Ashmore was misleading.

He said it had taken no account of the published record of President Johnson's letter to North Vietnam President Ho Chi Minh which made reference to contacts in Moscow between American and North Vietnamese representatives.

Ashmore, former executive editor of the Arkansas Gazette and now executive vice president of the Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions in Santa Barbara, Calif., declared in his 1,500-word article that the Johnson letter to Ho had hardened the administration by adding new terms for peace.

Ashmore and Editor William C. Baggs of the Miami, Fla., News talked with Ho in Hanoi in January. In February the two men sent Ho a letter which Ashmore says was drafted with the aid of the State Department and lessened the demands the United States had made for suspending bombing of North Vietnam.

But Ashmore claimed Johnson sent Ho a letter three days before the Ashmore-Baggs message and which Ashmore says made harder demands and undercut the chances for further talks the two newspapermen had thought might bring negotiations.

Senate Republican Leader Everett M. Dirksen of Illinois came to Johnson's defense Monday and said he couldn't conceive of circumstances in which the President wouldn't make every possible effort to stop the killing in Vietnam.

Bundy said that it seems clear that the present disclosures by Ashmore of the talks in Hanoi last January "will not reassure Hanoi that such private contacts will be top secret."

Baggs said the State Department statement was "interesting" but had no other comment.

Announcements have been issued to local school directors and instrumental teachers inviting them to submit names of all interested and qualified instrumentalists. The 50-piece orchestra is sponsored by the University's department of music and is conducted by Joseph Contino, associate professor of music.

The group was established in the spring of 1965 in response to a growing need for orchestral training and experience for young musicians from the Amherst area. Rehearsals are held on Monday evenings from 7 to 9 p.m. with two concerts, scheduled in January and May.

Prof. Contino has performed as clarinetist and has had extensive experience as teacher and conductor. He has conducted the UMass Band and his own organization, the Amherst Community Band.

Deadline Set For Inspection Stickers

Registrar of Motor vehicles Richard E. Laughlin has called attention to the Fall Inspection Period, continuing until October 15, for all Massachusetts registered motor vehicles.

More than 3,000 Official Stations are ready to serve the motoring public. All Approved Adjusters have been advised of the strict requirements governing inspection of vehicles during this mandatory period. Motorists are urged NOT to delay in having their vehicles chicked for safe driving.

To emphasize his remarks, the Registrar cited a recent case in which the defendant was charged with receiving stolen property, a quantity of stickers which had been stolen in a local community.

"The defendant was successfully prosecuted by Municipal Police and Registry Investigators and the Court imposed a fine of $500. as a penalty," said the Registrar.

"As in the case referred to, all violations of fraudulent use or possession or illegal affixing to motor vehicles or any other improper act concerning Inspection Stickers, coming to the attention of the Registry of Motor Vehicles, will result in equally vigorous prosecution and immediate action by the Registrar's office."

Flying Telescopes Sighted in Future

The University of Massachusetts has begun development of a high-altitude balloon astronomy program under a pioneer in the field—Dr. John D. Strong, former director of the Laboratory of Astrophysics and Meteorology at Johns Hopkins University.

Also from John Hopkins University is Dr. William Plummer, a specialist in optical physics.

The University has begun Ph.D. and master's degree programs in astronomy, has nearly completed construction of an astronomy laboratory building, and has been granted over $919,000 worth of equipment for Dr. Strong's work from the Air Force Office of Scientific Research and the Office of Naval Research.

The new program, under the department of physics & astronomy will be part of the Four College Astronomy Department, headed by Dr. William M. Irvine, chairman of astronomy at UMass.

Dr. Irvine said: "The flying of telescopes in balloons allows observations to be made above the obscuring effects of the earth's atmosphere caused by regions of infrared and ultraviolet.

Dr. Strong evolved the process of aluminizing telescope mirrors and identified water vapor and ice crystals in the atmosphere of the planet Venus.

Dr. Strong's investigations deal with the infrared region of the spectrum and are made with a 16-inch diameter telescope raised 80,000 feet into the stratosphere by a polyethylene balloon containing up to three million cubic feet of helium.

Launching will be at the National Center for Atmospheric Research in Palestine, Texas. After the flight, the equipment will be returned to Amherst, where data will be recorded analyzed and housed in a new structure in the UMass Engineering School area.

Libe Stacks Now Open

Goodell Library now has an open-stack policy for the first time since 1960. During the past seven years, since the library was expanded to its present size, the stacks have been closed to most undergraduates.

The major goal is to improve reader service, according to James Sokoloski, assistant to the director of the Library. He described the new policy as a trial program which will be continued if successful.

Sokoloski has not yet noticed any of the "mutilation, theft, and misshelving" which usually occurs with open stacks. He finds the rest of the library staff "quite enthusiastic" about the new program.

Most students are expected to reap considerable benefits from their newly-acquired stack roaming privilege. Research paper sources may now be perused at the students leisure, and without time-consuming paperwork at the circulation desk.

GM Announces Price Hike

DETROIT (AP)—General Motors Corporation announced Monday its 1968 model automobiles will carry a suggested list price averaging $110 more than 1967's and left the way open for a possible further increase if the United Auto Workers, now striking Ford Motor Co., win a sizeable pay boost from the industry.

GM said its suggested list price increase, averaging 3.6 per cent, is based on "current material prices and payroll costs."

The GM average was $23 less than the $133 average boost announced by Chrysler for 1968 models last week. Chrysler estimated its hike at 4.6 per cent.

The price differences immediately raised speculation as to whether Chrysler, the No. 3 automaker, might cut back as it did when GM came in below competitors on 1967 models.

American Motors, smallest of the four major U.S. automakers, has sent dealers tentative prices for new models with increases ranging from $59 to $157 on many of the firm's cars.

It is expected, however, that when AMC announces final prices early next week, they will show some adjustment over the tentative list sent to dealers.

GM's increases ranges from $50 on the Chevrolet Chevelle SS 396 hardtop to $279 on the Cadillac Eldorado on which rear power vent windows and front disc wheel brakes, sold as options for $168 in 1967, have been made standard. The high volume Chevrolet Bel Air model increase was $116.

Refugee Loans Now Available

The U.S. Office of Education reported that a federal long term, low interest loan program, authorized by the Migration and Refugee Assistance Act of 1962, will provide $1.4 million to more than 2,000 needy Cuban refugee students. The undergraduate and graduate students will attend 295 American colleges during the first semester of the 1967-68 academic year.

A student applies for a loan to the participating institution which has accepted him for enrollment, but repays the money directly to the Office of Education. Repayment of principal and interest is deferred until at least one year after the student completes his education. The loans bear interest at 3 percent during the repayment period, which can extend over 10 years.

Repayment may be deferred for up to three years while a borrower is serving in the U.S. armed forces or as a Peace Corps volunteer. Up to 50 percent of a student's loan may be cancelled, at the rate of 10 percent per academic year, for service as a full-time teacher in a public or non-profit private elementary or secondary school or institution of higher education.

Over the past seven fiscal years, 32,748 loans were granted to almost 7,000 needy Cuban students, starting with 669 loans to 513 borowers in fiscal 1961. Over the seven-year period, the number of borrowers has increased at the average rate of 41 percent per year.

Negro School Report . . .

al Opportunity in the South, said Southern Negro institutions "do not match their predominately white counterparts in admission standards, breadth and depth of curriculum, quality of instruction, or preparation of students for employment."

"Miles College and many other institutions like Miles are in a vicious cycle,' 'Dr. Pitts said. "We are not accredited and we can't get accredited until we get adequate facilities, courses, and faculty salaries. We can't do this without money, and when we go into a foundation office and ask for money they turn us down because we're not accredited.

Several other presidents of predominately Negro institutions also have issued statements saying the SREB report is unfair and should place the blame for the poor quality of Negro education on tne South as a region.

The report, however, is not all negative. Writers of the report believe it will lead to improved instruction at traditionally Negro colleges and encourage the Southern states to develop a high quality system of higher education for all their citizens.

Specifically, the report called for the establishment of a Regional Institute for Higher Educational Opportunity to assist the states and their educational systems in mounting and coordinating a concerted drive toward equal opportunity.

Acording to the 48-page report only about 15 per cent of the South's college-age Negro population was attending college last fall, in sharp contrast to the nearly 44 per cent enrollment of college-age whites. The commission urged white colleges and universities to adopt "high risk" quotas for the admission of "educationally disadvantaged students."

The report also says traditionally Negro colleges, in order to be of maximum assistance in meeting the needs of its students, "must recognize that no single institution can provide all of the programs required, that the state's total resources must be a part of curriculum planning." Thus, the commission says cooperative programs involving two or more institutions should be regarded as a means of relieving faculty shortages and giving students access to a wider variety of course offerings of acceptable quality than a single college can provide.

The commission's report was endorsed last week by the Southern Governors' Conference, meeting in Asheville, N.C., although Gov. Lester Maddox of Georgia, a segregationist, criticized the proposals.

The fact that Southern governors endorsed the proposals was regarded by many observers as a positive step toward eliminating racial barriers in the Southern education system.

But Pitts has reservations about the significance of the endorsement. "It could mean more funds, but I have some questions about where they intend to seek funds—from their legislatures or from foundations which will set up programs they can administer."

Sr. Scholarship Now Available

The Chain Scholarship Division of the Leonard M. Greene Foundation, Inc. is currently awarding scholarships of up to $1,000 to enable needy students to complete their college educations.

If you are a senior in need of funds; plan to seek employment upon graduation rather than undertake a post-graduate curriculum; have grades of degree candidate status; and if, when you are able, you will help CHAIN support future needy students, you may be eligible.

The CHAIN SCHOLARSHIP program has been in existence for five years, and is available in over three hundred colleges. Its approach to the scholarship problem is unique in two major concepts: faith in the average student; and faith in his integrity to assume a moral, rather than a legal obligation, and thus become a vital link in a chain reaction which can grow to pass along an endless continuum of help from those who were once in similar circumstances.

To apply for a CHAIN SCHOLARSHIP, obtain an application from the College Financial Aid Office, or write directly to: CHAIN SCHOLARSHIP, P.O. Box 203, Armonk, New York 10504.

New Coach, Fresh Faces: Question Marks at Maine

Bears Prep to 'Greet' Redmen

ORONO—"We're going to have to put our faith in a lot of boys who have never played in a college varsity football game before," said University of Maine head coach Walter Abbott this week as his Black Bears prepared for the season's opener Saturday against UMass.

Abbott, at 30 one of the youngest football head coaches in the East, will have to depend heavily this season on sophomores to fill important positions because of graduation losses.

At linebacker, Maine will probably be using four boys who have never played that position for Maine before. A recent switch has placed letterman Ernest "Pete" Quackenbush, a 6-1, 200-pound junior who last year was a tight end, at one of the linebacking posts in an effort to shore up the spot left vacant by the graduation of two-time Little All-American John Huard, now a star with the Denver Broncos.

Quackenbush, a high jumper on the track team, has both the size and speed to make the transition successfully, says Abbott. His linebacking mate in all probability will be sophomore John Wolfgram of Marblehead, Mass., a 5-11, 190 pound sophomore.

In other switches, Charlie MacDonald of Augusta, a senior letterman, has been moved from his linebacking post to an offensive tackle position to give more experience to the offensive line corps.

Thus far Abbott says he is pleased with the way the versatile MacDonald has picked up the chores of the line position. MacDonald, a six-foot, 205-pounder, has the quickness and size that Abbott is looking for in the forward wall.

But it is the sophomores who will be getting the closest look in the final week before Maine's opener with the Redmen at Orono.

Those up from last year's freshman team given the best chance of breaking into the starting lineups are defensive end Mike O'Leary, a 6-1, 205-pounder from Arlington, Mass.; Paul Dulac, 5-11, 201-pounder at middle guard: Jon Piper, a 5-8, 175-pounder from Westboro, Mass., who may make it at either middle guard or linebacker, and Gene Benner, a six-foot, 177-pound speedster and track star, at split end.

Defensive backs Tom Jordan, 5-11, 175 and Dale Inman, 5-11, 165, from Andover, Mass.; and guards Dennis Walch, 6-1, 195, and Jay Vance, 5-10, 195, are other sophs in consideration, according to Abbott.

O'Leary has been a pleasant surprise at a defensive end post and is giving letterman Don Loranger a real battle for the starting position there.

UMass has been picked by most observers as the team to beat in the Yankee Conference while Maine has been picked far down the list by most writers.

Abbott has no quarrel to pick with the prognosticators. "On paper the other teams have to be given the nod, but we're going to be in condition and ready to play real football every Saturday," says the new head mentor.

Jones' Homer in 10th Beats Detroit

DETROIT — A 10th-inning home run by Dalton Jones gave the Red Sox a 6-5 victory over the Tigers last night and snapped Boston's three-game losing streak.

Carl Yastrzemski's 40th homer of the year tied the game with one out in the ninth.

The Red Sox, fresh off a 3-game power failure with the lowly Baltimore Orioles, took a 3-0 lead in the first inning, but Detroit scored three runs in the third, sparked by a homer by Norm Cash.

Boston scored another run in the fourth but that was matched by Cash's second home run in the sixth. A run-producing double by Jim Northrup pushed the Bengal's ahead for the first tie, setting the stage for Yastrzemski's tying blast.

NOW WHAT? — Soph halfback Jerry Grasso (22) has just taken a handoff from Greg Landry (11), but the Harvard line apparently is forming to the right. Grasso, a native of Everett, the hometown of former All-Ivy flash Bobby Leo, played in Leo's old haunting grounds, Harvard Stadium, Saturday in a scrimmage. The Redmen amassed about 400 yards of offense but bowed, 27-12.

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The St. Louis Cardinals clinched their 11th National League pennant Monday night with a 5-1 victory over the Philadelphia Phillies behind the three-hit pitching of Bob Gibson.

Held without a hit for five innings by lefty Dick Ellsworth, the Cardinals erupted for four runs in the sixth to make Manager Red Schoendienst a pennant winner in his third year at the helm.

Meanwhile, Gibson, who earned his 13th victory and third straight since recovering from a broken leg, limited the Phillies to one run. Tony Gonzalez singled to open the seventh, moved to third on Bill White's double and scored on an infield out.

It was St. Louis' sixth victory in the last seven games and their 15th in the last 18.

The Cardinals thus boosted their National League lead to 13 games over idle San Francisco with only 12 games left to play.

Twins Win In 10th, Too

KANSAS CITY (AP)—Ted Uhlaender's single in the 10th inning and the six-hit pitching of Jim Kaat led Minnesota to a 2-0 victory over Kansas City Monday night, snapping a three-game losing streak for the struggling American League pennant contenders.

Kaat, who went into the game with an 0-4 season mark against the last place A's, struck out 12 in winning a brilliant duel with Kansas City's Jim "Catfish" Hunter and bringing his record to 14-13.

Hunter, 11-16, gave up only three hits until the 10th, when Bob Allison started the Twins' two-out rally with a single to left. After Rod Carew walked, Pat Kelly ran for Allison and Uhlaender snapped the scoreless deadlock with a line single to center, scoring Kelly, and Carew also scored when Joe Nossek bobbled the ball for an error.

The runs broke a string of 22 scoreless innings for the Twins.

Viet Cong Bomb Nat'l Chinese Saigon Embassy

SAIGON (AP)—Bombing of Nationalist China's embassy and the shooting of three prominent Chinese citizens raised fears Tuesday that the Viet Cong have opened an organized campaign of terror against the Chinese community in Saigon.

The situation is hardly comparable to the rioting and bombing promoted this summer by Red China's followers in Macao and Hong Kong. But a terror campaign could be aimed at promoting disarray within the large segment of South Vietnam's population who have Chinese blood.

Chinese are influential in the nation's economic affairs. Though Nationalist China is not involved militarily in the war, Nung irregulars of Chinese descent have proved themselves effective as fighters on the allied side.

President Chiang Kai-shek's government in Taipei, Formosa, condemned the bombing, which ripped apart the two-story embassy and injured 27 persons, as "a dastardly outrage and clearly the work of Communist terrorists."

Vietnamese police agreed with that assessment.

They arrested two men for the bombing and picked up a 20-year-old girl, Phung Ngoc Anh, for a shooting incident in which the embassy's chief intelligence officer, Col. Charles T. Chung, was critically wounded by two bullets in the lungs.

Police sources said all three were Vietnamese of Chinese extraction. The men were reported to have confessed that, as Viet Cong agents, they had placed a time-fused satchel charge of explosive within the embassy. A search of the girl yielded a .45 pistol.

"Soul Sound" Concert To Highlight Class Day '67

Steve Wonder
SOUL CONCERT

Saturday evening at 9:30 Class Day '67 rolls into its final segment with a "Soul" concert, sponsored by the senior class. Headlining the show are Stevie Wonder and Wilson Pickett, considered to be among the top names in the "Soul Industry."

Said Dick Wood, Senior class President, "In planning for this concert we reviewed all types of entertainment ranging from musical comedy to African Ballet. There was no doubt in our minds that Soul was the big sound in popular music."

In recent months both Wonder and Pickett have reached the summit of record selling success with Wonders' I was Made to Love Her, and Funky Broadway an original composition of Pickett.

Wood also announced that tickets would cost $3.00 per person and are on sale now at the Student Union ticket office.

A recently formed campus committee has announced plans for the first Class Day in UMass history.

Centering around the UMass-Dartmouth regionally televised football game, Class Day '67 is planned as an all day affair, commencing at the same time.

The Class Day '67 Committee is promising a few non-traditional surprises, supplementing the traditional disgarding of beanies by the freshmen. The committee recommends that all Umies look for their class representatives upon entering the stadium.

Composed of members of the Classes of '68, '69, '70 and the three honorary societies Maroon Keys, Scrolls and Revelers, the class day committee aims its activities at a complete and colorful welcome for the Freshman Class of 1971.

According to Senior Class President Dick Wood, "For some four years now we've sat back and watched some 12 or 13 thousand freshman enter this University with little notice or recognition. We'd like to make a precedent with the Class of 1971 as they are the 100th class to enter the University."

Pozo - Seco Singers

Wilson Pickett
POZO-SECO SINGERS

At the first meeting of the class of 1970 executive council last May, a unanimous vote was taken by the council to uphold the tradition of a freshman-sophomore picnic.

The council voted to bring to this event entertainment of top caliber, thus making it one of the finest events, with no admission charge, ever held at UMass.

It was the decision of the council that the Pozo-Seco Singers were the kind of group that would appeal to all on campus. Thus, it came in to being that this big name folk group was invited to UMass.

The picnic will take place from 4 p.m. to 7:30 p.m. on the lawn by the Student Union after the UMass-Dartmouth game, September 30. Refreshments will be served, with the freshmen getting reduced rates.

"We felt that the class of 1970 should welcome the class of '71 with a little something extra," said sophomore class president Bruce Balboni concerning the price reduction for the frosh.

"And for everyone," Balboni continued, "we've brought the recording artists of "Time", "I Can Make It With You, Baby" and other hits, The Pozo-Seco Singers."

Large Turnout

SPA Holds First Meeting

The Students for Political Action (S.P.A.), the UMass New Left organization, held its first meeting last night with over 90 people present. The S.P.A., an affiliate of the national Students for Democratic Society, is known on and off campus for its vocal opposition to the Vietnam War, R.O.T.C., and some aspects of the present student government.

Last year, it held peace vigils, debates and participated in the New York Mobilization to End the War in Vietnam.

The meeting was primarily devoted to introducing new members to S.P.A. and planning an agenda for the coming academic year. In the open discussion of agenda proposals, over 41 suggestions were presented for consideration.

Included was a popular proposal to participate in the Oct. 21-22 Confront the Warmakers demonstration in Washington. It was agreed that the S.P.A. would consider this one of their more important actions of the year.

During the meeting, a spirited debate arose over the general direction of the S.P.A. One group proposed that major emphasis be on direct action, while another group favored educational programs, both internal and external. The result was the breakup of the meeting into three committees, each to prepare a program to present to the entire membership. These are the Education Committee, the Action Committee and the Campus Affairs Committee.

By and large, the participants agreed that there was a need for both Education and Action and the final S.P.A. program will probably include aspects of both.

At the close of the meeting, the membership voted the Action Committee authorization to organize a Vigil for Peace, anti-R.O.T.C. action and a side-walk

FlyingRedmenReorganize; Open to Entire University

The Flying Redmen have a new face—the face of the University. Since becoming an RSO organization last year, many changes have come about within the Redmen. A few of the changes in this championship organization may be of interest to the University community.

First, the team's membership is coming less from the military, and more from the University community as a whole. Thus the team is becoming a true representative of the University of Massachusetts.

Second, an internal reorganization is leading to the formation of a team support group in addition to the regular Redmen. This group, consisting of non-marching members, is vital to the smooth functioning of a trophy winning team.

Last, the team is actively looking for new members, both to march and to join the support groups. There are openings on the marching team, on the Administrative staff, and on the Operations group. There is something for almost anyone who would like to work with a winning team.

An information table will be set up in the S.U. lobby on Wednesday and Thursday afternoons

AMA Releases Statement

Study Shows Younger Drug Users

CHICAGO (AP)— The American Medical Association said Sunday there are indications that the use of marijuana may be spreading among high school students.

The AMA's Committee on Alcoholism and Drug Dependence said in a statement that it noted that urban areas and college towns attract those who participate in the drug traffic. The committee said about young people:

"It is in the nature of adolescence to seek new experiences, to question self, family, and society, to try on and discard new guises of behavior, to reconcile opposing pulls and strains, and to act like child and adult.

"Such experiences contribute to personal growth and ultimately to intellectual development and social progress, though in some instances the behavior may appear to some viewers as thoughtless, irresponsible, or rebellious."

The AMA statement said that no physical dependence or tolerance for marijuana has been demonstrated and it has not been shown as yet that marijuana causes any lasting mental or physical changes. The statement stressed, however, that marijuana is of concern as a medicolegal problem "because it is a drug, because its possession and distribution violate federal and many state laws and because even occasional use has psychiatric implications."

"Persons who use marijuana continually and as the symptomatic expression of psychological conflict, a means of gaining social acceptance, or a way of escaping painful experiences of anxiety or depression may be said to be psychologically dependent on the substance.

"Continuous use may be associated with the development of psychiatric illness, though few chronic users are admitted to psychiatric inpatient facilities."

The drug dependence committee said that persons physically dependent on other substances, such as heroin, "almost always have had experience with marijuana, although not necessarily prior to experiences with so-called hard drugs."

The AMA said that unlike narcotics, barbiturates and other sedatives, and amphetamines and other stimulants, marijuana has no known use in medical practice in most countries, including the United States.

"It is important for the physician to remember that a person who has a psychological dependence on marijuana is sick and deserving of understanding and treatment, even though he may have been involved in unlawful activity," the statement concluded.

Film Series Starts Tuesday

"A Montage of Film Forms," this year's University of Massachusetts film study series, will begin Tuesday, Sept. 26, it has been announced by program chairman Richard Stromgren of the UMass speech department.

The series will offer 12 Tuesday night film programs designed to bring to the academic community examples of early screen classics, contemporary features, experimentals, and documentaries. The series will be held in Mahar Auditorium.

Presentations will range from early Edison and Chaplin shorts to Michelangelo Antonioni's pre-"Blowup" color film, "The Red Desert." All are open to the public. Admission is by series tickets on sale in Bartlett Hall a week before opening and at the door on opening night.

The opening program, Tuesday, Sept. 26, at 8 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium, will be a group of short American and French films made between 1895 and 1915.

Arrangements are currently being made by Mr. Stromgren for a special second semester showing of the controversial British film, "The War Game," which was originally made for the British Broadcasting Corporation and then withheld from showing on the air.

Revelers Plan "Happening"

A unique "happening" is being planned for this Saturday, September 23, 1967, at 1:00 p.m. on the South Terrace of the Student Union. In honor of our first football game broadcast from Orono, Maine, the Revelers, in cooperation with the Scrolls, Maroon Keys, and Station WMUA, are presenting a campus-wide "Support the Team Day."

The Concert Series

For the same reason that people are afraid to ask questions in a class, many people also turn away or close their ears when they hear the term "classical" applied to music. It is true that, having listened to recordings, or having attended a concert, and having evaluated, critically, the performance, people might be turned off, so to speak. This is expected, and understood. On the other hand, at a concert, some people find in themselves another sense—repressed, perhaps, or just undiscovered—an urge and a tension that some pieces, or parts of some pieces, can bring to the surface. Happily enough, once the ball is set rolling, it can go on and on.

One of the reasons, I think, for the shying away from classical things is the feeling that they have little or no place in this happening world. Things classical last. A reason for favoring other-than-classical types of music is that one has the chance to hear them more often. The popular records played over and over again on the radio have the chance to set in, like rigor mortis, and to become, and remain (classically) part of the listener's memory. The anticipation of again hearing certain drummed-in pieces renews one's energy. First, it is the memory; then, it is the thought of living pleasurable moments over that creates the tension that extends life. By its relative inaccessibility alone (more people listen to WHYN than to WFCR), classical music has less chance of being heard, and "memorized," and liked or disliked. It is possible that contemporary music may prove itself classical; what is commonly referred to as classical music, though, has already proven itself.

I think it is agreed that every person likes some kind of music. It is sometimes helpful to know which kinds one does like.

During the coming year, you will have the opportunity to hear and see a variety of musicians perform on a variety of instruments: harpsichord, piano, cello, classical guitar, and combinations of these. A full symphony orchestra will also perform.

The Concert Association is bringing these musicians to the University: Fernando Valenti, Harpsichord, Wednesday, September 27, 1967; The Balsam-Kroll-Heifetz Trio, Piano, Violin, Cello, Sunday, October 1, 1967; The Yomiuri Nippon Symphony Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler conducting, Thursday, November 2, 1967; Claudio Arrau, Piano, Monday, December 11, 1967; Janos Starker, Cello, Friday, February 16, 1968; Andres Segovia, Classical Guitar, Tuesday, March 5, 1968; New York Pro Musica Medieval, Renaissance, & Baroque Music, Monday April 22 1968; and William Warfield, Baritone, Friday, May 3, 1968.

All the people, or groups, have established names for themselves. Arrau Segovia, Starker, and Valenti have the highest reputations because they are among the best.

The live concert is a full experience, much more dramatic than music recorded. The dynamics of sight add a dimension to the experience. And if the Yomiuri Nippon Symphony Orchestra will perform in full attire, despite the cage, the effect will be close to that of a happening.

William Warfield's performance will be in Bowker Auditorium. All the other concerts will be held in the Student Union Ballroom. All concerts will begin at 8:00 P.M. And all concerts are free, if the exchange tickets in the booklet each student here was given are turned in for admission tickets. This takes little effort. Admission to the public is $1.50 per concert.

To have 20,000 students in the Amherst-Hadley-Northampton area should mean that each concert will be "sold out." Each student should be interested only in the sense that the taste of something new, or the reinforcement of something old but unclear—in the concert hall or anywhere else—could give him more insight, could make his judgments of himself, of the people around him, and of art, more perceptive and more certain. Art can only be defined by experience. And so can people be better interpreted, and understood. An individual's place can become clearer.

It is not "in" to like classical music more than rock and soul. It can be said, though, that it is "in" to open one's ears to what is going on around him, and listen.

—THE EDITORS

Editors Note: Next week, there will be a two-page spread on the concert series, with photographs.

Viewpoint

Pepsi vs. Moxie

By BARRY HAZZARD

Recently, a Viewpoint appeared in the Daily Collegian concerning Botany 101. The article joyously proclaimed the arrival of a "Pepsi Generation Professor" to the UMass scene. It seems that a "young man named Drum" has incorporated several novel ideas into his presentation of Botany 101. I, along with many others, was captured by curiosity and decided to sit in on his next lecture. I was not disappointed. From the moment I walked into the unlit auditorium until the moment I left it, I participated in a unique experience. However, I am not writing in either praise or condemnation of Professor Drum; I am replying to the inferences made in Thursday's Viewpoint.

Last semester I was enrolled in Botany 101. The professor was Eugene Putala—a name made infamous on the UMass campus. It seems that Mr. Putala, too, was different; however, his Botany 101 course was not as 'entertaining' as the present course.

When I entered Botany 101, I did so with a degree of apprehension toward the professor and the course. I was as cold toward the idea of enjoying botany as the weather was outside. By the time spring had arrived, any apprehension I had once felt was gone.

Mr. Levco, in his Viewpoint, implied that previously Botany 101 had been boring, insignificant, and spoon-fed to the students. I can only say that Mr. Levco could never have attended one of Mr. Putala's lectures. From his very first confrontation with our cold, unreceptive eyes, Mr. Putala made an impression on us. He communicated to his audience a spirit and vitality toward his subject that few professors manage to achieve. I might add that his communication was complete; his enthusiasm rubbed off onto most of us.

It was the most rewarding course of my freshmen year. Botany 101, as presented by Mr. Putala, made me think, question, and wonder about all the "lights in the universe." Mr. Putala was a telescope that allowed me to see a world beyond my previous spectrum of light. I won't say that all the pictures I saw were crystal clear or even in focus, but at least I was given the chance to see a blurred image behind a formerly unchallenged barrier. In today's society, which has so many people constructing barriers, it is odd and rare to find a man with the capacity to tear them down.

Mr. Putala's course wasn't easy. Several times I left like the perennial drowning man going down for the third time. Fortunately, Mr. Putala wouldn't allow that. He was always there, ready and willing, to pull you up by the roots of your hair — if necessary. And, like the drowning man gasping for air, he made you reach out, to the utmost of your ability, to grasp a concept. The joy came when you reached that concept — when that particular "light of the universe" became yours. It was a struggle, but the fact of the matter is—Moxie is harder to swallow than Pepsi.

Campus Comment

To the Editor:

Apathy! The word itself has become an adulterated cliche, abused by so many collegiate editors. Frankly, gentlemen, I am nauseated by your taunting self-righteousness. Every editor at my Alma-mater accused me of apathy; and now, as a graduate student, I am labeled as I was before. I am fast becoming a neurotic Hester Prynne.

Leave me alone! Your phrases only clutter my mind and shade reality. I do not think as you do. Do not foist your ambitions upon me—I don't want them.

This letter itself is hypocritical, but I have been bludgeoned by your cries too long. I cannot remain silent. The college tradition of apathy has become analogous to the militant Negro. The effort has exceeded the level of subtle intelligence and common sense. The cry serves only to bring out fiery emotion devoid of reason.

Barry S. Timson
Graduate

Down This Way

The newspaper business would call this a column. It is not a financial column; I am not Sylvia Porter. Although it may be chatty at times, it is not a gossip column; I am not Ed Sullivan. It is a column about everything else. It will appear once a week, Wednesdays, unless special articles urge it out of its place, or unless I am fired.

I would like to say that it will not be dull, but I don't know that. If it is too dull, I will discontinue it and write for some other publication, say, The New Yorker.

It will be about different things — ideas and people—that concern people, and, only in a larger sense, will cope with institutions, that is, to the degree that one must, because of the nature of the times.

I write when the spirit moves me, on whatever I feel like writing about at the time, and I will pass on to you some of the things that I think are worth it. I may write about lights, being slow, music, quotes, writing, Summer or Autumn, love or death.

Some, but maybe not all, of the articles, will be written in an informal, necessarily limiting, style, using the editorial "we," that style in which there are plenty of commas, and in which words like "ourself" and phrases like "We are the person" take a part.

You will notice frequent use of words and expressions—"as the case may be," "things," "that" (instead of "which," "of which," "by which," etc.) — which one cannot always avoid.

If the aim of writing is to clear things up, to order, to simplify, then this is what I intend to do. It will not always work, and, as everyone else, I think, I would like to read comments on my work, from the President on up, or from the President on down, or whatever.

Henry David Thoreau wrote: "I fear chiefly lest my expression may not be extra-vagant enough, may not wander far enough the narrow limits of my daily experience, so as to be adequate to the truth of which I have been convinced . . . Why level downward to our dullest perception always, and praise that as common sense? The commonest sense is the sense of men asleep, which they express by snoring."

This, I think, should be spread around.

—Paul Robert Hallock

UMass Faculty Salaries Rated High

A report detailing faculty salary information at UMass and including a survey of faculty salaries at selected colleges in the northeast has been published by the University's Office of Institutional Studies.

Twenty-eight schools participated in the survey for the academic year 1966-1967. Of these all the data is confidential and identified only by code number except in the case of UMass.

Although the University ranked low among the institutions in terms of fringe benefits, in terms of median base salary the University in 1966-1967 ranked considerably higher: eighth for professor (that is, only seven institutions paid more), sixth for associate professor, first for assistant professor, and fifteenth for instructor.

According to this calculation, UMass should have a deluge of applicants for positions of assistant professor.

The median salary paid here for professor in the spring of 1967 was $17,036; for associate professor, $13,136; for assistant professor, $10,736; and for instructor, $8,236. These figures include increases over 1966-1967.

However, the addition of fringe benefits changes the picture substantially.

The institutions in the survey paying the largest amount of compensation (base salary and fringe benefits) had for their medians in 1966-1967: $21,384 for professor, $14,583 for associate professor, $11,103 for assistant professor, and $9,214 for instructor.

By the spring of 1967 for the University's 158 professors the compensation range (base salary and $136 worth of health insurance) was $12,336 to $24,136.

For 163 associate professors, the minimum compensation was $10,536 and the maximum $19,736.

For 270 assistant professors, the range was $7,936 to $14,436.

For 132 instructors, the range was $6,536 to $8,236.

The survey part of the report was prepared by Tufts University involving the following institutions: Bates, Boston College, Boston U., Bowdoin, Brandeis, Clark, Colby, Colgate, UConn, Dartmouth, Hamilton, Lafayette, UMe., Mt. Holyoke, Northeastern, Princeton, U.R.I., Rochester, Smith Swarthmore, Trinity, Tufts, UVt., Wellesley, Wesleyan, Williams, Worcester Polytechnic.

Maoist Forces Victorious In Anhwei Province

TOKYO (AP) — Mao Tse-tung's leadership claimed victory Tuesday over rebels in Anhwei Province and attacked Li Pao-hua by name as their leader.

Li is the first secretary of the Communist party committee in Anhwei, a populous province bestriding the Yangtze River in eastern China. The Maoist-controlled Radio Peking declared anti-Mao schemes by Li and "a handful of his followers have been smashed and the situation in the province is excellent" in favor of Mao's drive to oust President Liu Shao-chi.

In addition to heading the provincial committee, Li has served as third secretary of the Communist party's East China Bureau. The broadcast did not say whether he had been purged. He is a friend of the party's general secretary, Teng Hsiao-ping.

By the Peking account 200,000 supporters of Mao, including an unspecified number of troops, gathered in the provincial capitol of Hofei on Sept. 12 to rally behind Mao's cultural revolution, the campaign to purge President Liu and his supporters.

Also broadcast was an article in Red Flag, theoretical organ of the Chinese Communist party, appealing again to workers to refrain from armed struggles and not to let violence undermine production.

Old - Fashioned Hoedown Tonight

Heymakers, what in the world are Heymakers?

Well, Heymakers are a group of students who are keeping a great form of American folk expression in existence at the University.

What type of folk expression?

"When America was predominantly an agricultural nation, it became traditional to have a party at the farm of the new arrival. The tradition which usually followed a barn-raising or haying was commonly called a hoedown where a square dance was held.

What's the matter with square dancing? It's fun, it's a challenge, and besides it's the one type of dancing that is singly American.

This week, in conjunction with Gov. John A. Volpe's proclamation declaring the week, Sept. 17-Sept. 22, SQUARE DANCE WEEK, the UMass Heymakers are holding their first free introductory square dance lessons. The lessons will be held at the Student Union Ballroom, Wed., Sept. 20 at 7:30 p.m. Everyone is invited.

Belchertown Volunteers

Barbara, a 20-year-old girl, is being taught to read by a Belchertown Volunteer. Bill, 17, plays basketball every Saturday under the guidance of another volunteer. A third volunteer instructs a group of children in the art of puppetry.

Barbara, Bill, and hundreds of their "classmates" at the Belchertown State School for the Mentally Retarded greatly appreciate the time and effort given by volunteers to help brighten the drab lives of retarded people.

A student does not need any skills or experience to be a Belchertown Volunteer. The mere presence of a volunteer serves as a stimulus and source of help for children like Barbara.

Every Saturday at 1:00 p.m. in the North Commons parking lot and at 1:10 in front of the Newman Center a bus will leave for the Belchertown State School and will return at 4:30.

This is your chance to gain practical experience in nursing, teaching, or guidance, and have an enjoyable and satisfying Saturday off Campus. For further information contact:

Education Survey Covers State

by PAT PETOW
Staff Reporter

"The Commonwealth of Massachusetts has always been a center of private higher education" is the way a recent report of the UM Office of Institutional Studies begins.

During the past few years, UM has increased the number of out-of-state undergrad students at the Amherst campus, and a survey was undertaken "to see if a similar trend is taking place at other institutions within the Commonwealth."

The results of the survey completed by 69 private institutions were released last week.

Enrollment figures for the years '55, '60, and '66 showed a general decline in the average proportion of Massachusetts residents in the private colleges of the state with the greatest reduction in the larger institutions.

Despite the major finding, according to U.S. Office of Education statistics, "No other state has a higher proportion of students enrolled in privately controlled institutions."

An alternative way of expressing this statement is that, in 1965, only 26% of the students attending college in Massachusetts were enrolled in a public institution, a smaller percentage than in any other state.

But one must also consider the fact that only three other states (California, New York, and Pennsylvania) have more accredited private institutions than the Commonwealth.

Another factor is that states like Wyoming with only one college, and that one public, have a 100% enrollment in public institutions.

Of all the students in college in California, 88% are in public institutions while of all the students attending college in New York, 49% are in public institutions. Pennsylvania, meanwhile, has a mere 29% in its public institutions.

Another finding reported was that for 1955, 1960, and 1966 "all respondents under religious control had a larger proportion of Massachusetts residents on their respective campuses than the non-church-related institutions."

In another area of the study, it was concluded that "the representation of Massachusetts' residents between Metropolitan and Non-Metropolitan Boston colleges and universities has tended toward equalization."

For the Metropolitan Boston area the heaviest representation of Massachusetts' residents is in those institutions with over 5,000 undergrads—the lowest-in-state representation in those institutions with under 500 students.

For the state the average percentage representation of Massachusetts' residents among undergrads in 61 private institutions was 50.4% in 1955 but only 43.9% in 1966.

It was also reported that:

"Coeducational, private institutions enroll a rather heavy concentration of Massachusetts' residents. Private colleges and universities for men only averaged slightly less than one Massachusetts' resident in every three undergrads during 1955-66. Private institutions for women only have a somewhat larger representation.

UMass Prof. Lecturing At U. Malawi, Africa

Dr. Walace G. Black, University of Massachusetts professor of veterinary and animal sciences, is presently on a two-year assignment to the agricultural college at the University of Malawi, Africa.

A UMass faculty member since 1954, he is serving as a lecturer in animal sciences in Malawi.

UMass is now in the third year of an agricultural development program at the East African nation under a U.S. Agency for International Development contract. The University trains Malawi agriculturalists at the Amherst campus and has a six-man team working on development of agriculture and agricultural education in Malawi.

The University of Malawi opened in 1965, a year after the country became an independent nation in the British Commonwealth. It was formerly the British protectorate of Nyasaland.

Dr. Constantine J. Gilgut, UMass extension professor and plant pathologist, is directing the Malawi agricultural college.

Dr. Black is an Arlington native and a 1948 graduate of the University of Wisconsin. He received his M.S. in genetics and his Ph.D. in genetics and zoology from Wisconsin in 1952.

He joined the UMass faculty as an associate professor in the animal husbandry department in 1954. In 1958, he was named professor in the department of veterinary and animal sciences. From 1963 to 1966, he served as leader of radiological monitoring for instructors in the University's civil defense training program.

Special Forces Unit Celebrates Anniversary

The Bay State Special Forces of the Army ROTC program, are initiating their eighth year of operations this fall. This makes the "black berets" of the Univ. of Mass. campus the oldest student counter-guerilla unit in the northeastern schools sponsoring Army ROTC.

This volunteer unit, which totals up to 50 men at full strength, is open for application by all Freshmen and Sophomores and members of the Univ. of Mass Cadet Brigade.

Applicants, who in past years have numbered around 100, are selected on the basis of a physical proficiency test and a personal interview.

When consolidated, the unit is lead by a team of 6 juniors and 4 seniors, under the command of Cadet LTC Frederick Anderson, and is advised by Army Major Ronald W. Gingras, a former member of the Green Berets.

The purpose of the BSSF is not only to serve as a vehicle for special guerilla and counter-guerilla training ordinarily unavailable to the average ROTC cadet, but also to provide a stiff test of an individual's physical endurance, and his leadership capabilities.

The Bay State Special Forces will conduct their preliminary selections starting at 11:15, Thursday, 21 Sept. 67, with the PCPT test. Qualified applicants are urged to report promptly to the lower athletic field in gym clothes and sneakers.

Conference '20 Formula' Still Intact

Athletic Council Eyes Stadium Expansion

By TOM FITZGERALD
Sports Editor

A discouraging word on Yankee Conference scholarship regulations and the initiation of a junior varsity program in baseball, basketball and lacrosse highlighted the year's first meeting of the University Athletic Council Monday night at the Lord Jeffrey Inn.

The nine-man council, which meets monthly, also discussed expansion of UMass athletic field, particularly Alumni Stadium, and the ABC-TV "game-of-the-week" telecast of the Dartmouth game Sept. 30.

Warren P. McGuirk, dean of the school of physical education and director of athletics, reported that the proposed increase in the Conference scholarship limit from 20 to 25 had been rejected at a meeting of the presidents of the six New England state universities.

The presidents had met in June to consider the proposal, which had been unanimously approved by the Conference athletic directors earlier in the month. UMass officials have considered the so-called "20 Formula," which went into effect with the class of 1970, too harsh a restriction on Conference athletic programs.

UMass President John W. Lederle voted for an increase in the limit to 25, but the proposal was defeated, 4-2.

The "20 Formula" forbids each school's athletic departments from awarding more than 20 full scholarships or the equivalent in partial grants each year. Its existence, many observers feel, may eventually cause UMass to withdraw from the Conference in search of "higher game."

The presidents, however, removed one restriction from the Conference scholarship format, the rule that prevents a school from offering the scholarship of one athlete who leaves school for any reason other than graduation to another athlete, regardless of his class.

In other business, a junior varsity program, beginning this year with baseball, basketball and lacrosse, was announced by McGuirk. He said, "This will be a wonderful opportunity for youngsters to take part instead of just sitting." The program would also give coaches the opportunity of observing more players in action, he said.

McGuirk also expressed his desire for a "minimum" of six JV football games next fall.

The council discussed the fact that the stadium may prove to be grossly undersized within a few years as the UMass student body swells. As a first step, an additional 8000 seats will be added in the near future to the east side of the structure, which was completed two years ago.

Another area of expansion is a 62-acre site near the Boyden Building, which in two years will contain five soccer fields, five lacrosse fields and five football fields, according to McGuirk. He said that the U-Mass track will finally be ready next spring.

It was reported at the meeting that the American Broadcasting Company will send a 75-man team to cover the Dartmouth football game. Commentators will be Keith Jackson and former Red Sox star Jackie Jenson.

Rosters for dormitory touch football teams will not be accepted at the intramurals office in Boyden Building after 5 p.m. today.

B.U. in Yan-Con?

An application by Boston University for membership in the Yankee Conference was rejected during the summer by officials of the six conference schools, it was learned at Monday's meeting of the UMass Athletic Council.

Dean Warren McGuirk of the School of Physical Education, also director of athletics, said the application was turned down on the basis that B.U. is not a land grant state university.

The addition of the University of Delaware and Rutgers University, the state university of New Jersey, to the conference has been under consideration but no action on the matter was taken at the meeting of the conference athletic directors or the subsequent meeting of the six presidents, McGuirk said.

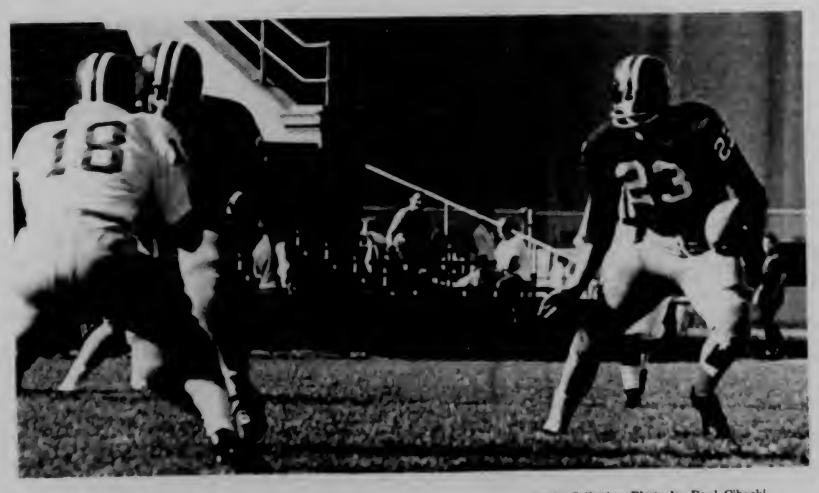
Fusia Hopes UM Defense Stiffens Against Maine

It takes a worried man to sing a worried song. And if Coach Vic Fusia's tune this week after the Redmen's dismal defensive performance in the Harvard scrimmage wasn't exactly melancholy, it was hardly joyous.



"I was very dissatisfied with our total performance," he said, citing "some mediocre performances on the part of some who we know have ability."

The scrimmage helped straighten out the line-up for Saturday's season opener against Maine. Fusia's Redmen will be favored against the Black Bears but grid iron observers will recall that the last two games with Maine, one a victory and one loss, were decided by a total of five points.

Last year UMass squeaked by, 10-7, on a wobbly field goal by Bruce Cochrane in the closing seconds. The ball passed through the uprights about a foot over the cross-bar.

In 1965, Maine won, 10-8, when one of the Black Bears recovered a fumble in the end-zone for a touchdown.

Fusia did have good words for several players after their showing in the scrimmage. Junior fullback Cochrane is "rapidly becoming a fine blocker," the coach said. He also said Bill Carty "is coming into his own."

Knock on Wood

Gridmen Avoiding Emergency Ward

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Staff Reporter

The success of any athletic team often depends on the number of its injuries.

Head Football Coach Vic Fusia puts it this way, "Let's assume that you have adequate personnel on hand. The ball must bounce in your direction some of the time and your squad, and especially key personnel, must stay free from injury. If this is done, success is eminent."

Last year's UMass football squad was hit extremely hard by key injuries. Every starter except tackle Jim Mitcheli sustained one sort of an injury or another.

As a result, the six victories compiled by the 1966 contingent were inevitably by slim margins.

"We had our share of injuries last year," remarked Fusia, "It should last us for the next five or six years."

As far as injuries are concerned, the 1967 Redmen are in much better shape than last year's team. "We have lost two regulars in (Don) Durkin and (Randy) Robinson, but the rest of the squad is in relatively good condition," Fusia reported.

Durkin Robinson

Don Durkin is a 6'3", 215-pound senior from Woburn, had been a letterman at halfback for the past two seasons. He accounted for 30 points last year and was the team's third leading ball carrier.

In his place, Fusia is trying out Tim Driscoli, John Tutino, and John Decembrele. "The competition here is very keen with Tim a little ahead of the other two," added Fusia.

Randy Robinson, a 6', 210-pound junior from Belle Harbor, N.Y., was employed as a defensive end last year, but had been switched to linebacker for the upcoming season. Last year Randy's pass interceptions were obvious factors in Redmen victories over Vermont and Rhode Island.

"In his spot, we've been working several individuals. At the moment, (Dennis) Gray and (Larry) Fortunoff seem to have adapted quite quickly to this position. Don Porter and Ernie Smith are always available," Fusia commented.

Our squad is in relatively good physical shape," he concluded and paused, "In comparison to last year, we're in great shape.

Freshmen Shun Ticket Office As Opener Nears

Where are the freshmen? The question was voiced by Robert O'Connell, business manager of the athletic department, at the meeting of the University Athletic Council Monday night.

Although the exchange of coupons for football tickets to the Dartmouth game, a week from Saturday, is running as expected, O'Connell reported a remarkably low turn-out of freshmen thus far.

A special section of the ticket office in the Boyden Building has been set aside for frosh tickets.

Besides the new large office, two changes in the issuing of tickets are in effect this year. One is the elimination of priority by classes. Seniors will no longer get first crack at the tickets, followed by juniors, sophs and freshmen.

The second change is an end to the reserving of tickets for a frat or a large group by an individual, even if he has coupon books and identification cards for all concerned. A student may now obtain tickets for himself and one other person by producing both books and ID cards, but he may not hold any tickets to be picked up later.

The latter change was necessitated, O'Conell said, because of the large number of tickets for each game that remained unclaimed.

Greenough Students Protest Poor Dorm Conditions

By PETE WARD, Staff Reporter

At the request of the residents of Greenough House, the Student Senate Public Relations Committee has begun an investigation of the reported sub-standard living conditions of the Central Area dormitory.

The complaints originated from a group of 35 Greenough residents who reportedly were not satisfied with official explanations for the delay in repairs and improvements in their residence. Under the leadership of Counselor Dave Knowlton, these students called the Senate and requested the aid of Student Government, the Daily Collegian, and WMUA in presenting their case and seeking redress of their grievances.

In response to their request, Senate President Jim Collins and Public Relations Chairman Pete Ward attended a Monday night meeting of the concerned Greenough students to hear their story and help them plan action to improve the situation. While there, the two Senate representatives were given a tour of the "disaster" areas. They reported finding conditions that should not be allowed to exist in any living area.

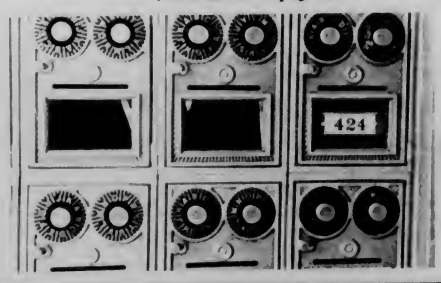
In the regular dorm rooms, damage ranged from broken windows and shades to missing dressers and screens. Many rooms had locks that were no longer functional. The cause of the extensive damage is attributed to the summer Upward Bound program for underpriviledged high school students. Although most of the Greenough residents agreed the program was a desirable one, they were disturbed by the failure of the Upward Bound Administration to assume immediate responsibility for the damage which resulted from the program. Some of the students reported finding dart and BB marks covering their doors and walls.



On the first floor of the dorm, the students found locks and doors damaged, totally in some cases. In addition, the area for summer storage was rifled of articles ranging from furniture to a portable tape recorder.

During the meeting of the Greenough students and the Senate representatives, it was pointed out that the dorm rooms were all painted last spring, yet now many rooms have walls covered with filth, obscenities, and marks that are reminiscent of a five-year old mens room.

Another problem that the students brought up involved a University program that has housed some special students on the first floor of Greenough. According to

Housing Office Pledges "Men in Greenough" Today

Director of Housing John Welles yesterday told the chairman of the Senate Public Relations Committee Pete Ward, that there would be maintenance men beginning work in Greenough House today, and that everything possible to facilitate rapid solution of Greenough's problem would be done, if it was in his power to do it. He expressed approval of the student demands and stated that without such student pressure, little might have been done. The priority list is long, and pressure can be the factor that decides which project comes first.

Commenting on the loss of Greenough's first floor study areas to special students, Mr. Welles stated that according to the Physical Plant Department, the Special Students were scheduled to move out of Greenough into their regular residence by the end of October or at the latest, by the first of November. The reason they were put in Greenough was that their scheduled residence was behind its completion date.

Also commenting on the student action, Mr. John Burke, Area Coordinator for the Central Area, said that student protest of such conditons was needed to spur action. He said he was glad to see the students take such an interest in improving the situation. He noted that without strong student government on the residence and Senate level, he has little to back up his requests to maintenance for action on Central Area problems.

Mr. Burke, who is known for his efforts to help the students, expressed the hope that this affair would encourage the residents of other dorms in the area to form strong governments and act aggressively in the pursuit of their interests.

Senate PR Committee's Statement to All Students

We are pleased to see the students of Greenough decide to take action. However, we regret that all too often the students of this University unite and work to extend and protect their privileges and rights only when a point of crisis is reached. Even now there are some students in Greenough who were saying only Yesterday "There's nothing we can do." This is not so.

The students of this University have a great deal of power if they care to use it. We must not always be "caught sleeping" when a crisis breaks. If we were united and continually exercising our power, many of these problems would never have a chance to arise.

In the past we have seen graduation fees, YAHOO problems, and academic scheduling almost slip by us to our not being prepared to act when decisive action is called for.

Your part in strong and aggressive student government starts in the dorm. YOU must elect and control your house government. You must be sure they do more than a few open houses and dances. Strong house government is the base for building a powerful student government.

The other major effort you must make is to elect responsible people to the student senate, or run yourself. You must be sure your senator is out to do the job for you.

Finally, if you have a gripe or see a problem that needs action, you must be willing to act. That means you can't afford to keep quiet when your campus life is affected. We urge all students to follow the example of the students of Greenough who acted.

Princeton Students Publish Book; Urge Colleges To Study Drugs

PRINCETON, N.J. (AP)—A book by a group of Princeton University students urged the nation's colleges to openly study the problem of drugs on campus.

The book makes no judgments about legal or moral aspects of drug use. It offers medical and sociological comments about various drugs, ranging from "pep pills" to LSD, noting that use of most of these is illegal.

"It is not for this report to debate this legality," the authors say, "merely to observe it." They expressed hope the work would lead to more study of drugs on college campuses.

The book, titled "Psychedelics and the College student," will be sold on other college campuses through the Princeton University Press, a publishing venture not officially connected with the university.

The book was written and compiled by a committee of 12 Princeton students founded by Kim J. Masters of New York City. Masters said he got the idea last year after the first campus drug arrest in the 220-year history of Princeton.

Students, aided by three Princeton faculty members, did research in magazine articles, books and other publications. Their sources ranged from Playboy Magazine to scientific journals.

Pres. Lederle To Speak Tuesday At Annual University Convocation

University of Massachusetts President John W. Lederle will deliver a major address and the University will make its annual awards to outstanding faculty at the University Convocation Tuesday, Sept. 26, at 10:10 a.m. on the Goodell Library lawn.

Students, faculty, administration and friends of the University are invited to the open air convocation. In case of rain, the ceremony will be held in the Student Union.

Robed faculty and staff will begin the convocation with an academic procession. The invocation will be by Rabbi Martin Kowal, UMass chaplain to Jewish students, and greetings of the student body will be given by James G. Collins, president of the UMass Student Senate.

PRESIDENT JOHN LEDERLE

President Lederle's address "Freedom, Order and University Growth," will be followed by the presentation of the annual Distinguished Teacher Awards. Given for "manifest excellence in the art of teaching and outstanding devotion to the cause of education," the award carries a $1,000 stipend. Selection is made by an all-University faculty committee.

All University classes scheduled during the convocation have been cancelled so that students and faculty may attend.

Student Life Committee Suggests New Policy for Open House

The Student Life Committee, a recommending body to the Dean of Students and the Associate Dean of Students, wishes to make the following recommendations relative to the question of open houses after intensive deliberation last Spring.

They originated in the Men's Affairs Committee of the Student Senate and are offered for general information. These recommendations, "made in recognition of the educational value to students of their assuming the greatest possible responsibility for their total development," are as follows:

1) We recommend that each residence hall government be allowed to determine its own unique policy on the frequency, duration, social conduct and door policy with respect to open houses. Residence hall governments may establish these open houses as open or closed social events and may establish policies relating to the registration of guests. Each open house shall be voted on separately by a majority of the residents, either at a house meeting or at section meetings. These votes shall occur at least one week before each event, followed by reasonable public notice of the event.

2) We recommend that the present policy of closing residence halls during specific hours (Sunday-Thursday: 12.00 midnight — 7:00 AM; Friday and Saturday: 1:00 AM — 7:00 AM) be continued. Members of the opposite sex must be out of the residence halls during these hours.

3) We recommend that implementation of the preceding take place by the following three steps:

a. The present University policies on open houses shall remain in force on an individual basis in each residence hall until that residence hall changes its policy as outlined below.

b. Each residence hall desiring a change in policy shall go to the Student Life Committee for study and recommendations and, upon final written approval of the office of the Dean of Students, shall go into effect. It is to be understood that the Student Life Committee will in no way modify the policies presented, but only satisfy itself that the requirements of all the above provisions have been met. It is to be further understood that this procedure shall be repeated for any policy amendments that may from time to time be proposed.

4) It is expected that fraternities and sororities will adhere to the preceding policies.

However, these are only recommendations to the Dean of Students who has referred them to the Student Affairs Committee of the Faculty Senate. There, they will hopefully gather further support in the near future.

"The Student Life Committee is composed of the following people:

James Burke, Chairman, and Area Coordinator of the Central Area; Paul Brubacher, Area Coordinator of Southwest Area; Isabelle Gonon, Area Coordinator of the Northeast Area; H. Leland Varley, Master, Orchard Hill Residential College and Professor of English; John Hunt, Associate Master of Southwest Residential College and Professor of English; William Richards, Assistant Dean of Men; Frederic Hartwell, Senator from Webster and Chairman of the S.G.A. Committee of the Senate; Stephen Nault, Senator from George Washington Upper (now living in MacKimmie) and Chairman of the Men's Affairs Committee of the Senate; Elinor Needle, Senator from Field and Chairman of the Women's Affairs Committee of the Senate; Susan Tracy, Senator from Hamlin and member of Women's Affairs Committee; Jacqueline Hall, former Senator and Chairman of Women's Affairs Committee; One student vacancy, yet to be appointed.

Christian Leader to Speak On Activism and Apathy

Extremes of activism and apathy characterize many of our churches in the country today. Worse, though, many churches are characterized by a comfortable, middle-of-the-road, noncommital attitude in spiritual and secular affairs.

Civil rights, the war on poverty, ecumenism, missions in our community and in the world—to which of these courses should we, as Christians, rally?

Christian responsibility will be the issue discussed by Dr. Donald Ewing, pastor of the Trinitarian Congregational Church in Wayland, Mass. on Friday, September 22 at 7:15 P.M. in the Council Chambers, Student Union.

Dr. Ewing will present the Biblical teachings on the topic, relevant to our world as students and Christians. All are welcome to attend.

The event is sponsored by Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship, an interdenominational Christian organization concerned primarily with presenting the relevance of Jesus Christ in the lives of college students.

WMUA Presents "Campus Politics"

This Friday at 7:00 on WMUA, a new program, Campus Politics will present the first in a weekly series designed to keep students up on happenings in the various governmental agencies on campus.

Host Pete Ward will review major issues in the Student Senate, Faculty Senate, Class Government and other agencies.

This Friday, the program will cover the situation at Greenough House, the state of open house rules, the present state of Yahoo, the campus humor magazine, and other issues.

The program is part of the continuing effort of WMUA to increase its coverage of student events and help the students keep abreast of situations and issues that can affect their life at UM.

Beulah Continues With Mighty Power

BROWNSVILLE, Tex. (AP) — Hurricane Beulah, one of the mightiest storms in history, slammed multi million-dollar destruction into the lower Texas coast, Wednesday, spreading death and havoc.

The brawny hurricane did her worst at Port Isabel and Brownsville before dawn, blasting ashore with 160-mile-an-hour wind at her center. Hurricane-force blasts hit Corpus Christi, 160 miles up the coast, before sundown.

But the killer of 29 persons since her birth in the Atlantic 12 days ago was losing her force in her trip up the Texas coastal plain.

Entire communities were isolated.

Electric power was cut off to almost all the storm-hit region.

Some evacuees began leaving for their homes but Red Cross officials at Brownsville warned of dangerous flooding, tornadoes from the still—mighty storm and downed power lines. Food was running short in the Brownsville shelters.

Red Cross officials in Brownsville said it would be several days before the damage could be estimated at this tip-of-Texas city.

The fall meeting of the AAUW (American Association of University Women) will be held on Thursday, September 28th at 7:30 p.m. in the Memorial Hall Lounge, University of Massachusetts, Amherst. The Association Meeting will be a Welcome to New Members, and a History of the Branch and Reports on the National Convention will be given. Anyone interested is urged to attend.

Security Council Divided On Closed Door Meetings

By CHARLES STORER

UNITED NATIONS (AP)—Delegates to the U. N. General Assembly were divided in their views on a suggestion of Secretary-General U Thant that the Security Council hold periodic closed-door meetings to deal with major world problems.

The proposal by the secretary-general was being discussed in the corridors Wednesday as the assembly, which opened for a three-month session Tuesday, began organizing its work.

Thant suggested in the introduction to his annual report that the council make use, for the first time, of a provision in the U. N. Charter that the council "shall hold periodic meetings" to discuss, as Thant put it, "matters relating to international peace and security."

Thant's idea was that the meetings be initiated by foreign ministers of the 15 member nations, most of whom are here for the opening of the assembly.

It was understood that when Thant first raised the idea for periodic council meetings at a luncheon of Security Council members last month, he suggested that it might be a route to a settlement of the war in Vietnam.

Many delegates, asked about the plan, however, continued to believe that the United Nations could take no fruitful action to settle that conflict so long as the United States continued to bomb North Vietnam and Hanoi continued to reject any U. N. involvement in a settlement.

But, at the same time, they saw such council meetings as a possible means of approaching an agreement on Middle East problems.

Ambassador Gopalaswami Parthasarathi of India, president of the council this month, said he thought it was "a very good idea."

"Of course," he added, however, "it depends on the responses of the states."

He said he had had no discussions with other council members about it so far.

The Soviet Union and France, it was understood, were cool to Thant's idea while the United States and Britain were guarded but willing to go along with it.

U. S. Ambassador Arthur J. Goldberg will give the U. S. position on Vietnam and other major world issues in a speech to the assembly Thursday, and the Soviet Union also is expected to give careful attention to Vietnam when Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko speaks to the assembly Friday.

Volpe Insurance Plan Blasted

BOSTON (AP) — The American Mutual Insurance Alliance charged Wednesday that Gov. John A. Volpe's financial responsibility automobile insurance plan will "bring chaos to metropolitan areas and will impose higher costs on motorists."

The Volpe plan was passed by the Senate Tuesday night on a 25-11 roll call vote. It would repeal the present compulsory insurance system. Drivers who did not wish to purchase insurance could pay $50 into a special fund from which claims would be paid.

The insurance group issued a statement saying the Volpe proposal would put an estimated 200,000 uninsured motorists on the road and would make the insured drivers pay for the injuries and damaged caused.

The alliance urged the legislature to appoint a blue ribbon study committee to determine the implications of the Volpe plan. The group also urged the lawmakers to enact the insurance companies' so-called merit rating plan originally proposed in July.

"Our companies," the statement said, "stand ready to put this plan into effect when policies are renewed in January, 1968, if the legislature gives its approval."

The merit-rating plan would offer lower rates for accident-free drivers.

Israeli and Egyptian Troops Break Truce in Suez Battle

(AP) — Israeli and Egyptian troops battled across the Red Sea end of the Suez Canal Wednesday. The truce-breaking fight coincided with the opening in New York of a U.N. General Assembly session at which the Middle East crisis is a prime issue.

A Tel Aviv spokesman said Israeli tank gunners spotted eight patrol boats moving down the 100-yd.-wide canal toward Port Taufiq with armed and helmeted Egyptian soldiers and sank three, dumping about 45 men into the water.

Egypt denied this version. It said Egyptian guns opened up with counterfire after the Israelis, without provocation, lobbed shells into Port Taufiq and the nearby city of Suez.

A Cairo communique said no Egyptian military installations were hit, but two houses and a power station were damaged. The semiofficial Middle East News Agency said five civilians were wounded.

"Reports claiming there were Egyptian boats in the canal at the time are absolutely untrue," a Cairo spokesman said.

Israel's armed forces swept across the Sinai Desert to the eastern bank of the canal in the Arab-Israeli war of June 5-10. There have been frequent firefights since along the 114-mile-long waterway.

The most serious incident, a heavy 7-hr. artillery duel, erupted Sept. 4. U.N. observers reported later this was stirred up

Your Gripes Will Be Heard

Few students who have spent the last eleven or so days at the University of Massachusetts would deny that we must deal with an administration which is bureaucratically organized.

Yet far too many students would also have to admit that they lack the tools for dealing with this bureaucracy. The student body usually considers its position as one lacking a base of influence.

But in reality the only thing the students lack is the knowledge that a collection of agencies and organizations on campus operate for their benefit.

In medieval days, students created their own universities, hired the professors, and certain staff people to aid them in their efforts at study. When they didn't like an instructor, he was fired.

Today, there are student housing offices, deans of men and women, student medical facilities, student dining facilities and other agencies operated by the University for their benefit.

It is generally assumed that you can depend on each of the student-oriented offices for basic services. However, it is also common opinion that you can't expect more than minimal service.

This is not so.

Last year the dining commons served "good" steak and yesterday, a group of men at Greenough experienced the satisfaction of their Student Senate working to prod their administration to promise correction of poor living conditions.

We hope it is also satisfying to assure you that the Daily Collegian pen and camera will demand that the administrative and student government promises made will be called out.

We salute the residents of Greenough whose "gripes" are outstanding and obvious to the casual observer. But we are also ready to stand behind other equally-justified complaints and requests.

After all, we are one of those agencies and organizations that the interests of the students have created and always motivate.

A Vietnam Proposal

by BILL SACHEREK, Editorial Staff

The best possible settlement for world peace that can be derived from the conflict in Vietnam is one which the Vietnamese determine without military intervention by foreign powers.

I suggest that the U.S. withdraw its troops and cut off all military aid to the Saigon regime. I would also urge that the U.S. withdraw recognition of the Saigon government and adopt a position that both the Hanoi and Saigon governments are engaged in a civil war to determine which faction shall eventually rule Vietnam. The U.S. should withhold dipiomatic recognition of these two contesting regimes until such time that one of them gains complete control over the entire country. Lastly, I propose that we offer a program of economic assistance on the order of a Marshall Plan to the governments of Southeast Asia with Vietnam included in this plan regardless of the regime in control of Vietnam.

This last proposal should be the back of a new policy which should stress the desire of the U.S. to see independent nations develop themselves without adopting a distinct ideology. This policy of non-alignment could only be accomplished by a united Vietnam if the U. S. would be willing to aid the economic development of Vietnam without expecting a great deal in return. In this way, the U.S. could undermine the influence of the communists' appeal for unity against the West by creating a situation whereby a developing Asian state will not be forced to depend solely on communist states if it happens to be socialist in nature.

I believe that in our desire to contain communism we have panicked and adopted a negative policy that attempts to stop popular movements which communists have infiltrated. I think that my above proposals are of a positive nature which challenge the communists for leadership of these movements and where they are in control of these movements it offers them more flexibility to break from the Peking or Moscow line.

Campus Comment

On Critique

To the Editor:

Critique, the magazine that purported to be the course evaluation guide of the University, is indeed defunct; the rats who deserted this sinking ship long ago decided that an explanation of The End was due, but at this time I feel differently. If you have been aware enough to be reading the Daily Collegian editorial page, you know why a magazine that had potential to be the most important on campus is now extinct. If you haven't been reading the newspaper, you also damn well know, indeed, intuitively you know why the magazine is gone. At this very moment, this momentous occasion, the six staff members of Critique feel justified in saying "the hell with you, people. If you don't give a damn, we don't give a damn, not any more, not after a full year's effort to gain a staff, and failing in that, to publish anyway."

The next time I hear anyone complain about the quality and/or quantity of any student publication, I just may blow my mind and kill. How long, how many times, how many different ways do you have to be reminded of student apathy before you finally realize what it means? While we don't absolve ourselves of all (or any) responsibility in this perennial crisis, we're not going to pull any more punches. If Spectrum should fail. . .(hell, maybe you don't deserve any thing at all. Do you people have any idea what Education means ?)

If anyone desires to take over Editorship of Critique he/she is welcome to it. Good luck.

For those faculty members who generously gave up class time to help us out, and who have yet to see any tangible results of the past year and one-half's effort, I make this offer: if you would like the questionnaires (and data sheets if available) from your class, please write to me, care of RSO #345, Student Union; I will try to return as much material as possible. But please send in your requests immediately, as Critique no longer has an office, and the junk is cluttering up the hallways.

I wish to thank those few staff members who did give so much time last year, and those faculty and administration fellows who cooperated with us despite our obvious handicaps; to those caught up in the academic rat race who chose not to cooperate with us, wait: in time, your turn will come. I certainly hope you are publishing.

Sincerely,
Arthur Cohen
Editor Emeritus, Critique

What Price Doughnuts?

To the Editor:

On April 13, 1967, the Student Union Governing Board passed a ruling requiring all food served in the Union to be catered by the Food Services.

This ruling is placing a heavy financial burden on some student organizations which had been accustomed to preparing their own coffee and providing their own cookies, doughnuts, and other snacks.

The American Society of Civil Engineers Student Chapter is one of these organizations so affected. We now face the alternatives of paying forty cents per person to the Food Services for coffee and doughnuts accompanied by a large increase in dues or removing our meetings from the Student Union.

Having become accustomed to paying between five and six dollars for coffee and doughnuts for fifty to seventy-five people, we now would have to pay Food Services between twenty and thirty dollars for the same service.

We implore the S.U.G. board to give this ruling and its financial effects on student organizations a complete review and repeal it immediately.

Ruling Challenged

To the Editor:

At the close of the academic year 1966-67, a ruling was passed by the Student Union Governing Board (SUG Board) which affects all students using the Student Union.

It says, in effect, that, if any group wishes to serve food in the Student Union, the food must be catered by the Student Union Food Services.

Whom does this ruling benefit?

Certainly not the sponsoring group; for in order to service fifty people with coffee, for example, we now have to pay $10, or 20 times the amount this has cost us in the past.

Certainly not the student, who must make up the difference by increased membership fees or entrance charges.

And certainly not the Student Union Catering Services, who are now troubled by extra work in the preparation and ordering of special foods.

Why was this ruling passed? We would like a straight answer to this question. This ruling was passed by the SUG Board, an administrative board composed of students, supposedly serving the students. In this case, we do not feel that they have fulfilled their obligation to the students they are supposed to serve.

This ruling was passed without giving the organizations affected suffieient notice to explain how severe the consequences of this new policy would be, and to argue their case.

We ask now that this policy be rescinded. We have been given reasons for its establishment and do not view these reasons as sufficient grounds for such a drastic ruling to have been passed. We now present the reasons and the remedies we propose:

A. Everything must be catered for reasons of health. Remedy: 1) Students, by means of a patch test, can get food handlers permits, and, thus, there can be a number of students in each organization who will be certified to arrange refreshments, etc. 2) There is no "food handling," as such, involved in serving coffee and cookies. Thus, coffee hours should be self-served, in any case.

B. Clean-up at some of the functions has been extremely negligent.

Remedy: Then, tell us exactly what is involved in cleaning up. Establish specific criteria for what is considered cleanliness by the Student Union; if a group does not comply, charge a fine, have their affairs catered thenceforth, or forbid them from using Union facilities.

If groups have manpower, but not money, then through these rulings the SUG Board is defeating the purpose of the Union if it is really existing as a STUDENT Union.

We leave the judgment of this argument up to you.

Upward Bound to Facilitate Repairs on Greenough

Counselor Dave Knowlton. This area was promised to the residents of Greenough for use as a study area to replace the loss of Greenough's basement lounge, which was made into a snack bar for the entire Central Area. Since the first floor is now divided, with half going to the special students, the residents are severly restricted in study space, especially when compared to the ample space in all the other dorms.

Also lost in the shuffle was the dorm's library, which was put in operation with over $75 of House taxes last year. The books are now locked in storage, as the former library room is used as a TV room by the special students. Thus the bookcases in the room are empty. It was also pointed out that even if the Television was not there, the room would still be useless since the lock on the door no longer exists.

Further damage was noted in the mailboxes, many of which have no glass left in the front, allowing any passer-by to reach in the boxes without opening them.

The students also were disturbed that their kitchenette has no sink, although there is a shower room next door from which pipes could be connected into a sink.

The list the students drew up of all damages and complaints is six pages long, and all of it seems legitimate. From the second floor up, 84% of the rooms have serious complaints of damage. On the first floor, there is damage ranging from the smashed mailboxes to ripped out screens right beside the front door. One student mentioned that his mother spent over twenty minutes trying to get him to move away from the dorm. According to Greenough counselors, many parents were disgusted at what they saw when they left students at the beginning of the semester.

GREENOUGH'S FORMER LIBRARY

Also present at the meeting was Mr. John Messinger, an assistant to John Burke, the area coordinator for the Central Area. After hearing the student complaints and touring the dorm, he agreed that the situation was bad and immediate action was needed. The meeting closed with the selection of several Greenough students to work with the Senate representatives to plan a campaign to get the problems solved as soon as possible. Both President Collins and Chairman Ward assured that the Senate would take immediate action.

In an interview with Pete Waixl, Dr. William Venman, Assistant to the Provost and responsible for the Upward Bound program on campus stated that the program will assume responsibility for damages caused by the Upward Bound program in Greenough House this summer. He said that if there was a need for funds to repair these damages, the Upward Bound program would see that they were available.

Also present at the interview was Mr. Bill Madaus, the present nominee for Director of the University Upward Bound program. He noted that as Upward Bound deals with underprivileged high school students, there was bound to be some damage. The problem is not with the program, but with the failure of the Administration of the program in mankind advance plans to cope with the repair of expected damages.

Both Dr Venman and Mr. Madaus pointed out that the program itself is recognized as a highly valuable one in that it seeks to increase educational motivation among high school students that otherwise might never consider higher education.

Hospital Volunteer Project Cited for Lane Bryant Award

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. — American International College (AIC) one of nine colleges participating in the Northampton State Hospital Volunteer Project, has been selected as a finalist by the Lane Bryant Annual Awards for Volunteer Service to the Community. Student volunteers from the nine area colleges spend each Wednesday or Thursday evening in the Northampton State Hospital, working on a person-to-person basis with the patients.

Prof. Robert H. Bohlke of the AIC Sociology Department is faculty advisor from AIC.

The President of the student organization is David Lawson of (120 Highview Ave.) Somerset, Mass., a senior at AIC. The group, known as the Student Council, is an executive board which is comprised of representatives of the nine participating Colleges. Lawson acts as a liason between the colleges and Mrs. Shirley Smith, director of volunteer workers at Northampton State Hospital.

Participating colleges are: AIC, Amherst, Holyoke Community College, Mount Holyoke, Northampton Commercial College, Our Lady of the Elms, Smith, Springfield and the University of Massachusetts.

The Northampton State Hospital Volunteers Project has received this citation in the Lane Bryant Annual Awards competition in recognition of outstanding community service in 1966.

The citation, according to Pamela Hollingworth, assistant director of the Lane Bryant organization, is a commendation of the nominee's outstanding achievement and means that the project is being actively considered for one of two awards of $1000 given annually to encourage volunteer work designed to benefit the American community. One award is made to an individual, the other to a group.

"To achieve the status of citationist is in itself an honor," Jerome E. Klein, director of the awards committee pointed out. "Fewer than 20 per cent of those nominated survive the rigid preliminary screening performed by the New York University Graduate School of Social Work to become so designated."

The awards will be presented on Nov. 30 at the Plaza Hotel in New York City at a luncheon given in honor of the winners.

Nixon Predicted 1st In N.H. Primary

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — With less than six months to go before New Hampshire's presidential preference primary, the nation's first, it's Richard M. Nixon leading the field of Republican hopefuls.

Gov. George Romney of Michigan will start his move with speeches at Dartmouth and the University of New Hampshire on Oct. 30.

Gov. Ronald Reagan of California has organized backing but has passed the word that he does not want his name on the ballot in the March 12 primary. So his supporters are concentrating on a write-in campaign along the lines which gave Henry Cabot Lodge a surprise victory in 1964.

Others sure to muster write-in support if they decline to be on the ballot include Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller of New York and Sen. Charles H. Percy of Illinois. Some diehards say they will write in the name of Barry Goldwater, the party's 1964 nominee, despite his crushing defeat by Lyndon B. Johnson.

A candidate's exposure to the electorate counts heavily and Nixon is generally figured to be ahead because of frequent visits to New Hampshire and what one politician terms indentification with the party."

Romney supporters concede their man is trailing but they believe that heavy campaigning in the state will close the gap before the voting.

Reagan has yet to appear but supporters hope he will set up a speaking engagement before the end of the year.

In response to a mailed questionnaire, voters in the 2nd Congressional District said they liked Nixon as the "best candidate" for the presidential nomination. Rep. James C. Cleveland, R-N.H., who did the polling, said Nixon was the first choice of 1,242, Rockfeller was the first choice of 703 and Romney was first with 667.

The Manchester Union Leader, which suports Nixon editorially, said a sample of its readers showed 207 for Nixon, 144 for Reagan, 25 for Rockefeller and 7 for Romney.

Jump for Joy

UMies Take to the Sky

The University of Massachusetts Sports Parachute Club is in full swing again this fall. On Tuesday, September 26, at 8 p.m. a meeting will be held in the Middlesex Room of the Student Union.

This meeting is open to everyone, whether you're interested in jumping or just curious to see the type of persons who jump from planes! Films of parachutists in action starring club members will be shown. There will also be a demonstration of an actual jump.

The evening should prove to be very exciting and interesting to those who attend. If the films and demonstrations bring out your sense of adventure you can sign up for your first jump. After the meeting coffee will be served and the officers and club members will be glad to answer any questions you have.

The club has big plans for this year and we invite you who have high-flying ideas to come to our meeting and see what it is all about.

Smith Presents Vienna Symphony

The Smith College Concert Course will open this year with a performance on Sunday, October 1, by the Vienna Symphony Orchestra. The concert in John M. Greene Hall at 8:15 p.m. will be conducted by Wolfgang Sawallisch whom Harold Schonberg, chief critic of The New York Times, has called "one of Europe's best conductors."

The program for the October 1 concert will comprise three major works: Schubert's Symphony's No. 6 in C Major, Alban Berg's Three Pieces for Orchestra, and Ein Heldenleben by Strauss.

Tickets for the Smith College course may be reserved by telephoning the John M. Greene Hall box office or by writing the Smith College Department of Music.

The Vienna Symphony Orchestra, founded in 1900, is the official orchestra of the Vienna Festival and is devoted entirely to concert performances. The 126-member group has played over 500 new works, including 150 world premieres.

Other noted conductors of the Vienna Symphony Orchestra have included Claude Debussy, Richard Strauss, Bruno Walter, Sir Thomas Beecham, Herbert von Karajan and Otto Klemperer.

The University of Massachusetts presents programs of continuing interest throughout the year.

Redmen Favored but Black Bears Optimistic

Maine's Huard Gone But Memories Linger

By GLENN BRIERE
Staff Reporter

First-year football coaches are by nature optimistic, but few to the extent of Maine Coach Walter Abbott. He startled the press a few weeks ago when he proclaimed that his Black Bears could go unbeaten.

DON WHITE
Maine center

This, perhaps, is being optimistic beyond the limits of rationality, but the winning tradition of Maine football prevents one from laughing at Abbott when he says that "Maine can beat anybody on our schedule."

The UMass Redmen will find out just how valid his optimism is Saturday when they travel to Orono for their season's opener. Kickoff is at 1:30 p.m.

The Redmen have always had trouble in this traditional Yankee Conference curtain-raiser against Maine. Two years ago on the same field, Maine stunned UMass, 10-8, and went on to win the coveted Beanpot.

Last year, it took a field goal that barely made it to beat the Bears, 10-7. The hero was sophomore Bruce Cochrane, whose 26-yarder with 21 seconds left in the game was the margin of victory.

Abbott is going to have trouble equaling the record of his predecessor, Hal Westerman, who in his 16 years as head coach of the Black Bears compiled a record of 42 wins, 26 losses and five ties in the Yankee Conference. Westerman is now devoting his full time to the duties of Maine athletic director.

Maine has only four offensive and five defensive starters back. In particular, the Black Bears are going to miss Little All-American ...linebacker ...John Huard, who now starts for the AFL Denver Broncos, and safety Norm Tardiff.

Another factor standing in the way of a winning season is the fact that Maine is playing its toughest schedule ever. Heading its eight-game slate is Boston College and The Citadel. Besides the five Yankee Conference teams, Maine also plays Northeastern.

George Platter, a senior quarterback, will have a lot to say about Maine's chances this fall. Platter's 27-for-70 pass completion record left something to be desired last year, and his off-season ankle injury was an early cause for alarm in the Black Bear camp.

However, Platter is reported to be fully recovered from the injury, and with better receivers should be the man to watch this season. He led the team in total offense last year with 672 yards. A native of Poughkeepsie, N.Y., Platter was a high school teammate of former UConn basketball player Wes Bialosuknia. Backing him up will be Paul Auclair.

GEORGE PLATTER
Maine quarterback

Platter's favorite target should be sophomore end Gene Benner, who starred on the freshman team last fall with five touchdowns.

The best returning veterans are All-Conference choices Pete Norris, a defensive end, and offensive tackle Bill Pasquill. Norris, a 215-pound senior, was credited with 30 unassisted tackles last year in addition to a 39.4 yard punt average, a school record. He'll handle the punting again Saturday.

Pasquill, a 5'11, 195-pound senior, played both offense and defense last year, and is a two-time All-Yankee Conference tackle.

Other offensive stars include halfback Garth Quillia, a 5'6, 150-pound junior who carried the ball 56 times for 187 yards last year, an average of 3.3 yards a carry. He excels on kickoff returns.

The fullback is junior Charles Yanush, an unspectacular 190-pounder who is often called upon in third-and-short-yardage situations. He scored five touchdowns last year.

Vying for the other halfback position are sophomores Mark Richardson and Mark Harney. The other offensive returnee will be center Don White, a co-captain.

On defense, balancing Norris will be the other end, junior Don Loranger, 6'2, 240 pounds. He could also be an All-Yankee Conference pick this season. He was second only to Huard last year in tackles.

Co-captain Keith Kalman, 190 pounds, may alternate at tackle and middle guard while tackle Charles Wingate, 210, and linebacker Charlie McDonald, 208, will also start.

Five of the front line on defense is back so it will not be easy to run against the Black Bears. Their problem is that the entire secondary was wiped out by graduation so the sophomore-filled pass defense may be vulnerable.

UMass appears to be a strong favorite, but one should consider the slim margins of recent Maine-UMass games and the Redmen's inexperience on defense. This game could be closer than a lot of people think.

Metawampe Back Again

Move over, Major Hoopie and Mr. Z. That rock of ages, Metawampe, will once again grace the pages of the Daily Collegian with his weekly pigskin prognostications.

His quiet objectivity produced a 70 per cent record of accuracy last season, and this year the notes of the native stone will include an expanded panorama of America's collegiate grid activity. Watch for "Metawampe's Grid Picks," starting Friday.

'M' Club Offers Grid Luncheon

The first Varsity "M" Quarterback Luncheon will take place Tuesday at noon at Howard Johnson's Restaurant, Rte. 9, Hadley.

Every Tuesday throughout the football season, a scouting report of UMass' next opponent will be presented, along with a film of the previous Redman game.

As the official booster organization of UMass athletics, the Varsity "M" Club has grown to a membership of 247 in its three-year existence. The club is open to all UMass sports fans, not just former athletes.

Club officers for this year are Robert Foote '62, president; Dave Kelley '66, vice-president; Dick Bresciani '60, secretary, and Bernard Busseo '49, treasurer.

Fusia On WMUA

UMass Coach Vic Fusia will offer comments on the imminent football season as WMUA, 91.1-FM, presents "Redmen Preview 1967" tonight at 8.

Fusia will be interviewed by WMUA sports director Glenn Briere during the half-hour program.

Roster Deadline Today At IM's

Rosters for all campus tug-o-war teams must be submitted by today, according to Ted Schmitt, now in his second year as intramural director.

Today is also the deadline for all entries in the campus singles tennis tournament, beginning Sept. 28, Schmitt said.

Independent touch football managers are urged to pick up schedules in the intramural office in the Boyden Building.

Sigma Phi Epsilon will defend its campus team championship at the annual race to be held Columbus Day, Oct. 12, at 11 a.m. Entries close Oct. 9.

Last year's dormitory team champion was the Kennedy Cougars. Gerry Johnson of Kennedy Leopards was individual winner last year, covering the distance in eight minutes, eight seconds.

Trophies will be awarded to the team champion and to first, second and third place individual winners. The course is 1.7 miles long.

Golf Meeting

A meeting for varsity and freshman golf team candidates will take place tonight at 7 in Room 251, Boyden Building.

Sox Edge Cleveland, 5-4, To Stay Tied at Top

CLEVELAND (AP) — Reggie Smith's two-out single in the ninth inning scored Carl Yastrzemski with the winning run as the Boston Red Sox hung on to their share of the American League lead with a 5-4 victory over Cleveland Wednesday night.

The victory kept the Red Sox tied for the lead with Minnesota, which defeated Kansas City Wednesday afternoon. Third place Chicago played at California and fourth place Detroit hosted New York in other night games.

Yastrzemski, who slammed his 41st homer earlier, touched off Boston's winning rally with his fourth hit of the night with two out in the ninth.

He moved to second on George Culver's wild pitch and stayed there when George Scott walked. Then Smith lined his hit to right field and Yastrzemski dashed home.

Six home runs accounted for the game's first eight runs.

Consecutive homers by Tony Horton and Max Alvis tied it for the Indians in the seventh against Jim Lonborg.

Horton, traded by the Red Sox to the Indians in June, led off with his ninth of the year and Alvis followed with his 20th.

The Indians had taken the early lead on Larry Brown's two-run homer in the fifth. Lonborg had held Cleveland hitless through the first four innings but Alvis opened the fifth with a soft single to right for Cleveland's first safety. Two outs later, Brown tagged his seventh home run of the season.

The Red Sox wasted no time coming back against Sam McDowell. With one out in the sixth, Yastrzemski blasted his homer cutting Cleveland's lead in half.

Scott followed with a single and, after Smith flied out, Rico Petrocelli tagged his 17th of the year for a 3-2 Boston lead.

Mike Andrews widened it to 4-2 in the seventh with his eighth homer.

Lonborg went into the game leading the league with 226 strikeouts and added six in his seven-inning stint for a total of 232.

McDowell struck out nine in the seven innings he worked, boosting his total to 227.

Homers Spark Twins Over K.C.

MINNEAPOLIS-ST. PAUL (AP) —Tony Oliva and Bob Allison slammed two-run homers and Harmon Killebrew drove in two runs with a pair of singles, pacing Minnesota and Dean Chance to a 6-2 victory over Kansas City Wednesday.

Oliva's 16th homer handed Chance a 4-2 lead after Killebrew's second run-scoring single tied the game in the third inning. Allison's 22nd homer gave the Twins a 6-2 cushion in the fifth.

Chance allowed only four hits in posting his 19th victory against 12 losses. He gave up rookie Dave Duncan's fourth homer with a man on base in the second to fall behind 2-1. But the big right-hander surrendered only one other hit the rest of the way to go the distance for the 17th time this year.

College of Arts & Sciences Starts Advisory System

by LORRAINE BALCH
Staff Reporter

The College of Arts and Sciences has given birth to a new organization, CASIAC, the College of Arts and Sciences Information and Advising Center. The idea of the service was began two years ago by Dean Issac Moyer Hunsberger, who observed such a system successfully operating at the University of Wisconsin. The plan met with faculty approval a year ago.

As an advisory service, CASIAC seeks to aid in course selection. Problems and conflicts involving requirements, as well as changes in major fields of study, are discussed. As the particular situation demands, students may be referred to the Counseling Center for interest or aptitude testing. As a source of information, CASIAC has compiled lists of services available through the University.

Those who wish to participate in an accelerated program of study or graduate within a period of three years are informed of University policies regulating such a schedule. For example, the University offers a program of study wherein a student may receive full credit for a course merely by passing the final exam. He need only obtain a reading list and prepare for the exam at his own speed. Lectures and assignments are not required.

Approximately forty faculty members are contributing to CASIAC. Each department is represented so that students may discuss problems with qualified persons. The number of faculty is expected to increase as Counseling Day approaches. The facilites of CASIAC are available to students Monday-Friday between the hours of 9-12 and 1-5. The organization is located in South College.

UM Summer Work Study Program Responsible for Misunderstanding

JIM FOUDY, Staff Reporter

The flap being raised by students and faculty over this Fall's work study program is the result of misunderstanding and not the lack of funds.

Funds for the program to aid needy Students, greater than ever this year, according to a UMass spokesman, rumors that the number of night security guards would be cut due to lack of funds is false, officials reported.

The confusion that resulted in long lines of students in the financial aid office and complaints from faculty is rooted in the establishment of a summer work study program that this year used two-thirds of the total work study funds in ten weeks.

Of $246,187 originally available for July 1 to Dec. 31, only $65,000 remains for this semester.

For the academic year 1966-67 work study funds amounted to $358,155. All of this money was expended to 600 students hired during the regular academic year.

University officials explained that part of this money was supposed to have been used, however, for a 1966 work study program. Officials received criticism from federal officials who sponsored 90% of the funds for not establishing a summer program.

This July the University received $246,167, both state and federal monies to last until December 31.

While this exceeds last year's allotment by more than $40,000, two-thirds was used to cover a summer work study program for 270 needy students working 40 hours a week. This, federal officials said, was the proper way to administer the work study program but it left only enough funds available to hire 150 students this fall.

UMass oficials said that none of the students on the summer program were put on it again this fall. The theory was that the summer participants, working a 40-hour week, would earn enough money to carry them through the year.

Officials also noted that because the present funds expire in December, more money will be available in January. Because this money will not be used during the summer of 1968 the possibilities exist that there will be an increase Jan. 1 in the number of jobs.

It was also noted that the University fared well in the amount of federal funds received this year as compared to other colleges across the country.

Faculty confusion, according to a University official results from their failure to understand that work study funds are assigned to students, not departments. Under the program, students request to work in certain areas of campus. If that area or department needs help they are assigned to it.

The statement by faculty that "our work study funds have been cut is 'erroneous, according to Robert Morrissey, director of Placement and Financial Aid.

Morrissey said that work study is not designed to replace help paid by each department's part-time personnel funds.

Departments blessed with an abundance of work study assistants last year find themselves short-handed. UMass officials feel that the departments should not complain, however, since the program never alloted a certain number of students to certain departments. A statement by Morrissey in the next University Bulletin, distributed to staff and faculty, is expected to clear up the misunderstanding.

Officials also made it clear that the night security guard system, employing students enforce the no curfew system, is not in jeopardy. While no work study funds are available for the dorm guards, adequate money is available out of the Dean of Student's budget, according to Dr. Mark Noffsinger, Associate Dean of Students.

Noffsinger said the delay in full implementation of the security guards system is the processing of student applications. Last year at this time, security guards had not been hired either, he pointed out.

Noffsinger explained that the same criterion to determine the financial need of a student is being applied to security jobs so that they may be transferred to the work study program when

Goldberg Challenges Hanoi in UN Speech

U.S. Ambassador Arthur J. Goldberg challenged Hanoi and its allies Thursday to state categorically that meaningful negotiations would take place, without disadvantage to either side, if the United States halted its bombing of North Vietnam.

In a major address to the U.N. General Assembly, Goldberg reiterated that the United States was committed to a political solution, not a military solution, in Vietnam.

But he added that "in fidelity to our commitment to a political solution, we will not permit North Vietnam and its adherents to impose a military solution upon South Vietnam."

The chief U.S. delegate noted that Hanoi in its public statements had said negotiations "could" take place if the bombing stopped.

Other governments and Secretary-General U Thant, he said, "have expressed their belief or assumption that negotiations 'would' begin" if the bombing stopped. But he added that "no such third party—including those governments which are among Hanoi's closest friends—has conveyed to us any authoritative message from Hanoi that there would in fact be negotiations if the bombing were stopped.

"We have sought such a message directly from Hanoi without success."

One U.S. representative said the speech was a "'good expression of our position" on Vietnam.

Many delegates said they had found nothing new in the speech.

Goldberg said the Unied States "would be glad to consider and discuss any proposal that would lead promptly to productive discussions that might bring about peace in the area."

Revelers Promise An Afternoon Of Fun, Music, and Football

The Revelers have solved the dilemma of Redmen supporters who feel that they can't make the 400 mile jaunt to Maine on Saturday to witness the first team victory of the season.

In cooperation with the Scrolls, Maroon Keys and radio station WMUA, the Maine event will be broadcasted to Mass. team supporters using an entirely new concept in away-game team support.

UMass students will be able to come to the campus pond betwen 1 and 5 P.M. on Saturday, September 23, 1967, to hear a live broadcast of this all-important first game complete with all the comforts of a dorm, fraternity, or sorority—and maybe a few more like: a free live band, the "Sound Foundations", refreshments.

The Revelers promise that the afternoon will have "that extra something inevitably present when plenty of people, food, and good entertainment are brought together on a warm September afternoon."

A word to the wise—blankets and old clothes are the rule of the day. All students are urged to attend.

First DVP Lecture Delivered On Ecumenical Reform

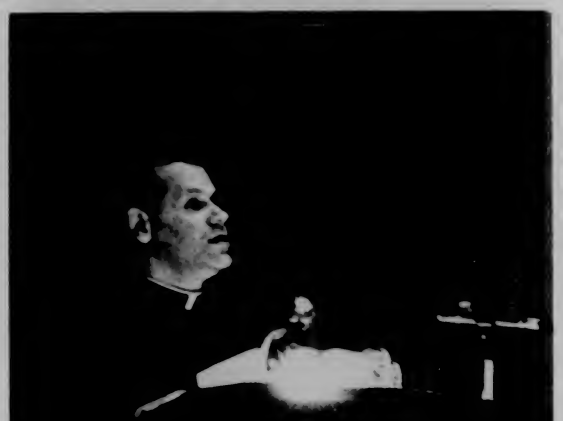
By LOVELIA GONZALES

"There has been extraordinary success in the Ecumenical movement over the past few years," Father Gregory Baum, director of the Centre Ecumenical Studies at the Univ. of Toronto said Wednesday. "Thanks to the changes in the Catholic church, there is a movement toward the unity of churches."

This is true, he explained, because "once changed we see truth differently. All things might appear in a new light because of the Ecumenical movement."

Father Baum said in the significant divisions of Christianity, the distinguishing line no longer passes along the dividing line of the churches, but cuts right across. For this reason, he said, ecumenical-minded people have a deep experience of community.

"The place of the Ecumenical movement is among those who say dialogue should be extended to include Christians, Jews and all faiths. The church needs the whole of humanity to be a church. We are in need of community and of others. We need community to come to self knowledge."



Father Baum went on to say that redemptive transformation is not only celebrated in church, but wherever man is. Three points concerning this he listed as:

1. The grace of God is at work in the life of every single person.

2. The church must listen to history and the world.

3. The church must realize that through the changes in the self-understanding of the church we have doctrinal implications.

Father Baum concluded by churches and the Ecumenical movement which can result in non-idealogic Christians who want to live their lives in a non-idealogic fashion.

For this reason; he said, "the church must change slowly. In such a way it experiences continuity with its past. In such a unity it becomes more itself. The church wants quick changes, but also wants to become more itself."

Senate Amends Election Act

By TIM ROCHE

Passage of an amended Election Rules Act of 1967 was the major business transacted by Student Senate at its regular Wednesday night meeting.

Prepared by a committee chaired by Senator Frederic Hartwell during the summer. the Act was amended by removing a clause what had provided candiates with space to insert three-word slogans on the ballot.

Consensus was that the clause would "encourage some candidates to make a joke or farce of a serious matter."

In other business, the Senate voted $300 for new scabbord and blade field piece to be used on ceremonial occasions. Maintained by the group, the cannon will be fired at football games and during other official events sanctioned by student government.

WMUA Initiates New Concert In Programming Saturday

By RON LABRECQUE
News Editor

A new concept in WMUA programming will begin this Saturday morning at 9:00 a.m. when a children's hour will be presented on the University's student-operated radio station.

The show will be the product of Vicki Brydon, a grad student at the University and Jan Gogen, a sophomore and WMUA Educational Director.

Miss Brydon told the Daily Collegian that the purpose of the show is to increase the role of WMUA in the realm of serving the entire University community rather than restricting itself to completely UMass student oriented programs.

The show will run for an hour and its program content is aimed at an audience of children age 3-9.

Miss Brydon said that the program directors hope to present entertainment to the children of members of the University community, which they would not ordinarily be exposed to.

The educational program will include a variety of story readings, plays such as "Sleeping Beauty", and songs also including Leonard Bernstein's introduction to music series for children.

Editor Sadowski Cites Index Improvements in Publication

By DON LEBLANC
Staff Reporter

Students at UMass returned this year to a newer, improved policy, concerning publication of the Index, according to Editor-in-Chief Richard Sadowski. The yearbook already has numerous distinctions, and Sadowski looks forward to even better quality in the future.

The Index, started in 1869 and receiving its appropriations from the Student Senate, is the only publication that chronicles the entire academic year. One of the five largest yearbooks in the country, its staff boasts about ten editors yearly to cover all aspects of campus life.

The new policy adopted last year abolished the March 1 deadline for articles. Formerly, a supplement covering graduation was issued during the summer to seniors only. The new system provides for the complete coverage of the whole year within the hardbound edition. It is then mailed to graduates during the summer and given out to undergrads during the following September's registration.

A bonus addition to the Index is that the price has steadily decreased each year. Each student now pays about $6 for the yearbook through his Student Activities Fee.

A marked increase in quality of photography is due to the best available picture processing in the country. The Bernard Hoffman Laboratories of New York develops black and white, while Kodak processes color photos.

In a recent recruiting meeting, about 100 students turned out in what Sadowski described as a "good turnout as the result of a good yearbook." He went on to say of the yearbook, "The Index has been a tradition at UMass for almost 100 years. It has tried to grow with the University. But in order to make it as personal as possible, we need as many interested students as possible to work on it. We owe the students the finest yearbook that we can produce, and this requires the community's help."

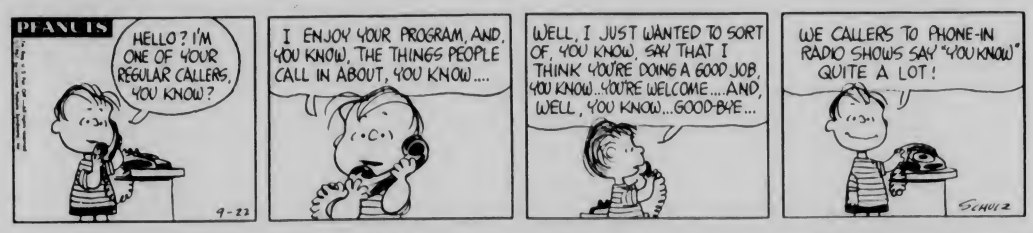
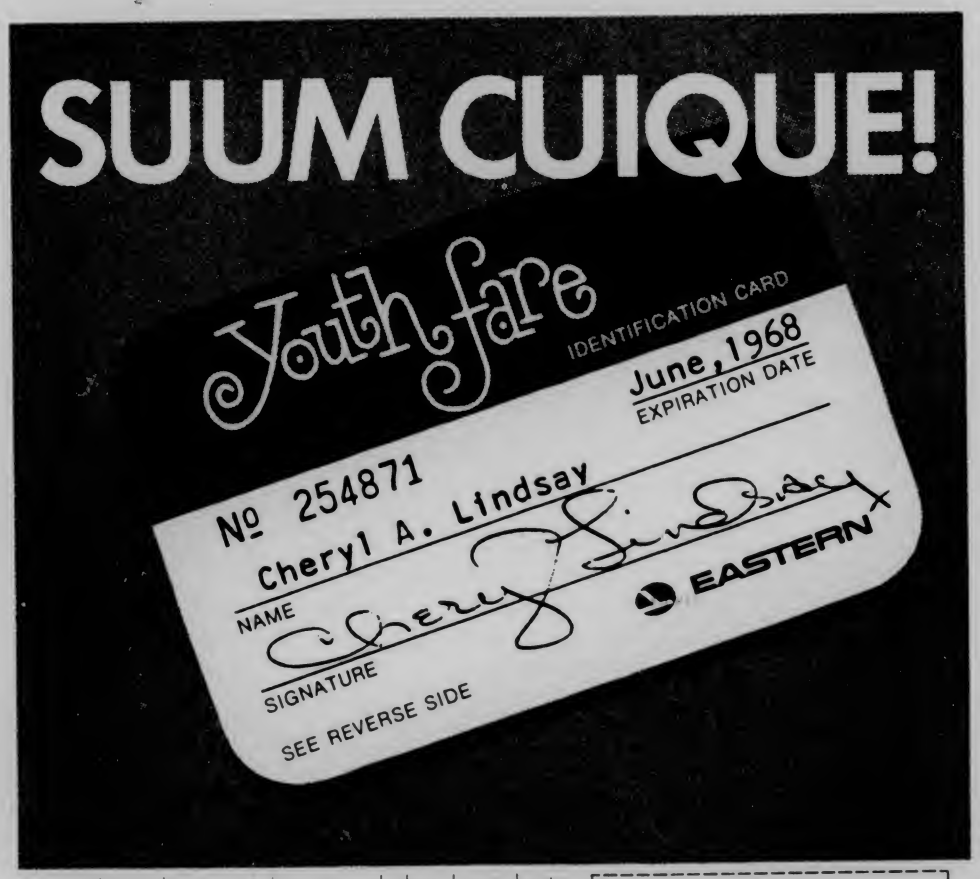
Senate Candidates To Meet Monday

Monday at 7:30 in the Colonial Lounge, an orientation will be held for students interested in running for the Student Senate. At the session various Senate personnel will explain various aspects of the Senate's operation and the responsibilities that a Senator faces.



The Senate Committe Chairmen will also be present to inform the prospective candidates about their potential Committee assignments and the duties of the various Committees. All students intending to run for the Student Senate are expected to attend this meeting.



SENATE AMENDS . . .

In an announcement by Senate President Jim Collins, it was stated that a meeting would be held on Sept. 25, to orient senate hopefuls.

"This is a good chance for students to see if they want to give it a try. Most senators have indicated they enjoy their jobs tremendously and are proud of the chance to serve both their school and their classmates," said Collins.

Commuter Senators

On election day, October 5, the commuters like all UMass students will be able to vote for their representatives to the student Senate. Unlike most of the dormitories, including the new ones, the commuters are somewhat underrepresented in the student government.

Although the constituency has increased considerably (to upwards of 1500 students) the number of senators cannot exceed 8.

The constitution of the Student Government Association apportions the number of senators for each constituency on the number of student-residents. However, when the constitution was written a constituency with more than 1124 students apparently was not envisioned. Hence there is no provision for adding to the 8 senators allowed to the 1124 plus students who are commuters.

An amendment to the constitution should be introduced which would provide for the needed increase of commuter senators. And the commuters might have adequate representation coming up for nearly the entire legislative year.

This, however, won't be possible unless the bloc of commuter senators to be elected are willing to work together as a cohesive unit. Having in common the problems and interests of the commuting students, such a working rapport should be inevitable.

Unfortunately, this isn't always the truth. And if such things as personal aspirations to higher office, are allowed to take precedence over representing commuters, the cause of the under-represented commuters could very well become a lost one.

For the commuters, unity is very much an election issue and it is to be expected that the candidates will demonstrate their capabilities in this respect before they enjoy the ceremony of being sworn-in.

It is up to the commuters on election day to unite behind candidates who they feel will overcome the disjointed character of the commuter population as a whole.

(ED: A candidates' forum will be run on the editorial page of the issue the day preceding the election. Students are urged to ask questions they would like answered by the CANDIDATES IN Letters-to-the-editor between now and the forum appearance.)

A Pittance for the Arts

The Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities, created with great fanfare, has completed its first year of existence with little accomplished in relation to the need it was intended to fill. The reason is not hard to find: the Legislature appropriated only $25,000 for the Council's first year of operation, with a like amount allocated for the fiscal year beginning last July 1. The new appropriation is so low it makes the Council ineligible to receive a Federal matching grant.

The chief opponent of increasing funds for the agency is the powerful chairman of the Senate Ways and Means Committee, Sen. James F. Burke. It was Sen. Burke who was instrumental in limiting the salary of an executive director for the Council to less than $7,500, with the result that there is no executive director. This week Sen. Burke characterized the Council as "not very important" and questioned whether state funds should be used for such a program. The same Sen. Burke saw nothing questionable in his proposal to have the state fund indirectly a $50 million sports stadium through unclaimed gasoline taxes that had been going into the General Fund. Sen. Burke noted in his report proposing the stadium that it could not be constructed with private funds.

At first glance it may appear that many more persons are interested in sports than in cultural activities. But further examination reveals that 100,000 persons were interested enough in these activities to attend the Boston Arts Festival in its last year of operation in 1964, 25,000 of them on the opening day. And when all the concert series, art exhibitions, drama festivals, and other cultural events given by universities, clubs, churches, and libraries in every town are added up, it amounts to sizeable interest that Sen. Burke may not have considered.

One reason these activities are so easily brushed aside is that they are fragmented, unorganized, and under-financed—exactly the problems the Arts Council was to correct. But in its first year the Council received more than 500 funding proposals and was able to finance only seven of them—all in conjunction with other groups. Among these projects were introduction of chamber music concerts to 25,000 school children and exhibitions for young artists who would otherwise not be given an opportunity to display their work.

With only a $25,000 appropriation for this fiscal year, the Council will barely be able to pay for its administrative costs, including the salaries of two staff members, let alone fund projects. Gov. Volpe has asked for $200,000 for the Council, and although it was rejected by the Legislature, he may still receive the money through a supplemental budget allocation. The need for such a stratagem is sad, especially when one considers that New York State provides $1.8 million a year for its arts council. But whatever the source, the Council should receive the money it needs if Massachusetts is to claim any concern for the arts.

Bears vs. Redmen

To the Editor:

Tomorrow the Redmen face the University of Maine in their first game of the season. Unfortunately, the game is too far away for the majority of us to be there at the field cheering the team on to their first victory.

But, we shouldn't show any less interest or enthusiasm for the game. Speaking for the whole Southwest Residential College, we wish the Redmen and Coach Fusia victory over the Bears and the beginning of another sweep of the Bean Pot.

Justice for Engineering Professor?

To the editor:

Last year the Electrical Engineering Department apparently decided to improve its reputation. To do this they did not renew the contract of one of the instructors, Bernard Lovell, because it seems he had neither published nor held his doctorate's degree.

It mattered little, apparently, that on the student rating sheets in January, Lovell received very high ratings from the students. In Electrical Engineering 142 second semester there was a sudden switch in the instructors of E.E. 142. Lovell taught the course instead of the scheduled instructor.

It was a strange coincidence that the person scheduled to teach the course had very low student ratings in the course: this was common knowledge among the students.

Lovell was dedicated to teaching and I know of three instances where he missed lunch because he was helping students and would not tell them that it was his lunch hour.

He was the only person in the E.E. department who was available for questions immediately before finals. But because it is apparently more important in the view of the E.E. department to have big names than it is for the students to learn anything, he was lost.

Professor Weidmann and Professor Kroner, however, were recently promoted to professor in the Basic Engineering Department. If you want to see something interesting try to get the results of their rating sheets.

According to a person who has seen them, the rating sheets are so low they almost go off the scales. Professor Kroner is a graduate student in Geology at Clark University. He has also taught geology at Greenfield. From this it appears that his interests hardly lie in Engineering. Nevertheless both Kroner and Weidmann were promoted to full professor even though neither had their doctorate degree, which is normally against University policy.

To put the topper on the organization of the various engineering departments, it is interesting to look at the budget of the Electrical Engineering department. According to a professor, the budget is roughly $400 until next June.

Therefore they cannot afford to have student graders or to buy any supplies which aren't essential. It seems that someone thought the secretaries were overworked and more were more important than spending money on anything for the students.

If anyone is a freshman engineering major, particularly a prospective electrical engineer, I would suggest that he take a good look at the University and give serious thought to whether or not the University is the right place for him.

More Camera Stomping

Although I feel that I have a sense of humor, I thought the picture of King Kong in Tuesday's Daily Collegian captioned, "Known for its animals, this creature was recently captured on film by the Daily Collegian camera stomping near the UMass fraternity row," was in poor taste. The Fraternity system seems to be an easy target for many such 'humorists.'

The fraternity system here has its flaws, but the way to remedy the situation is to criticize constructively and attempt to improve the system. Knocking something is easy and does not take much school interest, but if you take the time to think how to improve the system, although it takes more thought can also help to make things better.

As a member of a fraternity at UM I am immensely proud of my fraternity and feel that I have gained very much through this experience.

Vietnam Elections

To the Editor:

In a recent editorial (Examine—Don't Accept, 9/19/67), Mr. Flaherty made statements that should not go unopposed. He stated that the U. S. urged France not to agree to "free elections" in a peace settlement for Southeast Asia, and that the U. S. didn't sign the Geneva Agreement. Agreed, but the "free elections" in North Vietnam which followed are most interesting.

In the first place, Ho Chi Minh didn't win the election. In response to this, he sent his followers through every city and town in North Vietnam to dispose of opposition to him—an action which cost the lives of over 14,000 anti-Ho politicians (a great election victory).

The result of this was the establishment of a dictatorship with "elections" which are a farce by any standard. Imagine, if you can, an election in which one candidate receives 99% of the vote (assuming someone else is allowed to run)

In the South, Diem was elected in an election which was at the very least as honest as one in the North. As Mr. Flaherty stated, Diem became a dictator —but this is bad because Diem wasn't a Communist. His support by the U. S. was due to the absence of anything better at the time.

Mr. Flaherty's belief in the political superiority of the Communists is well noted. This superiority is typified by the fleeing of about one million refugees to the South within one year after Geneva. How many went North? Why is it that the Viet Cong Units are broken down into groups of three, with each soldier ordered to shoot any other who tries to defect? What unity! And why all the terrorism against civilians?

The holy Geneva Agreement has provided four things in Southeast Asia: 1. a base for Communism, 2. Soviet and Red Chinese supplied Viet Cong. 3. North Vietnamese troops in South Vietnam, Cambodia, and Laos, and 4. increasing terrorism in Thailand. In South Vietnam, the signing is marked by a holiday —the National Day of Shame. In reality, it is a Worldwide Day of Shame.

In closing, Mr. Flaherty should know that a Communist could win a free election — if one knew what a free election was.

Open Letter to Those Contemplating Medical & Dental School

The task of gaining admission to a Medical or Dental school is now becoming more involved than ever before. The most knowledgeable student does not know all of the answers pertaining to questions concerning medical and dental school admission procedures and curricula. We believe that many of the answers to these questions can be found at the meeting of the University of Massachusetts Pre-Medical Society.

Our meetings are concerned with all aspects of the medical and dental fields as our past schedule of speakers has shown: Dr. John Hodge, Dean of Albany Medical School; Dr. Stanley L. Burns, Dean of Admissions of the Vermont College of Medicine; Dr. B. F. Trum, Director of the New England Primate Center of Harvard Medical School; and Dr. Donald B. Giddon, Chairman of the Department of Social Dentistry of the Tufts School of Dentistry.

In addition to professional school personnel, the Society has been addressed by speakers in related fields such as Langdon W. Chandler, representative of the Smith, Kline and French Laboratories of Philadelphia. Additional highlights included films of open heart surgery, cataract removals, bacterial infections in surgery, and the setting of compound fractures of the limbs.

The real highlight of last semester's Pre-Medical Society activities was the trip to Boston and the tour of the Peter Bent Brigham, Mass. General Hospitals. Society members received a complete tour of the facilities, talks by hospital personnel, and finally, an opportunity to observe actual open heart surgery.

These were just some of the activities of the Pre-Medical Society that were enjoyed by its members last year. This year should prove to be even more informative and exciting to all those who wish to join the Society. Everyone is welcome regardless of major field of concentration.

There are many opportunities for active participation in the Pre-Medical Society. There are numerous openings on the social, publicity, and constitutional committees that must be filled by people willing to work. For those members interested in various aspects of journalism including typing, writing, copy work and sketching, the Society offers a Pre-Medical Journal which is published annually and open to all contributors.

The Society also offers a program which is unknown to most Pre-Med clubs around the country. We call the program the Undergraduate Medical Experience program (UME). Society members are given the opportunity to see medicine in action at the Wesson Memorial Hospital. Groups of two Society members are supplied transportation to the hospital at which time they are met by one of the staff physician on his tour of duty in the emergency room of the hospital as he treats each emergency case. This is obviously a rare opportunity for anyone at the undergraduate level interested in a medical career.

It certainly looks as though this coming year will be one of the best yet for the University of Massachusetts Pre-Medical Society. Why not see for yourself and attend the first meeting scheduled for Monday, September 25, 1967. The meeting will be held in the auditorium of the Justin S. Morrill Science Center at 7:30 p.m. At that time, Dr. William Fleeson will address the Society. Dr. Fleeson is the Associate Dean of the newly-opening University of Connecticut School of Medicine and will discuss admissions' facilities, and opportunities of the medical school. Following Dr. Fleeson's talk, there will be a question and answer period.

If you are seriously considering a career in medicine, you owe it to yourself to attend this meeting and consequently take out a membership in the University of Massachusetts Pre-Medical Society.

We look forward to seeing you there,

Pre-Medical Society

Harvard Botanist Testifies on Ban Of Marijuana Plant

BOSTON (AP)—A Harvard University botanist testified Thursday that only certain parts of the marijuana plant contain a narcotic but Massachusets law bans the whole plant.

Dr. Richard E. Schultes, curator of economic botany at the Harvard botanical museum, testified in Suffolk Superior Court in support of a motion for dismissal of narcotics charges against two Philadelphia men.

He testified the 1961 convention on narcotics conducted by the World Health Organization prohibited 217 species of plants which contained neither cocaine or other intoxicants. He said the convention's report "must have been written by lawyers who did not consult botanists."

The Massachusetts statutes on marijuana "are indiscriminate," Dr. Schultes said, by banning parts of the plant which do not contain intoxicants.

Dr. Schultes' testimony was given at a pre-trial hearing before Chief Judge G. Joseph Tauro.

Defendants in the case are Joseph D. Leis, 25, and Ivan Weiss, 26, both of Philadelphia, accused of possession of marijuana.

Ministers to Discuss Restrictions on Cuba

WASHINGTON (AP)—The foreign ministers of the United States and 20 Latin American nations convene here Friday to consider proposals for new and tougher restrictions on Communist Cuba.

But American strategists do not expect any dramatic new programs going beyond the lines already set forth in past Organization of American States meetings on the Cuba Communist threat.

The key proposal, by Venezuela, calls for more stringent economic sanctions, to be imposed by boycotting private firms in Western Europe, Japan and Canada that do business with Fidel Castro's government.

The foreign ministers also are expected to try to set up new machinery for checking the flow of Cuban agents, propaganda and money to promote and support subversion in other hemisphere nations.

This second meeting in 38 months of the OAS foreign ministers council was called at Venezuela's request after a Cuban-led guerrilla force was captured on Venezuelan soil last May.

Venezuela charged the group's mission was to overthrow the regime of President Raul Leoni. Cuba acknowledged that the force was Cuban-led and declared it would continue such support to Latin American rebels.

The United States hopes the three-day meeting will not only increase international pressure against Castro but will tighten hemisphere solidarity.

The U.S. tactic is to back up the nine-point proposal by Venezuela rather than take the lead. U.S. officials have developed a 14-point version of the Venezuelan proposal, but do not intend to present it at the formal meeting.

President Johnson is giving a personal boost to the meeting by inviting the foreign ministers to lunch Friday.

Busloads of anti-Castro exiles are heading to Washington from Florida to demonstrate for tougher action against Castro.

In calling for new, stricter economic measures, Venezuela said it believes European and other non-Communist world traders might think twice about trading with Cuba if it meant exclusion of their products from most other American countries.

But suggestions for strong economic sanctions against free world nations trading with Cuba found little support in advance diplomatic consultations among the OAS countries.

The informal consensus was that such a step would not have as much effect on the Europeans as individual actions by the Latin American countries in their own commercial dealings with the countries trading with Cuba.

What's Happening?

Do you know what's happening on the pop music scene today? Well, there is much more happening than you probably think. You don't hear it all on most radio shows. In fact, you don't hear any thing, on most radio shows, that isn't highly commercial. However, records are being produced today that are not meant to be commercial, but are meant to express the desires, tastes and ingenuities of the musicians. You'll hear all about this on a new program on WMUA called, "The Sounds of Now". This show, hosted by Bob Sawyer, will be heard every Saturday night from 7:30 to 8:30. The first show is this Saturday (tomorrow). Give a listen. That's WMUA, 91.1 FM.

more funds become available in January.

Officials also made these points: Under the summer program, needy students were placed in work study jobs both on and off campus. University spokesmen said that the jobs off campus included work with the Commonwealth Service Corps, YMCA and YWCA and recreation programs.

Officials also made it clear that notification of 1968 fall semester work study appointments will go out next summer along with other financial aid announcements. This will give students who do not qualify a chance to seek other sources of income before arriving on campus in September.

Officials in the financial aid office said that students seeking jobs should contact the various departments to see if funds are still available for part-time employment. Placement will also assist students seeking part-time work off-campus.

Boston Strangler Receives Sentence

BOSTON (AP)—The state prosecutor in the last winter's trial of the self-styled Boston Strangler, Albert DeSalvo, said Thursday DeSalvo will be "tucked away for a long, long time" in state prison.

DeSalvo was sentenced Wednesday to a 7-10 year term for his escape with the two inmates from Bridgewater State Hospital.

That sentence will be added to a life term previously imposed for assaults on four Greater Boston women.

Asst. Atty. Gen. Donald Conn, who prosecuted DeSalvo in both trials, said the commonwealth did not plan to seek indictments against DeSalvo or any other individual for the stranglings.

There still is no admissible evidence.

New Punt Dictum Spurs Coaches' Opposition

Bucknell's Huntress Implies Rule Legalizes Maiming

by STEVE ROSS
Staff Reporter

Fans will love it, coaches hate it, and trainers will put in for overtime as the new punt return rule goes into effect this season. Tomorow, when Nick Warnock takes the snap from center and punts, a few Redmen will be conspicuously absent downfield.

VIC FUSIA

This will be forced by the rule that prohibits interior linemen from going down field until the ball is kicked.

Bucknell coach Caroll Huntress saw three of his players injured in their opening game last week at B.U. and has pleaded that the rule be discontinued before there are any further injuries. He lost three players, the Terriers lost the same and he's worried about someone being shelved permanently.

UMass coach Vic Fusia is opposed to the rule. He feels that the punting team is forced into a position that requires too few men to do too many things. As it stands right now, only four men can run down under a punt.

Last weekend, when a few teams opened their seasons, there were nine touchdowns scored on returns exceeding 50 yards. The longest was an 89 yarder by Tom Curts of Clarion. All this happened when less than 20% of the teams was in action.

The punt is programmed to take 6.4 seconds from the snap to the catch. The snap takes .7 seconds, the punter takes 1.2 seconds to boot the ball, and the ball should be in the air for 4.5 seconds. A minimum of 4.0 seconds is necessary for decent coverage.

Fusia feels that the rules committee has "legislated against good coaching." He then went on to explain.

"Through the years, because of good coaching, the long punt return became scarce. Now the delicate balance of the game has been disturbed," Fusia said.

Nick Warnock has been instructed by Fusia to punt the ball a little bit higher to afford better coverage, even though it will sacrifice some distance. Punting out of bounds will be another way of elimiating the long return.

Fusia explained it at the blackboard by diagramming the punt. "Only four men can release after throwing a brush block. These four men can be held up by four men at the line of scrimmage. The five interior linemen cannot move downfield until the punt, so the returning team can set up up a wall along the sideline quite easily. This will result in blind side blocks and cause many injuries," Fusia said.

Bucknell's Huntress goes a step further, complaining the new rule "gives the defense legal authority to maime a person."

Tight UM-Maine Series Since 1909

The UMass-Maine series started in 1909 and since then has developed into one of the closest rivalries around. UMass leads, 8-4-1, but since 1958 the widest margin was the Redmen's 10-0 "rout" of the Black Bears in 1962.

METAWAMPE'S GRID PICKS

With malice toward none, the Daily Collegian's foxy forecaster of football fortunes — Metawampe—sees more these days than the excavation for the Campus Center.

His reports of tomorow's action are the product of pains taking scouting reports from his nation-wide grapevine and the old warrior's uncanny calculations—also the flask hidden in his powerhorn.

Metawampe's astutenes may be earning him more than just a sense of pride. He was allegedly spotted at Arthur's Farm late in the summer, a fact that even Life failed to report.

The stone-faced spirit of the Redmen has two general comments on the new collegiate football season. Fusia's fellows will foil all foes and the new punt rule will force fan frenzy, but then again Metawampe has no bones to break.

Always the perfectionist, he has vowed to head for Tallahatchie Bridge if the Redmen lose a single game — or if the Cosa Nostra decides to put an end to his winning habit.

Red Sox Heroics Continue

Cleveland's Rally Falls Short, 6-5

CLEVELAND (AP) — Dalton Jones lined a two-run single in Boston's three-run sixth inning and the Red Sox went on to defeat Cleveland, 6-5, Thursday night to hang onto a share of the lead on the torrid American League race.

The Red Sox remained tied with Minnesota, which beat Kansas City, one game ahead of Chicago and 1½ games in front of Detroit, both of which were idle.

The Red Sox nursed a 1-0 lead into the sixth off Cleveland starter Sam Bergan. Walks to Mike Andrews and Carl Yastrzemski, George Scott's sacrifice, and an intentional pass to Reggie Smith filed the bases.

Jones' single scored Andrews and Yastrzemski, and Smith made it home for the third run on a wild pitch.

The Indians got back one run in the sixth, when Rick Scheinblum walked, Chuck Hinton singled with two out — the second hit off Boston starter Gary Bell —and Tony Horton followed with a single to right center.

The Red Sox boosted their margin with two more runs in the seventh, when Bell aided his own cause with a double. Jose Tartabull tripled, scoring Bell, and a single by Andrews — his third hit—brought Tartabull racing home.

The Indians came back with three runs in the seventh. Jim King hit a pinch single, and Lee Maye followed with a ground rule double. Both scored when Vic Davalillo's grounder got past Boston first baseman George Scott.

Rifle Dropped by Yan-Con as Sport

Rifle has been dropped as a Yankee Conference championship sport because of a lack of qualified coaches in the conference schools.

The announcement was made by Warren P. McGuirk, dean of the school of physical education and director of athletics, at the University Athletic Council meeting earlier this week.

Athletic directors of the six conference schools decided during their summer meeting to abandon league rifle competition, citing the fact that many ROTC officers, who were serving as rifle coaches, have been transferred to various locations by the Pentagon.

McGuirk said that although UMass will continue its rifle program, pistol shooting will not be offered until there are enough interested students.

Killebrew, Oliva Homer to Pace Twins to 4-0 Victory over K. C.

MINNEAPOLIS-ST. PAUL (AP) Harmon Killebrew and Tony Oliva slammed successive home runs in the sixth inning Thursday, powering Minnesota to a 4-0 victory over Kansas City behind Jim Meritt's two-hit pitching.

Third-place Chicago and fourth-place Detroit, both idle Thursday, slipped one game and 1½ games back, respectively.

Chuck Dobson checked the Twins on four singles through five innings, until Killebrew and Oliva unloaded in the sixth.

Cecar Tovar launched the Twins' three-run rally by drawing a leadoff walk on a 3-2 pitch.

Killebrew followed with his 40th home run of the season, a towering blast 430 feet into the pavilion in left-center field.

Then Oliva stepped up and whacked an opposite field line drive, which carried 370 feet into the pavilion in left. It was Oliva's 17th homer and second in as many days.

Merritt, now 13-6, gave up only Bert Campaneris' infield single in the first inning and John Donaldson's line single to leftcenter in the fourth.

Correction

Adam's Smashers did not beat Hampshire Hardnoses for last year's campus touch football title as was reported in The Daily Collegian. The Smashers did not play Hampshire as the latter was declared ineligible for the championship because of grad students on its squad.

Potent Redmen Offense Crushes Maine Bears

By MIKE CURRAN
Staff Reporter

ORONO, ME.—UMass unveiled a potent offense here Saturday in crushing the Maine Black Bear, 30-9, in the Yankee Conference opener.

The Redmen piled up 423 yards, 273 on the ground and 151 by air, in gaining their biggest margin of victory in a Maine game. The Black Bears put up a tough fight in the first half, but UMass completely dominated the second period and had no trouble at all moving the ball.

After stopping Maine's opening kickoff drive at the Redmen 18 yard line, UMass marched up the field for a score. Wingback Gerry Grasso took his first varsity handoff and gained 18 yards around the left side. Tim Driscoll and Greg Landry did most of the work on the drive, with Driscoll eventually putting the visitors on the scoreboard.

Maine threatened at the beginning of the second quarter. Sophomore quarterback Dave Wing hit end Gene Benner on a 60 yard pass-run play. Only a fine open-field tackle by junior transfer Bill Frye kept Benner from paydirt. Maine was stopped on downs and the Redmen started their second touchdown march from the 12.

Landry and Driscoll did the bulk of the running on this drive, but Landry also went to the air, hitting Grasso and end Bill Carty for good gains. Driscoll had the honors again, diving over from the one. Ed Sherman's conversion made it 13-0.

On the ensuing kickoff the Black Bears employed a little razzle-dazzle. Charles Harney took Sherman's boot at the 11, handed it to Benner who reversed direction and galloped to the UMass 40. From there Wing passed the home team to a score, hitting on five of five throws.

George platter, who had opened the game at quarterback, made a beautiful catch in the end zone for Maine's first and only score.

Governor Volpe Outlines Formula For Successful Republican Campaign

By SHARON GALLANT
Republican Campaign

"Good judgment and lots and lots of hard work"—this is Governor John A. Volpe's recipe for a successful political campaign. The governor spoke at UMass last Friday when he addressed a gathering of Republican campaign workers attending a series of training forums here in preparation for the 1968 campaign.

In outlining his thoughts on campaign conduction, Volpe stressed teamwork as a requisite ingredient for success. "Teamwork pays off," stated Volpe. "Look what it's done for the Red Sox."

He went on to emphasize the total involvement and responsibility demanded of every campaign worker. "If you are here to take instead of to give, then you are in the wrong room," he told the campaigners. "There are no winners in political elections unless there are fighters," he said. "The glory of victory is always born in the quiet of drudgery."

Volpe spoke at length about individual strategies, scheduling techniques and personal campaign hints, including his "Five C's" for winning an election — "A cause, a candidate, campaigners, communications and . . . cold cash."

The governor was optimistic about the Republican chances in 1968. "We all know that this state is slightly Democratic. In fact, some people call it 'Kennedyland' ", he said. "But there is a Republican victory in the making in -1968. The American people are seeking new leadership."

"People want more and more to elect people, and less and less to elect parties. We must assess our capabilities, and recognize our liabilities," concluded Volpe.

"We'll win only if we deserve to win."

Repair Work is Underway On Greenough Dormitory

The Department of Maintenance has announced that repair work is now under way at Greenough House and will continue until the damaged areas are up to normal standards. However, according to the House Government of Greenough, there remains much to be done in the dorm.

The reaction of the House to the work being done was a happy one, but there was also a fear that after the damage that resulted from the summer Upward Bound program is repaired the remaining complaints will once again be forgotten. The President of the House noted that the dorm still has had no results on its request for a laundry area with machines and a sink in their kitchenette.

As a result, the House Government has decided to keep up pressure to solve these problems without undue delay. The House President noted that the residence must have laundry machines as the nearby dorms have little space to spare for residents of Greenough who must now do their laundry outside Greenough.

Cooperating with the House Government will be the Daily Collegian and the Services Committee of the Student Senate. Chairman of the Committee, Louis Smith announced that he has appointed member Larry Marcus to deal with the problem and help the House Government get positive results from the Administration in solving the urgent needs of Greenough.

Voters Go To Polls in Crowded Boston Primary

By RICHARD S. KLINE
Daily Collegian News Editor

Boston voters will trek to the polls tomorrow and decide which two of the ten candidates for mayor of the Hub will contest for the position in the November election.

As in most Boston elections, charges and countercharges, endorsements and other statements have flown hot and heavy. Not one of the ten candidates is going to come out of this election unscathed.

Four of the hopefuls have an excellent chance of making the final ballot. Secretary of State Kevin H. White, former School Committee chairman Louise Day Hicks, state Representative John W. Sears, and former Boston Redevelopment Administrator Edward J. Logue are the leaders of the pack, in that order.

Following behind them are City Councilor Christopher Iannella, State Senator Stephen Davenport, City Councilor Peter Hines, chairman of the School Committee John J. McDonough, Boston businessman Nicholas Abraham, and member of the Boston Licensing Board Albert L. "Dapper" O'Neil, also expected to finish in that order.

White, who as Secretary of State has been a popular and strong vote getter, places school construction on top priority and says that "Communications between the people and city hall will be improved . . ."

Louise Day Hicks, a tremendous vote getter in the city in her successful bids for the Boston School Committee, is the only candidate who has been charged with racism. "You know where I stand," she has told the people. Her stand is that there is no racial problem in the city.

Mrs. Hicks has been indirectly attacked by both Senator Edward Kennedy and directly by current mayor of Boston John Collins. Kennedy appealed to voters to support candidates who can deal with the city's problems "not from emotion and intolerance but from experience and understanding."

Kennedy also stated that "Boston needs a mayor who can command respect—from its sister cities in this state, from the leaders of commerce and industry who make the decisions on whether to bring jobs here or move them out . . ." The implication here is the same as John McDonough has used as his campaign slogan, "To vote Mrs. Hicks is to ask for violence."

Mrs. Hicks, however, feels that the Senator's statement was an endorsement of every candidate in the field. "Every candidate running in the primary should consider his statement an endorsement," Mrs. Hicks said, pointing out that Senator

ED LOGUE, running on his record as Boston Redevelopment Authority Administrator and other vast experience is using the catch phrase of "One man stands out."

Boston's Crowded Primary Elections

MAYOR JOHN COLLINS

Kennedy chose to neither name a favorite candidate nor list candidates he did not favor.

Mayor Collins has stated that he "won't vote for Mrs. Hicks next Tuesday and I won't vote for her in November."

John Sears is the only Republican in the race and although the Boston election has no party labels on the ballot, he is sure to pull the G.O.P. votes in the city. He is the first Republican candidate for mayor since the late '40's and has been serious and specific in advocating political reforms, better schools, cleaner streets and other issues. Governor John A. Volpe has endorsed Sears and will campaign with him tomorrow.

Mayor Collins who will step down to become a professor of Urban Studies at M.I.T., is "going to vote for Ed Logue for Mayor." Most Logue voters are these satisfied with the way Logue and Collins have run the city for the last eight years. In seven years, Logue has spent half a billion dollars in public money on city renewal without a scandal, a major accomplishment in Boston.

"The job of Mayor," Collins has said, "is becoming more and more difficult and more complex every day and Mr. Logue has a thorough understanding of the job. He is well qualified and would make a good mayor if elected."

Logue's challenging Kevin White's nomination papers a few weeks ago, which led to a big row, may have lost him a few votes, but his supporters are loyal ones and seem unshaken. However, those who dislike him do so vehemently and are strongly opposed to his winning. Many still think of him as the head of a sinister organization, the BRA, which wants to kick everyone out of their homes.

In the final analysis, it's going to be one of the wildest, toughest races in Boston political history, including the brutal Powers-Collins race a few years ago. Everyone wants to run against Mrs. Hicks and whoever does will probably get the endorsement of all the candidates who lose.

A small vote would probably favor Louise Day Hicks. She has a militant corps of supporters which probably hasn't grown a great deal since the day that she announced her candidacy for mayor. But, it may be all that she needs.

A large vote will help Logue, White, Iannella, and perhaps Sears.

In any case, the results of tomorrow's election will tell many stories and perhaps decide the fate of "The NEW BOSTON."

Tufts Inaugurates New President In Ceremonies

MEDFORD, Mass. (AP) — Dr. Burton C. Hallowell became the ninth president of Tufts University Sunday during inauguration ceremonies attended by 38 college and university presidents.

More than 5,000 attended the ceremonies as President Nathan M. Pusey of Harvard extended greetings of the academic community and Gov. John A. Volpe spoke for the Commonwealth.

In his inauguration address, Dr. Hallowell called for this nation's universities and colleges to "infuse their entire educational process with a climate of concern for the individual . . ."

Dr. Hallowell was executive vice president of Wesleyan University before assuming his duties at Tufts Sept. 1.

ROTC Accepts Applications For Air Force Commissions

Air Force ROTC is accepting applications from those students who are interested in obtaining an Air Force commission and who will have two academic years remaining with the beginning of the 1968-1969 academic year.

The two year program is designed for those students who have decided to seek a commission since entering the University or have transferred from a college not sponsoring Air Force ROTC. The two years may be undergraduate, graduate or a combination of both.

Applicants seeking enrollment must pass a written exam, the Air Force medical exam and be selected by an interview board of Air Force officers.

Those who are qualified will attend a six-week Field Training Course, on an Air Force base, to prepare them for entry into the Professional Course during the summer preceding the 1968-1969 academic year. The student receives travel pay and salary while at the summer camp.

During their two years in the program, cadets receive $50.00 per month.

Students desiring additional information about the program should contact the Air Force ROTC detachment located in Dickinson Hall or phone 5-2437.

As selections will be made in the early Spring of 1968, interested students should apply as soon as possible to permit ample time to process applications.

Amateur Skydiver Dies in Plunge

ROCKLEDGE, Fla. (AP) — A young aerospace reporter, an amateur skydiver whose wife died exactly five weeks earlier in a parachuting accident, plunged 2,500 feet to his death Sunday at the same airport.

Brevard County officials said John Wasik, 27, hurtled to earth at the Green Air Park where his pretty wife, Rickie, 22, died Aug. 20.

Egypt to Hold Courts-martial After Defeat by Israeli Army

CAIRO (AP) — Three courts-martial will be held after investigations into Egypt's disastrous defeat by Israel last June, the semi-official newspaper Al Ahram announced Monday.

Al Ahram said the courts-martial will be held to try: — Those responsible for negligence which led to the military setback, an investigation of which was carried out by a special military and scientific committee.

—Those who participated with Field Marshal Abdel Hakim Amer, former armed forces commander, in a plot against the Iasser regime. Amer killed himself.

—The role of Egyptian intelligence in both cases.

UMass Index Staff Is Presented With Lecture and Demonstration

By CAROL MEGIASKY
Staff Reporter

About one hundred and fifty members of the 1967-68 Index staff witnessed a lecture-demonstration series presented by Don Lendry and Pat Carney, representatives of the American Yearbook Company in the student Senate Chambers. The purpose of this series was to introduce new members of the staff to the methods and means of yearbook production.

Five special areas of emphasis concerned with yearbook production were covered by the two gentlemen: planning and organization, creativity and graphic image, yearbook covers, copy, and photography.

In a lecture coinciding with slide demonstrations of a variety of yearbook types and methods, Mr. Lendry and Mr. Carney covered these topics thoroughly and succinctly, thus stimulating the Index staff with new ideas and interest and enthusiasm for a "better than ever before Index.

The overall emphasis in this workshop centered around the importance of modernism and progressivism in today's American yearbook. In the words of Dr. Dario Politella, Index advisor and a guest speaker at this meeting, "A yearbook is history at leisure. Write for history. Be conscious of readers.

The aim of this year's Index staff is to create a yearbook long to be remembered and referred to as a most complete chapter in the history of UMass in "the year that was."

Revelers Bring Spirit Of Maine to Campus

By BILL DICKINSON
Staff Reporter

Saturday the Revelers were able to bring some of the spirit of the opening game with Maine to Amherst.

For those who could not travel the 400 miles to the University of Maine campus with the Redmen, the Revelers supplied food and entertainment by the campus pond to accompany a live broadcast of the game.

Some 60 fans turned out to lie in the sun and listen to the game over a special loudspeaker set-up courtesy of WMUA.

This was the first time a public broadcast of an "away-game" had been tried on campus, and judging by the reaction of the crowd it seemed to be a success. Stressing that the event was experimental, Revelers President Phil Dube said, "We're very pleased with the turnout. I think we did more for the team by staying here than if we had gone to Maine with them."

Dube also praised the cooperation the Revelers received from WMUA, the Scrolls, Maroon Keys and Southwest Patriots.

The "Sound Foundation", a campus rock group, provided music at half-time and after the game.

United Auto Workers Claim Ford Unwilling To Discuss Strike Contract Negotiations

WASHINGTON (AP)—Walter P. Reuther, president of the AFL-CIO United Auto Workers, said again Sunday the Ford Motor Co. is unwilling to discuss economics in contract negotiations to end the three-week old strike by the labor union.

"We have been saying from the very beginning of these negotiations that our workers are asking for equity," Reuther said "We want no more than that.

"We are determined to take no less; that the equity of a Ford worker should not be something arbitrary that we determine or something arbitrary that the company determines, that the worker's equity should be a reflection of the increase in productivity and the worker's share of that, and it seems to me that the only rational and responsible way to conduct collective bargaining within a free society is to base collective bargaining decisions on economic facts and not economic power."

Reuther made his remarks on the NBC rado and television network program, "Meet the Press."

He said the labor union chose to strike Ford, instead of Chrysler or General Motors, because the workers of that company asked for authorization to get out on strike.

He also said the union gave authorization for the strike against Ford only—and not the other two auto companies—"because we are trying to minimize the strike impact upon the general economy and so we picked one corporation."

Ambassador Goldberg Defends Action On Seeking Soviet Aid in Vietnam War

NEW YORK (AP) — Arthur J. Goldberg, U.S. ambassador to the United Nations, said Sunday he does not believe the Soviet rejection of his bid for help in getting North Vietnam to the conference table has wrecked hopes for peace in Southwest Asia.

"It is true that Mr. Gromyko's words this week at the U.N. were not very encouraging," said Goldberg, referring to Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko. "There was a lot of invective, and invective does not contribute to the cause of peace."

Goldberg made his remarks on the CBS radio-television network program, "Face the Nation."

Southwest Residents Enjoy Concert By Yale Glee Club

BY SALLY DOLGIN
News Day Editor

Southwest residents took a break from Sunday eve studies to enjoy the smooth sound of the Yale Whiffenpoofs.

This was the renowned choral group's second appearance at the University. The performers, however, brought an entirely new sound, for the group consists only of Seniors. The fourteen members, led by their leader, Bob Birge, entertained an appreciative audience with such old favorites as "Just One of Those Things"", "My Kind of Girl", and "When My Sugar Goes Down the Street". Arm in arm, they sang the traditional Whiffenpoof drinking song about the poor little lambs who lost their way.

For young men who have lost their way, the group seems to have done quite well so far. They have performed five times this year, their most recent engagement taking place at Martha's Vineyard. Business manager Rick Mann plans, for the future, trips to Puerto Rico, Bermuda, and a special appearance on the Andy Williams Show in Hollywood.

The Southwest Cultural Committee provides entertainment every Sunday evening for members of the Residential College.

University Convocation

A second all-University Convocation will be held tomorrow at 10:10 on the lawn of Goodell Library. The President of the University, John W. Lederle will deliver the major address.

While most UMass students have passed through a receiving line and grasped the hand of the president, it has been only a smaller number of students who have heard Lederle speak.

At the risk of being banal, we urge all students and staff to attend the Convocation . . .

He may very well not say anything profound or make any major policy announcements. But Lederle is your president. This is the man that all the Boston newspapers quote.

He has invited you to come. Go, it may be worth your while.

Car Inspection

The six-week period allotted for fall inspection of motor vehicles in Massachusetts is half gone. Those who already have fulfilled this semiannual obligation are in the clear until next April, but those who haven't must do so in the next three weeks, and three of those 21 days are Sundays. The longer you put it off the more the chances of having to wait in line.

Inspection is not only an obligation. It is also an opportunity, and a prospective measure for the benefit of every motorist, and though many regard it as a nuisance the few minutes it takes to have the car officially checked and given a windshield sticker are well spent. One's own safety and that of family and friends, as well as of everybody else on the highways, is at stake.

The chances of accident and damage, of injury and fatality, multiply as the number of cars and drivers increases; defective machinery and faulty equipment enhance the danger. Even with brakes, accessories, lights, tires, steering gear, and muffler in perfect condition the uncertain intangible human element leaves much to be desired.

Carelessness, lawlessness, excessive speed and drunken driving are among the most flagrant abuses of the privilege of using the public thoroughfares for business and pleasure. Driving is a sanction, not a legal right. You have to get permission, which is granted on condition that all applicable laws are obeyed, and other people's rights considered, and which can be revoked for cause.

In Massachusetts, semiannual inspection has been in vogue since 1935, annual checkups having become mandatory in 1929. Three years before that a voluntary "Save-a-Life" campaign began, with similar plans in New York and Maryland. Even now fewer than half the states have official inspection programs, but under the Federal Highway Safety Act highway construction funds may soon become unavailable to those that don't.

The fact that in some states the ratio of fatalities and maiming accidents to the number of cars and their total mileage has been slightly reduced is no consolation to those who pay and mourn. The toll in lives keeps rising—over 50,000 a year now, a national average of about 1,000 every week. It was over 900 last year in Massachusetts alone.

Care care, like driving care, is a factor in accident prevention and in curbing insurance costs. State inspection is proof of watchful supervision, and the assurance that one's vehicle, new or old, is fit for the road is a source of renewed confidence.

Autumn

Another equinox occurs and, by those charts and markers we use to divide time and measure our lives, today is autumn. For a little while now, days and nights will be almost equal, dawn to dusk, dusk to dawn, and the sun will rise and set almost true east and west. Then it will be October, tenth month of our twelve-month year, and moving toward the winter solstice.

So much for the arbitrary boundaries, which are for the almanacs and the record books, even less imperative than the figures on a sundial. The autumn with which we live is as variable as the wind, the weather, the land itself. Its schedule is that of the woodland trees, the wild grasses, the migrant birds. Go to northern Maine and you can walk with frost. Go to Carolina and you can bask in late summer sun. Travel north or south and you touch the year in another place. Stay where you are and it comes to you in its own time.

Essentially, autumn is the quiet completion of spring and summer. Spring was all eagerness and beginnings, summer was growth and flowering. Autumn is the achievement summarized, the harvested grain, the ripened apple, the grape in the wine press. Autumn is the bright leaf in the woodland, the opened husk on the bittersweet berry, the froth of asters at the roadside.

Leave the equinox to the record-keepers and know autumn where you find it, when it comes. See it, smell it, taste it, and forget the time of day or year. Autumn needs no clock or calendar.

Open Letter:

Food Services?

by LEWIS SMITH, Chairman, Service Committee, Senator James House

Last year a standing subcommittee in the area of food services was formed. It consists of the University Business Manager, Mr. Grady; the Dean of Students, Dean Field; the Associate Director of Food Services, Mr. Stoneham; Commons Managers, Student Senators and non-Senators.

Basically, the year was very productive. A policy of unlimited seconds was instituted and such things as chocolate milk and juices became a reality. Such was last year; this year new problems have developed. It is these problems with which we must concern ourselves.

Toward the end of last year a policy of exemption for Greeks at Southwest was discussed. At the beginning of discussions, Mr. Grady and Dean Field were of the opinion that such a policy was feasible for this year. At this time, however, an opposite opinion was held by Dr. Mark Noffsinger and Mr. Stoneham. As time progressed and more meetings and discussions were held, the possibility of these exemptions, on a limited basis, increased. Towards the beginning of May, 1967, talks on this subject had progressed to the point where 150 Greeks were being considered as a limited exemption for this year. This verbal understanding had also progressed to the point where the Chairman of the subcommittee had announced the intended exemption on the floor of the Student Senate.

As all Southwest Greeks know, as well as many others, this verbal understanding completely died during the summer. This is bad enough, but the major problem is that no one seems to know just where the verbal understanding lies buried. Arrangements have been made for a meeting with President Lederle this coming Thursday, in order to determine an answer to this mystery.

With this have come other certain and serious problems. Let us take, for example, the lines at both Southwest dining halls. Each of these Commons is serving approximately 500 people over their capacity. Students at Southwest have clocked a 27 minute wait to enter the serving lines. In the light of all this, student employees have actually been laid off. Soon it is going to get cold. . .Can you imagine a 20 or 30 minute wait in the freezing wind?? It stands to reason that many students will cut meals rather than wait in the cold. Indeed, this will be the final outcome of such a situation. . .Is the Administration going to allow this to happen?? I strongly feel, that if exemptions of some form were allowed at Southwest this problem could be somewhat alleviated.

Having dealt very closely with the University Food Services, I am very much aware of the financial problems which they face. How the University Food Services got into the red is of much concern to me as a student, a Senator, and a holder of a meal ticket. I personally feel that the deficit is not the fault of today's Administration; but that of poor management in the past. I can see no other way that an operating concern can, in the space of a couple of years, go from a financial position of hundreds of thousands of dollars in the black to a financial position of hundreds of thousands of dollars in the red; especially since the Food Services are supposed to be non-profit, non-loss organization.

In conclusion, let the organs of the University make attempts to alleviate their financial troubles, but not at the expense of the student. The student is not guilty of mismanagement, therefore, he should not be forced to pay the consequences of mismanagement.

An immediate means must be taken to alleviate the situation at Southwest; such a means to this end would be a policy of immediate exemptions at Southwest.

Campus Comment

Damaged Dorms

To the editor:

The front page article in the Thursday, September 21st issue of the Daily Collegian entitled "Greenough Students Protest Poor Dorm Conditions stated that "the cause of the extensive damage (in the dorm) is attributed to the Summer Upward Bound Program". The fact that the Daily Collegian has given Upward Bound front page notice gives me the opportunity to raise a major issue presented by the Upward Bound students on the University of Massachusetts campus.

The issue is whether the University student wishes to regard the presence on campus of a program to aid educationally the youngster from a poverty background as an inconvenience brought about by some damage to a residence hall or as a humanitarian effort to help the underprivileged.

It appears that the Collegian has clearly taken sides in this issue. It further appears that the Collegian prefers to side with convenience. I would hope that the student reader would applaud the courage of the Upward Bound Staff in bringing 100 youngsters from poverty backgrounds to the campus for an educational program which lasts several weeks through the summer.

I would think the students would want to identify themselves with this courageous band of students and faculty that staff Upward Bound. For these students and faculty are committed to an active program helping to ameliorate poverty, encourage civil rights, and liberties and alleviate human misery. Upward Bound needs your sympathy and understanding and you need them as an example of the fulfillment of youthful idealism and of a promise of a better world to come.

Alvin E. Winder
Associate Professor of Education

(Ed: The sentence quoted above from our news story was immediately followed by this sentence: "Although most of the Greenough residents agreed the program was a desirable one, they were disturbed by the failure of the Upward Bound Administration to assume immediate responsibility for the damage. . . .")

Slides and Lecture Given By Public Health Service

By JOHN K. CLARK

Since 1958, there has been a 270% increase in the number of syphillis cases in the United States, while the number of gonorrhea cases has gone up five per cent yearly in the same period. Such were the statistics cited by Dr. Nicolas Fiumara, the Director of the Division of Communicable Diseases in the State Department of Public Health, at a lecture in Mahar Auditorium.

Dr. Fiumara also stated that although there is no age limit to venereal disease, its greatest occurrence is among youths between fifteen and twenty-five. During the course of the lecture, Dr. Fiumara expounded on the three stages of syphillis, and how to recognize them, illustrating his point with candid slides of actual cases.

Following the lecture, the audience was permitted to direct questions to either Dr. Fiumara or Dr. Thomas McBride of the Student Health Center. Dr. McBride revealed that on this campus no active case of syphillis have been reported, but that between ten and twenty cases of gonorrhea are reported to the Health Center yearly.

Officials at the Center anticipate an increase, but do not know whether to attribute it to an absolute increase in VD on campus, or simply as a sign by the students of an increase in the confidentiality of the Health Center. Dr. McBride did emphasize that any student in doubt may go to the Health Services, assured that no one will find out.

On the subject of educating the student body in this matter, Dr. McBride revealed that a film concerning VD, The Innocent Ones, is available to any dorm through the Health Center. Speaking further on educating the students regarding VD, he said, "Men are more reluctant to ask questions. We find that girls are more concerned and better informed regarding sex."

The program was taped for later broadcast by WFCR.

Asten Martin Co. Announces New Luxury Sports Car

OAS Ministers Plan Denouncement Of Fidel Castro's Communist Regime

WASHINGTON (AP) — A U.S.-supported move to blacklist non-Communist world firms trading with Cuba was reported defeated as the hemisphere foreign ministers struggled to wind up their special conference on the Castro-Communist threat.

But amid lengthy, conference-prolonged debate behind closed doors, the Organization of American States foreign affairs chiefs did agree to denounce Fidel Castro's regime and adopt various short-of-force recommendations to block subversion from Havana.

They generally agreed "to condemn forcefully the present government of Cuba for its acts of repeated intervention and aggression against Venezula and for its persistent policy of intervention in the internal affairs of Bolivia and other American states, through incitement and active and admitted support of armed bands and other subversive activities directed against the governments of these states."

Only Mexico, the sole OAS member which continues diplomatic relations with Havana despite the 1964 OAS decision to cut them, announced its intent to abstain on the final resolution being put together by the foreign ministers.

But there was long and sometimes contentious discussion about practical new steps to restrain Cuba's exports of subversion and considerable opposition to some U.S. propositions for clamping down on non-Communist traders with Castro's regime.

Secretary of State Dean Rusk, who had planned to fly to New York Sunday afternoon for meetings at the United Nations in the coming week, postponed his take-off until Monday morning because of the lagging progress in the OAS conference.

The three-day high level OAS gathering had been slated to end around mid-day Sunday.

At the Lobby Counter of the Student Union, a University Lost and Found service is maintained. Articles found on campus may be brought there until claimed.

Hillel Begins Lecture Series Talk on Youth's Problems

Dr. Bert S. Gerard, of White Plains, N.Y., will open this year's Hillel Lecture Series, by speaking to the Four College community on "The Quest for Involvement." The lecture, to take place on Tuesday, Sept. 26, at 8:30 p.m., in the Plymouth Room, S.U., will give an overview of "The New Style of Rebellion," the theme of this years series.

Dr. Gerard will examine the causes of modern youth's search for experience, ranging from drug experimentation, to hippie communities, to the many examples of our increased social consciousness.

DR. BERT S. GERARD

All the topics will then be discussed individually and in greater depth in subsequent lectures schedules for October 17, November 7, 28, and December 12. All of the lectures will be on Tuesday evenings at 8:30 p.m.

Dr. Gerard is both the Director of Education and Temple Administrator of Westchester Reform Temple, Scarsdale, N.Y.

Prior to his position with the Temple which he assumed in July, 1964, he lived on Long Island where he served in public schools as a teacher of English and history, a guidance counselor, and assistant superintendent of schools over a fifteen year period.

In his religious activities, he has served as a trustee and committee chairman in the Union Reform Temple in Freeport, and the Community Synagogue in Port Washington. He taught religious school for fifteen years, and directed the youth activities of the synagogue in Port Washington.

During the summer, Dr. Gerard serves for two weeks as the Co-Dean of the Haigah, or Arts Festival of the National Federation of Temple Youth in Warwick, N.Y. A recognized authority on youth work, he is the author of three booklets and several studies on temple youth activities. He also serves on the National Camp Commission of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations as a regional consultant.

Dr. Gerard is a trustee of the National Association of Temple Educators, and is the editor of that organization's professional journal. He is also the secretary-treasurer of the Metropolitan New York Chapter of the National Association of Temple Administrators.

A member of Phi Delta Kappa, Dr. Gerard received his A.B. at Brooklyn College, his Masters from Hofstra University, and did his doctoral work at NYU in Guidance and Personnel Administration.

This will be Dr. Gerard's second visit to the UMass campus. Last year he was well-received when he opened the Lecture Series by speaking of modern American Jewish authors.

RockyDefends LBJ'sProgram For The Cities

NEW YORK (AP) — Republican Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller of New York praised President Johnson's antipoverty program Sunday, and disagreed with GOP complaints that the President had refused to recognize the problems of the cities.

"He as much as anyone anticipated the situation. His antipoverty program will go down in history," Rockefeller said on the ABC program, "Issues and Answers."

The governor said, however, that Johnson "should have done more in the way of creating a consensus" on the necessity for antipoverty action.

Whitney M. Young, head of the Urban League, appeared on the program with Rockefeller and said that the criticism of John son by the Republican Coordinating Committee was "obviously political."

Jones Drives in 5 as Sox Win, 11-8

Adair, Scott Rap 4 Hits Apiece

BALTIMORE (AP)—Dalton Jones knocked in five runs as the tenacious Boston Red Sox ripped the Baltimore Orioles 11-7 Sunday and kept pace in the four-team battle for the American League pennant.

The victory gave the Red Sox sole possession of second place and kept them one-half game behind the league leading Minnesota Twins, who trounced New York 9-4.

Jim Lonborg, expected to start two of Boston's four remaining games, was replaced after hurling a two-hit shutout through six innings and received credit for his 21st victory against eight defeats.

Jones, an infrequent starter in the Boston infield, tripled home two runs in the first inning, singled with the bases loaded for two more in the fourth and drilled a run-scoring double in the four-run ninth.

The Red Sox, who had lost five of six decisions to the Orioles in nine days but remained in contention for the flag, scored in each of the first five innings to go ahead 7-0 and pin the defeat on Tom Phoebus, 14-9.

Five of the seven runs were scored after two men were retired, with walks or hit batsmen figuring in all but one rally.

Boston, the league's best hitting team, rapped out 18 hits, including four each by Jones, Jerry Adair and George Scott, who walloped his 18th homer in the ninth for two runs.

One of the two hits off Lonborg was a bunt single, with the Orioles needing a two-base error by Scott to advance a runner past second base.

Boston's infield defense collapsed after Darrell Brandon relieved Lonborg. Errors by Adair and Jones led to an unearned Oriole run in the seventh and

Twins Win, 9-4, Behind Chance

MINNEAPOLIS-ST. PAUL (AP)—Bob Allison crashed a three-run homer and Harmon Killebrew hit his 41st of the season, powering Dean Chance to his 20th victory as the Minnesota Twins clung to the American League lead Sunday with a 9-4 triumph over the New York Yankees.

The victory sent the Twins one half game ahead of Boston.

Minnesota wrapped it up early, teeing off on Yank starter Steve Barber, 10-18, for seven runs in the first two innings.

Allison belted his homer into the left field pavilion with two out in the first inning following a walk, a fielder's choice and Killebrew's single.

The Twins then lashed five singles—four off Barber and one off reliever Bill Monbouquette—in the second inning to pour four more runs across the plate. Hits by Zoilo Versalles, Killebrew and Tony Oliva, plus Cesar Tovar's sacrifice fielder's choice drove in the runs.

Killebrew lofted his homer into the pavilion in left with the bases empty in the fourth, and the Twins tacked on another run in the fifth when Rod Carew tripled and scored on Jerry Zimmerman's sacrifice fly.

White Sox Top Indians, 3-1; Nats Rally to Spike Tigers, 5-4

The victory kept the White Sox one game back of first place Minnesota in the American League pennant race. The Twins defeated New York Sunday. Chicago hopped into third place, one-half game in front of Detroit which lost to Washington.

McMahon was relieved by Peters after Richie Scheinblum led off the eighth with a double and Joe Azcue followed with a double, scoring Scheinblum.

Peters pitched to only one batter, retiring pinch-hitter Tony Horton on a long fly to left field. He was followed to the mound by Bob Locker, who got the last two outs of the inning.

The loser was starter Sam McDowell, 13-14, who gave up six hits and three runs in three innings.

Meanwhile, Fred Valentine's run scoring single with the two in the ninth inning capped a three-run uprising that gave the Washington Senators a 5-4 victory over the Detroit Tigers Sunday at Washington.

The Senators stormed from behind in the ninth against rookie relievers Fred Lasher and John Hiller and snapped Detroit's three-game winning streak.

The Tigers led 4-2 when Mike Epstein opened the ninth with a sinle off the glove of first baseman Norm Cash. Frank Coggins beat out an infield hit but Lasher got Ken McMullen to bunt into a force play.

Paul Casanova then singled to left, scoring Coggins and chasing Lasher. Hiller came on and retired pinch hitter Cap Peterson on a liner to right.

men's third score. A 20-yarder gave them the ball on the Black Bears' 41, and six plays later Landry circled left end on an 11-yard touchdown run.

With the score now 20-7, Fusia began substituting, trying a number of offensive backfields. Three sophomores, John Decembrele, Ed Sarno and Craig Lovell formed the backbone of UMass' last touchdown drive. Lovell dove into the end zone with two minutes gone in the last quarter.

The UMass defense shone in this period. Maine tried to pull out all stops in an effort to get back in the ball game, but interceptions by Mike McArdle, Ernie Smith, and Steve Rogers turned them back. McArdle's was ruled a safety to the disbelief of many.

After the Black Bears had moved to the Redmen four, McArdle made a leaping grab of a Wing pass and came down in the end zone. The referee signalled safety, but no one took him seriously until the scoreboard read 27-9.

Substitute Redmen quarterbacks Ronn Coltin and Tim Adams were impressive in their first varsity action, as was halfback Fred Hairston.

The offensive line of Bill Warnock, Mike Cooney, Smith, Noel Schablik, Bob Santucci, Jim Mitchell, and Carty opened good holes throughout the game. Fullback Bruce Cochrane also pitched in with some fine blocking.

Defensively, seniors Paul Campbell, Doug Faucette, Bruce Gombar, Kent Stevens, Bruno DeBiak and Paul Milnar stood out. McArdle is the only veteran in the defensive backfield, but newcomers Dennis Gray, Joe Colosi, Larry Fortunoff, Rogers and Frye performed well in their first time out.

It was an impressive display of football, especially considering the history of opening game troubles that have plagued the Redmen in past years.

BU, BC Garner Grid Victories; AIC Shocks UVM

Football, like any other athletic endeavor, depends heavily on skill and equally heavily on that nebulous quantity called luck.

With the opening of the 1967 New England college football campaign Saturday, there were some surprises in games involving this year's Redmen opponents, while in others the fabric of the game was predictable.

Dartmouth and Holy Cross marked time last weekend, but both will see action next Saturday. The following was compiled from the wires of the Associated Press:

The BU Terriers finished their second straight victory by edging Colgate 20-14 on Tommy Thornton's 13-yard pass to Gerry Smith, capping an 80-yard march midway through the final period at Hamilton, N.Y.

Thornton scored once himself before setting up his decisive touchdown pass with a 55-yard aerial to Nick Stipanovich. The triumph avenged a 34-0 loss to the Red Raiders last season.

Boston College had its hands full at Villanova, but pulled out a 27-24 decision over the thrice-beaten Wildcats on Bob Gallivan's 25-yard field goal with 35 seconds remaining.

The Eagles built a 17-0 halftime lead, with the help of a 30-yard field goal by Gallivan, and led 24-16 after three periods. Then they fought back after Villanova tied the count in the final quarter.

American International, another one-game winner in 1966, pulled a shocker in knocking off Vermont 37-25 on the running of Glenn Dumont and Phil DeForge. Dumont, a sophomore, scored one touchdown while gaining 128 yards in 39 carries. DeForge, a senior tallied twice and netted 126 yards in 17 rushes.

Rhode Island, attempting to rebound from a 1-7-1 record, scored twice in the final three minutes to upset Delaware 28-17 at Newark, Del. Larry Caswell's 43-yard pass to Frank Geiselman put the Rams in front and Bill Djerke added an insurance touchdown after a pass interception by Ed Kassack.

In games next Saturday, Army invades Boston College, Boston U. travels to Temple, Dartmouth opens here and Rhode Island takes on Brown.

Other games involving Yankee Conference teams are Connecticut at Vermont, Colby at New Hampshire, and The Citadel at Maine.

RUN BABY RUN — Tim Driscoll (number obscured), UMass halfback, heads for sideline as he attempts to outrun a Maine linebacker in second quarter action Saturday.

Curtain-Raiser Lacks Usual Dramatic Appeal

ORONO, Me—If dismal weather is supposed to foreshadow tragedy, the Redmen haven't been reading the script correctly. Last year a cloudy football day was as rare as a UMass touchdown pass, but although they captured the Yankee Conference title, the Redmen were hardly sunshine supermen.

The margins in the six UMass victories were three, six, five, five, six and seven for a total of 32 points. Each of the victories, and each of the three defeats, was decided in the final minutes, and the team's successful season resulted more from courage than skill.

Of course there were major injuries to two dozen players, but the fact remains that none of the victories was nearly as convincing as Saturday's 30-9 trouncing of Maine.

It was the Redmen's biggest rout since the 46-0 travesty against New Hampshire at Durham Nov. 13, 1965, when Greg Landry was still pitching to Milt Morin and Bob Meers. That was also the year the Redmen lost the Conference Beanpot to Maine because the black Bears won the first-game showdown, 10-8, on a touchdown from an endzone fumble recovery.

Perhaps the most significant statement after Saturday's game was uttered by UMass trainer Vic Keedy: "We're in good shape." He did report that Bruno Debiak had suffered a twisted knee, but the current Redmen injury list, including Don Durkin, Randy Robinson and Joe DiVincenzo is a far cry from that of last year, when Coach Vic Fusia reportedly contemplated moving his office to the Infirmary.

Although Fusia won't say one way or the other, he probably has now the deepest offensive unit he has enjoyed in his seven years as Redman grid boss. And the progress the defense has made since the shaky scrimmage at Harvard has been remarkable.

But as he puffed on his first 1967 victory cigaret, he refused, characteristically, to say that the Redmen are "a football team" yet. "We're starting to mature a little each day," he said with his customary restraint.

Fusia was pleased with the running attack, which was successful up the middle of the line or around the end. Diversity is hard to defense.

He praised quarterback Landry, who appears faster and more confident in his receivers this year than last, and Ernie Smith, who was awarded the game ball by his teammates for his two-way efforts at guard and linebacker.

"I was pleased with Jerry Grasso's debut," Fusia said. The swift sophomore from Everett let it be known that he plans to start for three years when he circled left end for 18 yards on the Redmen's first play from scrimmage.

Maine coach Walt Abbott, at 30 one of the youngest college football coaches in the country, had little to say after his first game at the helm. He refused to make excuses for the Bear defense, which included several new faces.

UMass' "second-string backs were better than anything we had," he said. "You take that kid (Fred) Hairston. He would have been like an All-American for us." Hairston, a junior college transfer from Charlestown, West Virginia, showed some rugged running form, particularly after catching a pass from another sharp-looking reserve, quarterback Ron Coltin, late in the game.

The Redmen "were well-coached, hard-hitting team," Abbott said. As for his own squad, which faces The Citadel next Saturday and later B.C. and Northeastern besides the other conference foes, Abbott was pleased with soph quarterback Dave Wing, who entered the game in the second period with starter George Platter moving to a running back spot.

Wing, who stands 5'8", demonstrated a strong arm but Abbott refused to say he would start next Saturday. Platter and shifty end Gene Benner also provided some cheer for Maine rooters. Platter made a sensational leaping catch for the lone Black Bear touchdown, and Benner went 60 yards with a Wing pass in the second quarter before cornerback Bill Frye pulled him down on the UMass 20.

Benner also jaunted 45 yards after taking a handoff from Charlie Harney on a kickoff return.

Foley, Burke Named Distinguished Teachers at UM Convocation Today

A veteran professor of dairy and animal sciences and a British-born geographer were presented 1967 Distinguished Teacher of the Year Awards at the University of Massachusetts Convocation this morning.

The twin awards went to Dr. Richard C. Foley, UMass staff member since 1931 and professor of dairy and animal sciences since 1955; and to Terence Burke, assistant professor of geography who introduced that subject at UMass when he joined the faculty in 1960.

Reduced Federal Funds Force Cuts in Student Assistance

by Carol Belliveau
Staff Reporter

Students throughout the country found themselves financially perplexed when colleges couldn't meet the rising demands for scholarships, loans and grants this year because of the cutback in available federal funds.

According to an interview with Assistant Director of Placement and Financial Aid, Mr. Lynn Santner, the University was never given a direct reason for the cutback. The University was merely informed that National Defense funds basically would be reduced. The approximate figures show that we were cut from a $360,000 loan share to approximately $322,000 for the '67-'68 year. These loans are 90% federal funds matched with 10% University funds.

According to Mr. Santner the reduction was not the same for all schools and he claimed that as yet the University has received no official word as to their specific percentage of cut. He does feel that even though our cut may not have been any larger than elsewhere, The University was very hard hit by this loss due to the increasing number of applicants here.

Students who received some type of aid last year may have found their allotments sliced for the present semesters. The Financial Aid Office explained that although the scholarship funds which the state appropriates were very acceptable and about equal with last year's share, the loss in federal money for loans and grants threw the planned aid budget off balance.

This forced the University to lower the monetary limits for individual loans and to re-plan the distribution of scholarships and grants. The number of loans was not reduced, but the maximum loan amount given in the majority of cases did not exceed $500 this year. Yet approximately 1,075 students are still receiving some loan assistance, as last year.

Neither National Defense Loan policies nor University aid policies have been altered, Mr. Santner added. Students still need an overall average of 2.5 or better or between 2.0 and 2.5 with the last semester being a 3.0 or better to apply.

The only change foreseen is that grades will probably be reviewed from midyear to midyear (Jan.-Jan.) instead of the present academic year basis. This is planned in order to be able to inform students earlier in the summer of their financial awards. The amount of aid will continue to be determined by common need and common grades for a particular group.

As for grants, the money which is 100% federally appropriated was approximately the same this year. The program still covers about 670 students with approx. $230,000 to work with. All these figures include UMass-Boston students on financial aid.

At present, Educational Opportunity Grants first go to incoming freshmen and one-quarter of the scholarship and loan money is given freshmen and one-quarter of the scholarship and loan money is given to each class. According to Mr. Santner this gives the freshmen an added advantage over upperclassmen. His plan to even the program out for all classes is to be brought up soon before the Placement Office. He hopes this could alleviate a few of the financial problems of the upperclassmen who may have seen their college marks drop consi-

Fraternity Parking is Source of Consternation

by PATRICIA CERAMI,
Staff Reporter

The parking problem at the University has proved to be a source of consternation for drivers who have legal access to parking facilities as well as for those who have not.

A few fraternities have reported an overload of cars on their lots in spite of "private property" and "parking for members only" signs. While about 20% of the cars parking in the area owned by Theta Chi and Tri Sigma do not belong there, over half the cars cramming the lot shared by Alpha Chi and Kappa are unauthorized.

Not only are members finding their parking spaces taken, but cars lining Phillips Street and Nutting Avenue have made two-way traffic virtually impossible.

Commenting on the situation, Mrs. Vera Sheppard, housemother at Alpha Chi, said that deliverymen were having difficulty maneuvering their trucks through the congested streets. In an emergency involving a fire truck or an ambulance, the consequences could be serious.

The town manager of Amherst has been notified of the congestion and is expected to take action shortly.

"Although we are in sympathy with the car owners," added Mrs. Sheppard, "we pay taxes and upkeep on the lot and all the extra cars create quite a problem."

Most houses are issuing warning notices to unauthorized vehicles on their lots and will begin towing next week if the situation remains unaltered.

Twenty Dorms Lack Candidates For Senate

Right now, there are over twenty residence halls that have no candidates registered for nomination to the Student Senate. There are also over thirty seats that are presently being sought by unopposed candidates.

There are only two days left to take out nomination papers for the Student Senate. In order to be nominated, the student must obtain 25 signatures and return the form to the RSO office on Thursday, September 28 at 5:00 p.m.

Virtually all students are qualified for the job and the responsibilities it entails.

Nomination papers and explanatory material are available in the RSO office, Student Union. In order to be a truly viable member of the University community, the Student Senate must have as many representatives as possible.

Controversy Continues Over UMass Fire Safety

by BOB GORMAN

After four months of negotiating, the disagreement between the University of Massachusetts and Amherst Town Fire Chief John T. Doherty is not only continuing but also has seemingly increased.

Doherty told the Springfield Union, "There is no tangible evidence that fire protection at the University has materially improved. In view of the increased number of students and the addition of four new dormitories which contain only minimum fire detection and extinguishing facilities, fire problems may well have increased."

He also pointed out other problems of access roads, chemical storage, manpower and equipment shortages that have increased his concern about the situation.

When the University of Massachusetts officials were informed of the new charges, however, a five man conference was called to rebuke the fire chief's complaints.

Dan Melley, News Director; William Lambert, Landscape architect; John Marchant, Director of Security; Edmund Goetzl, Fire and Safety Officer and Robert Kittle, Assistant to the Treasurer, all answered questions pertaining to Doherty's most recent complaints.

They said that the University, in fact, has been trying to comply to any request that the Amherst fire chief might have. According to them, in many areas there is no tangible evidence of change because it takes time to make changes. When it is possible, however, any of the chief's requests are acted upon immediately.

Doherty said that the new dormitories have the increased problems of poor access and a complex building structure. However, Fire and Safety Officer Edmund Goetzl said that he and Doherty had inspected the new buildings for fire protection problems.

Goetzl said that the chief asked that locator panels be installed in the lobbies of the new buildings that would indicate the exact area of the structure from which the alarm was sent. This request was forwarded to the University Building commission which will install the locator panels as money is allocated.

The UMass Fire Officer further stated that booster pumps for the four eight story dormitories in the Orchard Hill Complex, and the relocation and addition of fire hydrants at the Southwest Residence Complex asked by the Amherst Fire Chief, have all been included in the Whitman-Howard Utility Contract.

Assistant Treasurer Kittle said that construction of a chemical

Headmistress Appointed For Uganda School Project

The University of Massachusetts has appointed an outstanding woman educator from Colorado as headmistress of the Tororo Girls School in Uganda, East Africa.

She is Miss Phyllis Jean Roop, former director of curriculum in Colorado's Jefferson County School District. She has assumed a post left vacant by the resignation of Miss Marian R. Balboni, headmistress at Tororo since 1964.

Tororo is a boarding school for girls, planned, built and operated by the UMass School of Education in cooperation with the U.S. Agency for International Development and the Uganda Ministry of Education.

A native of Lakewood, Colo., Miss Roop was graduated from Colorado State College and holds an M.A. degree in public school administration from the University of Denver. She has studied guidance beyond the M.A. level at Colorado State College, Colorado State University and the University of Denver.

MISS PHYLLIS JEAN ROOP

Miss Roop taught for four years in the Denver public school system. She was named assistant principal at Lakewood High School, leaving that post in 1964 to become coordinator of curriculum and eventually director of curriculum of the Jefferson County School District.

"We are fortunate in getting a well-qualified person who has had experience in teaching, administration, guidance and curriculum work," said Elwyn J. Doubleday, UMass campus coordinator for the Uganda school project, in announcing her appointment.

Miss Roop, commenting on her new post, said "My main concern as an individual is that we don't try to impose our way of doing things in Uganda, only that we use the best of our abilities and our expertise to help this developing nation achieve its own unique educational system to meet its own unique needs."

The Uganda school is located on a 70-acre campus in Tororo and is expected to reach its full capacity of 540 pupils in Grades 9 through 14 in 1968. It is staffed by American and Ugandan teachers and is scheduled to be staffed and run entirely by Ugandans by 1971.

storage shed was sped up to remedy that situation. Goetzl added, "All solvent chemicals in problem areas have been relocated to a temporary shed in the apple orchard. Doherty inspected the shed and said that it was fine."

Doherty said, however, that chemicals in excess of both safety and usage requirements were partly responsible for a fire that gutted a room in a flash fire in Chenoweth Laboratory on campus. Also he said that he was originally told that the permanent shed was to have been completed by August 1, but now will be completed January 1.

He further contended that the University sent him a map pointing out all the traffic changes on campus due to the new vehicular parking system without providing him with a time table of the changes. "Each day there are new changes with no notification as to when roads will be closed."

Doherty also complained of the congested traffic resulting from the new parking system and the possibility of damaging fire equipment when riding over berms put across campus roads no longer open to traffic.

University Landscape Architect Lambert replied that Doherty was fully informed of the planned closed campus for traffic. Special curbs and emergency roads were constructed on Doherty's request. The chief was informed of the traffic congestion resulting from the planned traffic system.

"He never objected to the plans. He felt happy and said he thought that the plans were great," Lambert said about a meeting that he had with Doherty when the Traffic Plans were reviewed.

Doherty added that his situation is further hampered by both a manpower and equipment shortage. A new fire engine was to be given to the town but was cut out of the University's budget by the State Legislature. However, UMass officials have asked Governor Volpe to reconsider the proposal.

The chief said that he is primarily concerned with conditions where neither his nor any other Fire Department could effectively perform their duties, if confronted with a fire.

"After all, the responsibility for fire safe conditions belong to the University. We have the responsibility for fire fighting, clear cut," he pointed out.

On the other hand, UMass officials contend that they are very fire safety conscious. They pointed out that Doherty has met with the trustees, he is informed of any changes affecting fire protection, and he is frequently on campus to drill and to talk with University officials.

Amherst Town Manager Allen Torrey said, "I regret the whole thing. . .I don't think that fire safety has been increased by feuding between the town and the University," when he heard of the recent development.

State Fire Marshall Ralph Garret, who is personally conducting an investigation on the conditions at UMass said that he will have a report on the situation in a few weeks.

He said that he met with Doherty and Goetzl last week and Garret thought that their differences were pretty well settled.

Garret pointed out that he understood the problems that both parties had with the University's huge expansion program and Doherty's limited fire equipment and manpower to protect a growing community.

University officials seemed to have been taken by surprise with the recent complaints. They apparently thought that they were pleasing Doherty with the many new fire safety policies

Faculty Examines Radical Politics

"Radical Politics 1968: Black Power and Vietnam" is the title of a talk to be given by David King, Director of Laymen's Academy for Ecumenical Studies and local delegate to the recently-held New Politics convention in Chicago. The talk will be held on Thursday, September 28, 8 p.m., 120 SBA (small auditorium), University of Massachusetts. Joining King for a discussion will be Professors Sheldon Goldman (Gov., UMass), and Philip Green (Gov., Smith), and Michael Telwell (grad. student, UMass.).

The talk and discussion are sponsored by the Faculty Group on Peace and War at UMass.

The military war in Vietnam and the poverty war in the United States are two of the largest problems this country faces. King will give a first-hand report on the efforts of today's radicals in solving these problems and on the effect of the Black Power advocates on the stand taken by the convention.

Placement Convocation Scheduled for Thursday

Teacher placement this year will be under the guidance of Charles Smith, Educational Placement Officer. Smith is already planning special convocations and schedules of interviews for the benefit of all senior education majors.

Two convocations are planned to provide information on job placement. On September 28, 1967, a general convocation will be held in Bowker Auditorium at 11:15 A.M. for all interested seniors. Teacher placement will be dealt with specifically at a second convocation held on October 5, 1967 in the School of Education Auditorium at 11:15 A.M. Mr. Smith will speak at this meeting.

In order to be eligible for on-campus interviews seniors must register with the Placement Office by completing Placement Credentials which may be picked up at the office at any time. Interviews will be announced in the Placement News two weeks before they take place. Individual appointments for interviews must be made at least two days in advance. Sign-up hours for all appointments will be 10:00 A.M. to 2:30 P.M. in the Placement Office.

According to the Placement Office, on-campus interviews for teaching positions will begin as of February 1, 1968. The recruiting season will reach its peak in March with a few additional interviews scheduled for April.

Files are also available in the Placement Office listing teaching vacancies by state. Any questions concerning teaching positions may be answered by Mr. Smith whose office is in Room 239, Whitmore Building.

Danforth Fellowships Available

Competition for the Danforth Graduate Fellowships, to be awarded in March 1968, is now open. According to H. Duncan Rollason, Assistant Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences and the local campus representative, those students interested in Danforth Fellowships should inquire immediately at his office in South College. It is particularly urgent that potential candidates apply to take the October 28, 1967, Graduate Record Examination.

Danforth Fellowships are unusual in that they offer four years of financial assistance. They provide a maximum annual living stipend of $2400 for single Fellows and $2950 for married Fellows, plus tuition and fees. Dependency allowances are also available.

The Fellowships, offered by the Danforth Foundatin of St. Louis, Missouri, are open to men and women who are seniors planning to study for a Ph.D. and who have a serious interest in college teaching as a career. Applicants may be single or married, but they must be less than thirty years of age at the time of application and may not have undertaken any graduate or professional study beyond the baccalaureate.

Approximately 120 Fellowships will be awarded. Candidates must be nominated by the local campus Liason Committee (headed by Dean Rollason) as the Foundation does not accept direct applications from students.

Danforth Fellows may hold other fellowships such as Ford, Fulbright, National Science, Rhodes, Woodrow Wilson, etc. concurrently, and will be Danforth Fellows without stipend until the other awards lapse.

Cooperate: or We Burn

A controversy about fire conditions on campus has again come to public light. Last Thursday, Amherst Fire Chief John T. Doherty said that fire safety problems at the University may have even increased because of the rise in student enrollment, opening of new buildings and the attitude of the administration.

Doherty maintains that he is concerned only about the conditions at the University where his department could not properly fight a fire, if confronted with one. He adds that the responsibility for fire safety conditions at the University belong to University officials.

However, administration officials answered that they have been trying to comply with all of the fire chief's requests. They pointed out the many changes that they have planned, or have enacted when possible, since Doherty's charges last Spring. They further said that Doherty is asked for his advice on all changes that would affect fire protection.

With the variance of the two opinions, it would seem that the parties had done nothing but feud since the allegations of fire deficiencies were first made by Doherty.

In fact, the chief had a "friendly meeting" with UMass Fire and Safety Officer Edmund Goetzl and State Fire Marshal Ralph Garret in Boston just a week before Doherty made his latest complaints. The administration reports that Doherty and Goetzl discussed—in a friendly way, according to Garret—the fire safety conditions on campus. Neither then, nor during the many times that Doherty was on campus, the administration says, did he tell the administration of the complaints made public last week. Nevertheless, Doherty has some reason for complaints.

While the University has been growing during the past six years, the Amherst Fire Department has not been able to match the growth. This is not a fault of the administration, it is a result of desired growth. Still Doherty has both equipment and manpower shortages.

Although many of Chief Doherty's complaints may seem petty to the growing campus, historically major fires are the result of a number of petty or small factors that were present at the right time—for instance, Mrs. O'Leary's cow in Chicago or the lack of detection of a fire in a so called "fire proof" dormitory at Cornell University that resulted in the deaths of eight students, according to one fire official.

The solutions to these problems must come from both sides. Chief Doherty should state his complaints to the University before he announces them publicly and he should understand that the University must wait for red tape to be cleared before any change is undertaken. For its part, the University should publicize more of its fire safety changes and should act with awareness of problem of having a small Fire Department to serve a large community.

In three weeks, State Fire Marshall Garrett will have a full report of his doings about UMass fire safety conditions. In the meantime, the University and the Town may be able to renew the work of improving conditions that went on throughout the summer.

The editorial in Monday's Daily Collegian entitled "Car Inspection" was reprinted from the Springfield Union.

The Daily Collegian invites all candidates for the Student Senate to submit letters to a Candidates' Forum to appear in the issue of Monday, October 3, the day preceding the elections.

All letters to the editor must be typed at 60 spaces and double-spaced. They should not exceed 30 lines—in the case of letters for the Candidates' Forum. Letters are subject to editing and condensation. The writer's signature and address must be on the letter.

Run—For Your Life

The student government of UMass is in a crisis position. Not enough people want to be in it.

Out of a student population of about 13,000 we are having a hard time getting enough candidates to hold elections.

This says a lot for the students of UMass. Are you being an apathetic American already?

There is plenty of room for candidates and it is a wide open race. But it needs people willing to try.

Some incumbents will not possibly win if faced with a debate, some won't even be able to put up a real campaign. This is your chance, your opportunity to enter politics. If you pass it up you may be doing both yourself and the campus a real disservice.

Nomination papers are due shortly. All you need is twenty five names. By 5 p.m. today a lot of nomination papers should have been taken out and passed around for signatures. The system of student government depends on you.

Campus Comment

To the Editor:

It has become increasingly more obvious over the past three years that those people who flocked with such over-enthusiastic abandon to join the ranks of the Democratic Party and its various affiliates (such as, for instance, the Young Democrates organizations across the nation) did so on the basis of a pipe dream.

That dream, for sure, had everything to do with John F. Kennedy who held high a brilliant torch of new hope for instant cures for a society which was just awakening to the fact that America was not fulfilling its promise as the vanguard of democracy.

But today in 1967 the political heirs of the Kennedy enthusiasm have let the torch burn off and in its place have lifted —by the ears, of course—the dogs of war. The country, already sick in 1964, seems on its way to some incurable illness due to complications.

It has also become evident that those who deserted the Republican Party in 1964 and those young people who have since then written off the GOP as totally out of step with an America alledgedly on the move, have made a grevious error.

Not only has the party system been seriously jepordized but a vast wealth of intelligent people have found themselves committed to and unwitting supporters of mad governmental policy. Nor does there seem likelihood for constructive change.

Because of the weakened political opposition, America faces the possibility of years and years more of dibilitating war, justifiable though avoidable racial riots, and dizzying inflation to name just a few symptoms of an ill America being treated by the wrong political physicians.

Change must and can come via well organized, intelligent and industrious political action. And given the complexion of our system, political action is swiftest and most effective when it is generated through a traditional and opposing party. It is one thing to picket, and sit-in, and petition for change; it is quite another thing to threaten recalcitrant politicians with ouster and have the political power to do so.

Yet here at the University, where one would expect intelligent political sensativity, there is not even a functioning Young Republicans organization. This is, to our minds, a reflection of the national lethargy—sometimes called "consensus" —that is making it impossible for the Republican Party to present an ideologically consistent and intellectually acceptable opponent to the present administration, an opponent who can win in 1968.

We accuse all thinking Americans and especially college students—that means YOU—of allowing this disgraceful situation to exist. For our part, we shall reorganize the UMass Young Republicans and we invite anyone who sees the job to be done and is willing to help do it to join us.

To the Editor:

Whether you've tried Colt 45 Malt Liquor or not, I have a completely unique experience that you can't match.

I was at Laguardia Airport, which is in New York, and was waiting for a bus to John F. Kennedy Airport. Standing on the platform with me was a Japanese man and his wife. After we had waited for thirty minutes, I said to the man, "Like to split a cab?" His reply was, "Here, there, no, I come."

I was rather baffled, but replied in a very didactic tone, "No, Would you like to split the cost of a cab with me?" His reply was, "Cab, yes, I have cab." He then proceeded to walk into the Hertz Rent-A-Car and sign for a car. After I hailed him and received another," I have, "I decided to let him follow his plan.

In a few minutes he was behind the wheel of a gleaming-new Ford. I helped his wife put the suitcases in the car, and we were off for J.F.K. The journey was fine, until we took the second step. We proceeded down the ramp to the Long Island Expressway at 20 M.P.H. We entered the traffic at 21 M.P.H., and we drove all the way in the passing lane at 25 M.P.H.

Now, divide that by the number of maniac taxi cab drivers in New York City, add the number of Greyhound Busses that leave Port Authority Terminal at 5:00 P.M., and the card in your hand is the seven of spades. How's that?

Freedom, Order and University Growth

General Convocation September 26, 1967
Address by President John W. Lederle

Looking back at the national and world scene since early June, it is obvious we are now emerging from a Summer of Discontent. From Tel Aviv to Saigon to Cairo; from Detroit to New Haven, wars, riots, destruction and death have made daily headlines. There was a disruptive DeGaulle in Montreal—an assassin's bullet for Lincoln Rockwell — unabated escalation in Vietnam. Indeed, the sultry summer days were charged with crises of abnormal intensity even for an age that has grown hardened to perpetual dissension and strife.

But now the summer is over. It is my privilege and pleasure to welcome all of you to the campus at the beginning of another academic year. We must turn from the saddening perception of a world in turbulence, move to an autumn of harvest and plenty, bright with hope for new achievement and a year of intellectual progress and tangible growth.

At the outset, I should mention two other events which highlighted the period between June and August. Amidst the smoke of battle abroad and at home, your University administration quietly slipped out of an ancient campus building named South College and into the spacious, handsome, Whitmore Administration Building. The press duly took note of the new structure's thick concrete escarpments, thermo-pane windows and the long, slanting ramp. Some whispered that the whole area must be surrounded by a hidden moat.

I am well aware of the nickname given to this structure by several respected newspapers. Some university presidents—long after they are gone—are lucky enough to have a residence hall named after them. Few, if any, while still in office have had the distinction of lending a nickname to a fort. Perhaps this is symbolic of the times. If this must be, let me say I appreciate the honor. But we will continue as heretofore to administer a University and not a military establishment.

When I first arrived in 1960, I said that the administration of a public university had to conduct its business as if in a gold fish bowl. As a public agency, total visibility is the foundation of popular support. But life in Whitmore has become quite literal in this regard. The other day, a young man walking down a corridor with part of his shirttail hanging out was told about his problem by a fellow employee. Hastily, in embarrassment, he ducked into his office on the courtyard, loosened his trousers and tucked in the shirt. When he finished and turned around, he found the entire staff in the office across the court applauding him wildly.

The only autocratic element I have discovered so far in Whitmore is the air conditioning system. It has a will of its own. Until recently, despite the efforts of the engineers to balance its system, it seemed mindlessly bent on the destruction of the occupants leaving them either too hot or too cold. With the aid of modern science, however, we think we now have this monster in harness, and the best engineering brains available tell us we may get into the winter without freezing to death or boiling in our shoes.

Although not connected with the administration's move to allegedly safer quarters, I call attention to the second event: a great congress of student organizations at College Park, Maryland, where national delegates to the joint conference of the Students for a Democratic Society (SDS) and the National Student Association (NSA) engaged in debate on, among other things, the draft, black power and student power. Earlier, the SDS was said to have framed an activist platform that would subvert existing student governments across the land and keep ferment and revolt seething at our colleges and universities all year long.

Student discontent of the type reflected at this joint conference is not confined to the United States. Let me quote a few lines from a long poem that appeared in England last February in Punch. The title is "Student Song":

"All around the learned world
Student banners are unfurled.
Cairo riots twice a week:
Greek throws cobblestones at Greek—
. . . Leave your lecture halls and schools
Join us where unreason rules,
Swell the Student Chorus . . .
Does it really matter what Feeds our fury? It does not.
Ian Smith and LBJ
Suit us very well today.
Tomorrow will fresh causes bring
Just as sure as youth is king . . .
Bow down world before us . . .
Listen to the Student Chorus."

Things by the way, reached an end point in Washington recently, according to TIME. You can now rent an entire protest march by the hour. Consult Proxy Pickets. They'll furnish bodies, signs and spirited dialogue for any cause at all. Seventeen dollars puts 5 pickets in front of the White House; one hundred and fifty-four dollars gives you a crowd of 50.

Everywhere, it seems, the common, minority voice speaks protest and revolt on the pretext of annexing new freedoms or more power. I emphasize the word minority. I remind you that in all the turmoil we've been talking about only one bullet from one gun slew Rockwell. Recall, please, that DeGaulle spoke for himself and found himself alone, even with the French press; that the Israeli war was a restricted war, not a world holocaust; and that it was feared more for its "ignition capacity". Nevertheless, the days of Summer have been grim.

In the context of these events in our time, and to try to place the so-called freedom and power struggle in perspective; I would like to talk to you briefly this morning on the subjects of Freedom, Order and University Growth.

Freedom is the absence of coercion or constraint in choice of action. This quality is to be differentiated from the word "license", which is a perversion of freedom that consists in breaking laws or rules, either as an abuse, or in the exercise of special privilege. That the terms freedom and license are not universally and precisely understood in our society is the cause, surely, of much of the nation's woe. For, in order to avoid the pitfall of degenerating into sheer license, it is obvious that "freedom" must be a self-limiting term. It has boundaries. In the hands of those who employ freedom wisely, these boundaries manifest themselves in the exercise of restraint. Such an exercise is nothing more than a quality of behavior which we call responsibility. And so the terms "freedom" and "responsibility" inevitably go hand in hand.

In all of this national debate and turmoil, where do we stand? What is the University of Massachusetts' position today?

In matters of academic freedom and student freedoms, this University has an enviable record. Consider the recent "Magna Charta of Student Rights" put forth by the National Student Association and the American Association of University Professors. This called for a six point program. It declared that students should have the following rights: (1) to invite and hear controversial speakers; (2) to engage in off-campus protest activities without university interference; (3) to examine and discuss all questions of interest . . . to express opinions publicly; (4) to establish student newspapers as independent corporations "financially and legally separate from the University"; (5) to be subjected to disciplinary proceedings "only for violations of standards of conduct formulated with significant student participation and published in advance"; and (6) to be protected against improper disclosure of student records or of information on their political beliefs or associations.

On every point just named the University of Massachusetts is in agreement. All but one point was already in effect on this campus. That one point — the establishment of student newspapers (or any publication, I might add), as financially and legally independent corporations, has never been previously promoted here, but if and when it is proposed I do not foresee any obstacles to approval. In other words, such a Magna Charta of Student Rights was never necessary at all in terms of conditions on this campus.

Moreover, the University has led the field in encouraging responsible student government, the experimental self-determination of residence hall rules, and the freedom of students to manage their own fiscal affairs through the office of Recognized Student Organizations. These procedures reflect sound educational philosophy. Where imperfections in practice show up, they are remedied by straightforward discussion.

In this atmosphere, with mutual cooperation among students, faculty and administration, the University community has assurance that we can all move forward in harmony to achieve our main purpose: the education of students both inside and outside the classroom.

What a far cry is this accommodation of reasonableness from the impatient howls of a minority of extremists in the radical left; from the deliberate sowing of hate and distruct by the "Everyone Over Thirty is a Fink" school. Such voices deliberately frame an artificial crisis in which moderation is at bay.

There is no sadder theme in the air today than the tired refrain that the generation in its middle years has done nothing except pass on to youth the Burden of the Bomb.

To all those who say that today's leaders, most of whom are in their forties and fifties, are handling a raw deal and a rotten world to 18 to 25 year olds, I say look at the record. The middle year generation was weaned on World War I; its youth was spent in the bitter hardship of the Great Depression, a world-wide economic collapse of ten years duration. It emerged from this stress, only to suffer and die in the horrors of the largest cataclysm in history, World War II. Its companion—with all due regard for the deplorable agonies in Vietnam—the present college generation has faced only the greatest period of prosperity the nation has ever known. The Bomb may be with us; but it remains underground in the silo.

Yet — endlessly — the cry of our Age is for more freedom, and less responsibility.

What then does Freedom mean on the University campus, both for faculty and for students? Simply stated, it consists of a Bill of Rights: the right to teach, or to express; the right to participate and influence; the right to protest without violence; and the right to appeal. I repeat that mechanisms for all of these rights now exist here.

President Emeritus Case of Boston University observed a few days ago, "Students do not enroll to administer an institution, to develop or approve the budget, to underwrite the deficit, to raise funds for building enterprises, or to negotiate contracts. They are in college to learn, to mature, to join a distinguished group — the learned." And so, we find a fifth right — the right to learn. This, I may add, is really more of a necessity than a right. It is the student's fundamental reason for being here.

A year ago at this convocation I said that governance of the University is an action process growing out of discourse among all its component parts for the good of the whole. Nothing has changed. Talk of student power or faculty power or administration power must face the realistic fact, however, that ultimate authority in this people's university is vested in the Board of Trustees. Traditionally, the Board has looked to the administration, the faculty and the students working together through channels to present their recommendations to the Board of action. I foresee no change in this arrangement now or for the future.

Up to this point I have stressed freedoms and rights. What about the other side — responsibilities; hence, order.

If we have a Magna Charta of Student Rights (meaning Freedoms), then there should be clear recognition of student responsibilities. Given academic freedom for the faculty there should likewise be a broad charter of faculty responsibilities. Nor should the administration go without its charter of responsibilities.

There are several specific things in the student area needing responsible attention in the immediate future.

• We need a review of the composition and constitution of the Student Government so that broader and better representation of student interests may be achieved. When vacancies occurred last year, it was difficult to recruit students to run for office.

• We need action by the Student Communications Board to recommend ways and means for the private incorporation of any student publication which chooses this type of organizational structure.

• We need the development of new Student Senate budgetary policies, to bring the fiscal management of our vast extra-curricular enterprise into line with the requirements of a large University. The Student Senate now disburses more than a quarter of a million dollars annually. As a land-grant university dedicated to the low tuition principle, we must keep a close watch so that the student tax does not escalate and price educational opportunity out of reach of our students from low income homes. At the same time, constitutions of student organizations must be more professionally drawn up, and must be lived up to once adopted.

• There is a need for the Greek World to put its collective house in order and live up to the highest ideals of the various charters and constitutions, so it may re-establish its full participation in campus leadership. Soon, unless the fraternity system regenerates itself, the soaring enrollment of thousands of new students each year, may submerge the Greeks gradually into a row of rooming houses with strange symbols on the doors.

• We need broader student understanding of the fact that there cannot be a double standard in which they demand treatment like adults on the one hand and then, on the other when they get into the toils of the law, seek special treatment as students or juveniles. This is not a one way street. If they accept freedoms, they must also accept the concomitant responsibilities. Hence, when they become violators of federal or state laws, they are on their own. They must "face the music" like adults. The University will not come to the rescue. So far as drugs are concerned, we are an educational institution — not a laboratory away from home for experimentation in hallucinations and fantasia.

monitoring program for maintaining the beauty of the campus. This beauty is one of our most valuable heritages. Walks, lawns and shrubs must be preserved. Defacement in residence halls must be reduced. Any generation of students breaking down this heritage will be called to account by succeeding generations. How much it would mean to the University if Adelphia and Mortar Board and the Student Senate would initiate positive steps to maintain, preserve and enhance the beauty of our grounds and physical plant now and for the future. Faculty and administration likewise have challenging responsibilities in the year ahead.

• We should be thinking about how we can continue to improve our system of evaluation of the teaching process. I believe there is also a constructive role for students here and that thought should be given to ways in which they might be consulted about the quality of teaching they receive.

• Faculty and administration need to maintain continuous review of our residence hall program both in its intellectual and social aspects. We need to know how residence hall curfew privileges are working out in practice. I might well add that this review has been requested by the Board of Trustees.

• Special attention should be given to refinement of our recently revised student discipline system. A new handbook developed by students, faculty and administration provides specific guidelines for undergraduate conduct. It stipulates the disciplinary action which will be taken in specific circumstances. No longer will students be left to wonder what is "conduct unbecoming a student." Faculty, administration and students will need to maintain a flexible attitude as inevitable problems are uncovered in actual practice under the new procedures.

• We must produce in the near future a viable Master Plan for the 1970's. Already being developed, it should prove to be a major focus of public attention when it is released later in the academic year. We look forward also to the early release of two reports, one on the establishment of University College, the second on re-evaluation of our Arts and Science curriculum.

• We must work out fair and equitable labor relations policies with the soon-to-be-designated non-professional employee bargaining unit. We recognize and appreciate the valuable contribution of our support staff in the physical plant, the custodial service and the secretarial force. Progress is being made, and this matter likewise is receiving the attention of the Board of Trustees.

• Attention should also be given to the problems of fire protection, movement of pedestrian traffic on our mile long campus, and the expansion of services to our foreign students.

Taken then as a whole, the administration must exercise its responsibility to keep alive the climate of academic freedom and to develop with faculty and students sound policies, systems and procedures for the smooth operation of a highly complex community. We are now approaching the dimensions of a medium-sized city, with all the attendant physical plant and housekeeping problems.

The faculty must re-examine its prime responsibility for clear communication in the teaching process: its need to live and breathe the World of Ideas in pursuit of new knowledge, and the need to contribute scholarship to its respective disciplines — not under the old guns of "publish or perish" — but, rather, as a matter of personal and professional pride, and as a matter of pure career development.

The students, we hope, will never cease to question, never stop probing for a meaningful involvement in their University. We hope above all that early in their stay here, they will learn to put first things first and prepare themselves for distinguished careers in the outside world that ever seems far too short of sufficient imagination and talent.

In conclusion I should like to say a few words about the growth of the University.

It has been aptly stated that the fundamental purpose of education is growth. Too often, however, we concentrate on the sheer quantitative aspects of our development. How many students? How many new faculty? What new buildings? — and where? True, these things are important. But there is a qualitative dimension to the University which has grown over the past few years. This now fairly bursts for recognition. It can no longer be veiled or ignored.

During the summer, in two separate articles, a hint of this dimension of quality was touched upon. In College Management, Dr. Polykarp Kusch's article on "Graduate Programs" observed that he had "no doubt that the University of the State of New York at Stony Brook and at Buffalo and the University of Massachusetts at Amherst will turn out to be institutions of excellence by any criterion."

In August, the Boston Globe reported that America's finest college teachers are choosing California, New York and Massachusetts as the three places they would most like to go. This study, made by the Woodrow Wilson Foundation, disclosed that, in the Bay State the choice, after Harvard and M.I.T., is the University of Massachusetts. In an area with so many prestigious institutions, to be third is a real compliment. But these are only surface symptoms reflecting the many hard years of work by a legion of dedicated administrators, faculty and staff, some long gone, who have given, and are giving their lives here in the service of excellence. The achievement of status is a long, slow, cumulative process. It is easy now to point to Five lege Cooperation, to the Massachusetts Review, to WFCR, to our new THEMIS project, to the University of Massachusetts Press and to our overseas ventures at Oxford, Bologna, Freiburg, Madrid, Malawi and Uganda. These are jewels in our crown. But the real challenge is to sustain this momentum in the future.

At this point, or the 100th anniversary of our first entering class, let me say that I am deeply grateful to the legislative and the executive branches of the Commonwealth for the support that has brought us to our present condition. We are now a campus of approximately 15,000 students at Amherst this fall — and all around us are the unmistakable signs of dynamic development. Bartlett East and Machmer Tower are underway, and the new Campus Center should be well into construction during the current academic year. The Governor's capital budget recommendation of $18,765,000 has been cleared by the House at $16,600,000. If approved by the Senate, besides providing for other projects, this will assure the construction of our badly needed new library at an estimated cost of $14,200,000. This should be one of the fine university libraries in the nation, not only in capacity, but in the novel design achieved by Architect Edward Durell Stone. We continue to have problems with insufficiency of operating funds as all faculty here are well aware. But we will continue to press diligently for our requirements, and we are most hopeful that the legislature in its wisdom will respond.

Our campus at Boston opens its third year with 2600 students—and the acquisition of new library space, as well as other leased space in buildings near or adjacent to 100 Arlington Street. This campus and its faculty as well as its leadership deserve the thanks of the Commonwealth for performing a near miracle in the timetable of their operations and for their continuing dedication to carry out the will of the legislature in bringing low cost, high quality public university education to the Boston area. Good progress continues in the development of our Medical School in Worcester. Plans for the Medical Science building have been approved, and construction is expected to get underway next summer.

But growth must properly occur within the matrix of our sense of purpose and in concert with the unique mission of our University. This University is the State University of the Commonwealth. It must be responsive to the needs of all the people whom it serves. If it does not grow and develop in their minds and hearts, it will have failed in its purpose no matter how good its students, how excellent its faculty or how fine its buildings. The citizens of Massachusetts have been deeply anxious about problems of urban decay, labor, air and water pollution, poverty, racial strife; and, looming over all, the problems of war. They are looking to the University for help, for answers, for solutions. The University must respond. We must become involved. As we enter the last third of this century, we should have a social consciousness, concern, and dedication to serve the people in these areas with the same zeal that we developed to help a more rustic society solve its agricultural problems almost a century ago. And let us face the fact that the University is well constituted to meet the challenge.

At the University of Michigan Sesquicentennial Symposium this summer, I pointed out that no institution in modmation retrieval potential that a great ern society has the combination of talents, specialized knowledge, and information can bring to the solution of these troubled times.

Our opportunity is unique. Under one roof, we house the broad spectrum of disciplines and professions. It is time now for the social scientist and the humanist to move across the campus to the side of the engineer and the natural scientist. Such a combination of brainpower and skills can forge an effective assault against the principal skills of the world. Yet, up to now, we have been lax in drawing these specialists together to form such a badly needed joint attack force.

Let us be about our business. For higher education is serious business, indeed. Looking ahead, in our age of space and computer science, education looms as its foundation stone; looking backward on the knotty web of prejudices, violence and social maladjustments which society has somehow dragged into the sixth decade of this century, education looms as our only hope to make a more enlightened world in which "no man's well-being threatens another." a world in which all races prosper.

To sustain our great endeavor, we must encourage intellectual ferment and creative dissent in the world of ideas, for this is the hallmark of a great university. At the same time, we must resist the "tyranny of the minority," which would violently destroy the deliberative climate which is the essence of academic life.

Thus, in an atmosphere of freedom and order, our growth may best be achieved. This is our goal. Let us pursue it.

35-Man Crew Comes to Amherst

Giant TV Coverage for Saturday Game

by GLENN BRIERE
Staff Reporter

A kink has been thrown into the television coverage of this Saturday's Dartmouth - UMass game in the form of the NABET strike against the American Broadcasting system.

The game, nevertheless, will be carried regionally by ABC-Sports if it takes network executives to man the cameras and the microphones. And assuming the strike is settled by the latter part of the week, ABC will swing into an operation such as this school has never experienced for a game.

On Thursday morning, the ABC remote van will leave New York along with a 35-man crew. As soon as they arrive at Amherst, they will set up at Alumni Stadium.

Heading the engineering equipment will be four black and white television cameras to be set up at different locations around the stadium. The first one will be located in the press box on the 50-yard line, the second also in the press box on the 45-yard line, the third on a specially constructed steel tower outside the north end of the stadium, and the fourth on a moveable platform along the west sideline.

Other equipment will include provisions for slow motion and stop action, three microphones in the press box, seven mikes on the field, three monitors for the press box, and four reels of one and a half hour video tape.

The telephone company will be setting up an intricate complex video and audio lines which will feed picture and sound into the control room outside the west side of the stadium behind Section 4. From there, the coverage will be fed to New York City and then on to the network stations which will comprise all of the ABC affiliates in New England.

The 35-man crew will be housed in the Howard Johnson's Motor Lodge on Route 9 in Hadley. This will include the producer, Dick Kirchner, who will run the whole operation.

Other personnel will include a director, an associate director, a unit manager, a technical supervisor, a production assistant, four cameramen, two audio and two video operators and a slow motion operator. These comprise only a third of the entire crew that will be coming to Amherst.

The announcers will be Keith Jackson for play-by-play and former Red Sox star Jackie Jensen for color commentary. Air time will be 1:45 and kickoff will be at 2:05.

UMass fans will get a first hand look at the tremendous amount of preparation the networks go through to televise a football game. And the next time the armchair quarterbacks settle back for a Saturday afternoon in front of the tube, they probably won't take what they see for granted.

Team Meetings To Be Held

The varsity rifle team is currently holding a drive to attract more members. This year saw the return of only three veterans. As in the past, the scholastic ax has taken its toll among last year's small freshman squad.

Any upperclassmen interested in joining competitive shooting are invited to come to the rifle range at Dickinson Hall tonight or Thursday night from 6 p.m. until 9 p.m.

The UMass Freshman Crew continues to look for additional members. Last year, UMass crews competed in 7 regattas, rowing against over 30 colleges throughout the east. Included among these schools were Amherst, Trinity, Dartmouth, Holy Cross, Notre Dame, Michigan State, Marietta, Tampa, and Georgetown.

Interested freshmen, who are around 6 feet and weigh over 170 pounds, are requested to call the freshman crew coach, Mike Faherty, at Tel. 549-1474.

A meeting of all Freshmen and Upperclass swimming candidates will be held Thursday evening at 7:00 P.M. at 253, Boyden Building.

A meeting of all candidates for Freshman Basketball will take place Wednesday, October 4, at 7:00 P.M. in room 250, Boyden Building.

"M" Certificates To Santucci and Gray

Varsity M certificates were awarded this week to guard Bob Santucci on offense and linebacker Dennis Gray on defense for their performances in Saturday's UMass-Univ. of Maine game. The Varsity M certificates are awarded each week to two the coaches, through their rat- the coaches, through their ratings of game films.

Trophies are awarded annually at the close of each season to one offensive and one defensive player who have compiled the most points through these weekly ratings. Past winners have been Greg Landry and Bernie Dallas in 1965, and Bob Detore and Rod Brooks in 1966.

SMITH AMONG ECAC ALL EAST SELECTIONS

ERNIE SMITH

UMass guard Ernie Smith headed this week's ECAC All-East selections. Smith, a senior, was honored for his outstanding performance in the Redmen's 30-9 defeat of the University of Maine. Redmen Greg Landry and Steve Rogers were also honored as honrable mention selections. The entire list of selections follows.

Minn. Loses 9-2 Sox Tied at Top

AP — The California Angels dropped Minnesota into a fireplace tie with idle Boston Monday by defeating the Twins 9-2 on a 15-hit attack and strong relief pitching by Jack Hamilton and Curt Simmons.

The Twins and Red Sox both have 90-68 records with four games remaining. The third-place Chicago White Sox, also not scheduled, moved to within one-half game of the American League co-leaders.

The fourth-place Detroit Tigers were one game off the pace pending their night game against the Yankees in New York. All four contenders are tied in the loss column with 68.

Jim Fregosi and Rick Reichardt each collected three hits in the first four innings, when the Angels cuffed Jim Merritt and Dave Boswell for seven runs.

Intramurals Open With Large Slate

Last night saw the opening of the University's intramural schedule. The year was kicked off by the highly spirited football games among Frat, Dorms and Independents.

In the Fraternity league, the new houses did not fair too well against the more experienced teams. PSD lead by DelSesto's onslaught of four passing and a running TD(s) caught PLP in a 40 to 0 Whipping. This game also saw the first injury of the season as PSD's Keven O'Reily had to leave the game with a broken collar bone. DC, the other new house, ran head-long into a fired TKE team, with TKE coming out on top with 20-0 crushing.

KS lead by Hansen's three touchdown receptions, coasted by PSK 32 to 0. Another one of last year's contending teams ICA, looked like a real contender by overrunning AEPi 32 to 0 ICA held Pi to three first downs, while Woodcock threw 4 TD's in the second half. In still another one sided game, QTV scored twenty points in the first half and coasted by SAM 20 to 6. The only really close game was won by PMD holding off ASP to gain a 14 to 12 win.

The Dorm League had its own one sided score too. Higney's 4 TD passes lead the Aces to a 44 to 0 Whipping over the Eagles. In the George Washington Tower rivalery, the Bull Dozers made it to the top by barely getting by the Huskeys 24 to 20.

The Independent League was the scene of a close battle, with the Dellvickens edging out the Flaming A's 13 to 6. In two late scores, the Terrors beat the Crushers 34 to 0 and the Knights 19 Rotten Roster 0.

Southwest Pickets Commons; 1200 Students Sign Petition

by DAVID BASKIN
Staff Reporter

A group of students from James House, led by Alan Byer, appeared at 11:30 A.M. yesterday in front of Dining Commons #5, armed with picket signs and a petition protesting the general state of affairs in Southwest's Dining Commons.

Alan was quick to say that his group, carrying signs such as "Man does not live by stale bread alone," is not a bunch of kooks, but serious residents who "are fed up with waiting in long, tedious lines in order to be served raw "mystery meat", lumpy potatoes, stale bread, and cold, haphazardly prepared dinners which lack variety." The protesters also maintain that Greeks should be allowed to eat where they please.

Students in the area were quick to sign the petition and some 1200 signatures were obtained from 11:30 A.M. to 12 P.M. It was noticeable that most signed after eating. Complaints of lack of seasoned food and not enough punch were heard from many signers.

Mr. Bongiovanni, manager of Dining Commons #5 stated that he recognized the students' protest as constructive criticism and that the Commons' were always trying to improve their services. Beyond this he had no further comment to make to the Daily Collegian, without authorization.

It was learned by the Daily Collegian that the long lines are due to overloads of students at the Commons' and to the fact that many students eat at the same time. Southwest Dining Commons #5 is built to handle 1800 but handles 2400 a day.

In answer to the charge of lack of variety he stated that the dietitians in the main office make up the menus and that the protesters should see Mr. Stoneham about that complaint. Bongiovanni maintained that the lines at Southwest #5 are the smallest in the area.

The protesters said that they did not feel that Southwest #5 is the only dining commons which has poor service. Byer and his group plan to protest today only. However, if necessary, they will continue until grievances are resolved.

Alan said he felt that in view of Bongiovanni's reaction some progress had already been made.

It was also learned that the money from mandatory meal tickets is used to pay for the new buildings in the Complex.

PRESIDENT JOHN W. LEDERLE

"UMass Must Become Involved" Lederle Tells Convo Audience

The University of Massachusetts "must become involved" in the economic and social problems of the state it serves, University President John W. Lederle told a University Convocation audience yesterday.

The University "must be responsive to the needs of all the people whom it serves," he said. "If it does not grow in their minds and hearts it will have failed in its purpose no matter how good its students, how excellent its faculty or how fine its buildings."

University growth in all areas is best achieved in an atmosphere of "freedom and order," President Lederle stated. "That the terms freedom and license are not universally and precisely understood in our society is the cause, surely, of much of the nation's woe," he noted.

Commenting on the university's stand on academic freedom and student freedoms, President Lederle pointed to the total agreement of the University with each of the six points set forth in the recent "Magna Charta of Student Rights" by the National Student Association and the American Association of University Professors.

He cited the University's leadership in encouraging responsible student government, the experimental self-determination of residence hall rules, and the freedom of students to manage their own fiscal affairs through the office of Recognized Student Organizations.

He said, "What a far cry is this accommodation of reasonableness from the impatient howls of a minority of extremists in the radical left: from the deliberate sowing of hate and distrust by the 'Everyone over Thirty is a Fink' school. Such voices deliberately frame an artificial crisis in which moderation is at bay.

"There is no sadder theme in the air today than the tired refrain that the generation in its middle years has done nothing except pass on to youth the 'Bur-

Hicks Commands Early Lead

BOSTON (AP)—Mrs. Louise Day Hicks, condemned by Negro civil rights leaders as a segregationist, emerged the leader Tuesday night in Boston's preliminary election for mayor.

With more than half the city's 275 precincts tallied, Mrs. Hicks was 3-2 ahead of her nearest rival Secretary of State Kevin H. White, in a field of 10 candidates.

The two leaders in this preliminary oppose each other in the Nov. 7 election.

Returns from 160 of the 275 precincts gave Mrs. Hicks 26,945 and White 17,412.

Most observers believe Mrs. Hicks benefitted from the backlash resulting from racial disturbances last June in Boston's heavily Negro Roxbury section.

White, 37, serving his fourth two-year term in the non-sensitive secretary of state's office, has been a strong candidate in state wide elections.

Marijuana Being Replaced By Hashish

BOSTON (AP)—Numerous marijuana smokers are changing to hashish—a more potent form of the drug, a federal narcotic agent said Tuesday.

Matthew O'Connor, supervising investigator in Oregon and northern California for the federal Bureau of Narcotics, said large quantities of hashish have been confiscated in the past four years.

"We never saw much before that," he told a court hearing challenging the constitutionality of the state's laws on marijuana use.

Earlier in Tuesday's hearing, marijuana was described as a "harmful and dangerous" drug by the former director of the Federal Narcotics Hospital, Lexington, Ky.

Crumbs

There was just one good thing about the lady in white who was carrying trays. She was a reminder to the rest of us sitting in the new "back of the Hatch" that we were expected to return our tray and dishes to the receiving station.

Other than that reminder, the presence of the Hatch worker should have made us all feel ashamed that our fellow students were leaving their tables cluttered. Besides the trays, dishes, and paper left on tables, a good many were otherwise soiled—especially with crumbs of food.

So the Hatch employee went around wiping the tables with a sponge.

She shouldn't have to do this. Of what sort are we that we can't clear away the signs of our meals and snacks?

This section of the Hatch where seats are usually available, this carpeted area serviced by its own "quick-line" seems to be too good for the UMass student. It seems we aren't responsible enough to have on our campus an eating place rivaling those of the town.

Most of the mess is left by students. The Commonwealth Room, a dining area on the main floor of the Student Union frequented largely by faculty and staff, was never seen in such a condition.

If the current clutter had been forseen, it is highly unlikely that the luxury area would have been planned. Sometimes, it just doesn't pay to trust student responsibility.

Down This Way

Sentinels

We met a friend recently who wanted to talk. He said that he perches himself, on occasion, near a picture window on one of the top floors of the Towers where, he said, he can get a bird's eye view of things.

"Looking out over the night," he said, "I can see a great deal. In the middle of the blackness there are streetlamps, all along the pathways and valleys of civilization where, every half hour or so, a lone automobile moves. The parts of buildings illuminated reflect windows, showing dark inside the buildings, signs that would, if I were not on a campus, assure me that everything is going well. If I look up, I can see miles of night, the lights the only evidences that our civilization is standing by. There is the steady green light, guarding the distant intersection. There are the flickering yellow lights stuffed in the midst of the foothills. There are the flashing red lights on the tops of the northern mountains. All the lights I see are kindling as sentinels of the countryside. The night is cool and clear. The people around me sleep quietly, dreaming, perhaps, of their progress and their failures, as unaware of all the lights as I am of the building below me."

You! Yes, you outcasts of the Pepsi Generation, you who are bored, outraged, or numbed to sleep by the stifling amount of insignificant trivia being foisted upon you these days, are being offered a unique opportunity to redeem your minds from brutish stagnation, through the rebirth of the Valley Center (alias, The Free University).

The V.C. is no more than, yet no less than, a personal attempt on the part of students and faculty from the Four College area to find their own purpose for existence (or whatever their ego-mania drives them to do) by meeting weekly in informal, yet directed, discussion on subjects not offered in the conventional college curriculum.

In some cases the courses are led by professors, in others, by students. In all cases, discussion is on an equal basis. About fifteen courses ranging in subject from Occultism, Existential Ethics, History of the Black Man in America, to Weaving, Anarchism, Yoga, Writing Workshops (or any other topics that are suggested and supported) will be a part of this semester's curriculum.

The curriculum will be decided upon by those students attending the organization meeting Wednesday, September 27, at 8:00 P.M. in the basement of Stone Dorm on the A. C. campus.

You can be one of them.

Courses are expected to begin October 2 and are held at night Monday through Thursday; each course meets once weekly for an hour and a half at 95 State Street, Northampton.

Greenough and "Upward Bound"

To the Editor:

In reply to Mr. Winder's letter in the September 25th Collegian, we find no fault with the "Upward Bound" program itself.

The misactions of a few irresponsible individuals cannot outweigh the beneficial aspects of this worthy project. We feel, rather, that the blame for the present deplorable conditions in our dormitory lies in the failure of "Upward Bound" administrators to make prior plans for the repair of possible damages.

One of the things that this noteworthy program tries to instill in its students is adult responsibility, which involves not only adult foresight into possible problems, but also adequate plans for dealing with these problems.

No, Mr. Winder, we find no fault with the "Upward Bound" program. We merely request prompt action to clean up the after-math.

Dining Commons Cut Back

University employees are concerned over the deplorable working conditions which are contributing to the problems so aptly described in Mr. Smith's "Open Letter" of Monday, Sept. 25. Food Service employees, many of whom are themselves parents of students, have a concern for their work which extends beyond their need for employment.

One prime example of administrative disregard for employees and their rightful job protection under law is the now established practice of insisting upon additional time off (compensatory time) for employees in lieu of overtime pay. Our union representatives have asked these people why they are willing to comply with this practice, why they are willing to give up their holiday time — the answer: "The students have to be fed properly."

Mr. Smith notes that the Southwest Commons are "serving approximately 500 people over their capacity". He describes the resultant inconveniences and hardships for students in those areas. Although we do not have the means to substantiate his figures, we do have proof that the serving lines in these commons have been severely cut back. Food Service employees have reported that they were warned last winter that their work load would be increased heavily this fall —do they have a choice but to work harder?

As Mr. Smith points out, the number of students to be served in the dining commons has increased, but the number of food service personnel has not increased to meet the needs of the students (hence, longer serving lines, etc.). In fact, a substantial number of regular employees hired on the usual 10-month basis were not rehired for September.

Employees could protest this system, but again and again when we speak to these people, their major concern is that they wish to bear the larger portion of the administrative injustice rather than to place the burden upon the students. We have observed a sincere desire on the part of this large group of people to be of service to you, the students, which often we find unbelievable in view of the choice of the administration to interpret the term "public servant" literally.

We are heartened to see this apparently knowledgeable display of dissatisfaction on the part of the students. We are also encouraged by the fact that the responsibility for correcting the situation has been properly placed. Food Service employees will continue to serve you, the students, to the best of their ability — they trust that if you find fault with the service you will continue to look to the source. When you examine the dining commons situation, we urge you to give ample consideration to the severe problems in the area of employee relations which are fostered by the present administration.

Mandatory Meal Tickets

To the Editor:

In a short time, the purchase of meal tickets by all students living in university housing will be mandatory. The administration's motives for this change are in themselves questionable, but what is most disturbing is that the administration does not seem satisfied to wait until the day rolls around—it is doing everything possible to speed up the purchase of meal tickets now.

Those who are seniors or 21 still may choose not to purchase meal tickets.

In the past, many students have been able to make use of dorm facilities in preparing meals. Now, according to the new handbook, the preparation of meals in dormitories is prohibited and no perishable foods may be stored in the dorms. This rule is being beautifully enforced to the extent of throwing away milk or meat products, no matter how good their condition, left in refrigerators for more than 24 hours. Wasteful?

The administration's gripes against allowing seniors their freedom for meals include overloading of the Hatch and increase in infirmary outpatients. Forbidding seniors to cook for themselves is not going to help this situation. Is it a matter of consideration for the students' health or merely a route to longer lines in the dining commons? If seniors are not considered responsible enough to keep a kitchenette clean and free from spoiled food, the University had better re-examine its liberal views in other areas.

It is needless to add that this change in policy was not known to seniors prior to their decisions to choose University housing and to forego purchasing meal tickets. But there is still some choice— be forced to buy a meal ticket, live on hamburgers, or (horrors!) starve.

Mysterious Photo

To the Editor:

At the time that it was announced last Spring, I had my doubts as to whether our campus could support a daily paper; but my experience thus far has been that, by and large, it can.

True, there has been some excessive front-page space devoted to off-campus national affairs, but this has not been serious. Tuesday's paper is a good case in favor of the work that a daily can do — it seemed valuable to me to have a transcript of President Lederle's Convocation Address in hand five hours after the closing of his talk.

Too, the report of the Outstanding Teacher awards was up to the minute. There was, though, one detail that unnecessarily blemished the Daily Collegian's coverage of the Convocation—the photograph labeled "Convocation 1967" was not what it purported to be. Judging from a close examination of the details of the photo, it is of an earlier assembly, very probably last year.

This matter of a photograph is a small one, granted; and it need not have arisen had the Daily Collegian not felt compelled by some mysterious urge to label it as 1967. Many of us are already impressed with the amount of work that must go, by a part-time staff, into the production of a college daily—we do not need the fictitious additional hypo of inaccurate photo captions.

Sincerely,
Richard W. Story

den of the Bomb.'" He emphasized the depression and wars that have faced the generation that now leads the nation, the current prosperity and said, "Yet —endlessly— the cry of our age is for more freedom, and less responsibility."

Freedom, he said, has meaning on the University campus, both for faculty and students. "Simply stated, it consists of a Bill of Rights: the right to teach, or to express; the right to participate and influence; the right to protest without violence; and the right to appeal."

And he added another, the right to learn, which he said, "is really more of a necessity than a right. It is the student's fundamental reason for being here."

With the rights and freedoms "there should be a clear recognition of student responsibilities," the UMass President said. He listed some specific responsibilities:

- "We need a broader student understanding of the fact that there cannot be a double standard in which they demand treatment like adults on one hand and then on the other hand when they get into the toils of the law, seek special treatment . . . They must 'face the music' like adults. The University will not come to their rescue.

- "So far as drugs are concerned, we are an educational institution — not a laboratory away from home for experimentation in hallucinations and fantasia.

- "There is a need for the Greek world to put its collective house in order and to live up to the highest ideals of the various charters and constitutions so it may re-establish its full participation in campus leaderschip. Soon, unless the fraternity system regenerates itself, the soaring enrollment of thousands of students each year may submerge the Greeks gradually into a row of rooming houses with strange symbols on the doors."

Faculty and administration also have responsibilities, the President added, among them improvement of the system of evaluation of the teaching process, continuous review of the residence hall program, refinement of the recently-revised student discipline system, and attention to the problems of fire protection, pedestrian safety, and expansion of services to foreign students.

HomecomingQueen Applications Available

By TOM MITCHELL

At half-time of the Homecoming football game with the University of Rhode Island, a pretty University co-ed will be crowned the 1967 Homecoming Queen.

This is the final step of the selection of the Queen. Have you ever wondered what precedes the coronation of a campus queen and how the final winner is selected?

It begins with the nomination of a girl you think should be the Queen. Application forms have been sent to the Activities chairmen of all dormitories, fraternities, and sororities. These forms should be filled out and returned to the R.S.O. office in the Student Union by Friday, September 29.

These entries will be interviewed that weekend by a panel of judges selected by the Homecoming Queen Committee. This panel is made up of members of the faculty and administration. Interviews will be used as a basis for selecting twenty (20) semi-finalists.

On Friday, October 6, students will determine the five finalists by voting in an election in the Student Union lobby from 9:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. Five girls will be the finalists for Homecoming Queen.

The finalists will return to the judges for final interviews. The selection of the Queen and her court will be announced at half-time on October 21.

If you know a girl you think should have a chance, have the application form completed and returned to the R.S.O. office by Friday.

Mt. Holyoke President Announces Resignation

Richard Glenn Gettel, President of Mount Holyoke College since 1957, informed the College community Wednesday evening that it is his "intention to resign from the presidency of Mount Holyoke, effective not later than the end of the academic year 1968-69."

The decision to leave after 10 years as president "was made after careful consideration of the future best interests of both the College and myself. It follows a stream of similar decisions made in recent years by many other college presidents who, after a decade or thereabouts, withdrew from their offices well before reaching retirement age," Mr. Gettell said.

"The plain fact is that a modern college presidency is a very demanding job, requiring the utmost of physical and nervous energy.

A new president with a new forward thrust can do far more for a college than a too-long continuing one.

"I have undertaken to preside at Mount Holyoke for up to two more years to allow time for the selection of my successor by a joint Trustee-Faculty committee and will do all I can during that period to help keep the College on the move.

"I shall leave with the greatest regret . . . but I am sure that my eventual departure will best enable both me and the College to go on to a new and exciting future."

Robert G. Wiese, chairman of the Mount Holyoke Board of Trustees and partner in the investment firm of Scudder, Stevens and Clark of Boston, said, "It has been my privilege to work very closely with President Gettell during practically his entire term of office.

"In this period we have seen a great development of the College in material terms and have met the demanding challenge of change which is taking place in the educational world. We have also been looking to the future, not only making plans for the continued development of Mount Holyoke but also for five-college cooperation within our Valley."

"This has been a period of excellence and great progress in the history of Mount Holyoke which must always be identified with the imaginative leadership of President Gettell."

Botany 101

Prof. Creates A Happening

Botany 100 has a new look as a result of a young and creative professor, Dr. Ryan Drum. And every one of his classes is a happening.

His class is as much a living organism as the plants he talks about. It breathes. It grows. And in the minds of his students it reproduces. It creates.

He uses lights, colors music and photography to reflect the immediacy of today and to make his classes enjoyable.

Dr. Drum's emphasis in the course is on learning, not teaching. "It almost doesn't matter what's being taught", he explained, "as long as something is being learned. The whole point of learning is being able to do something with it. As far as life is concerned, the critical thing is not how much you learn, but how well you can use what you have learned."

"There are two types of education: vocational training, which prepares the student for a spot in the economy, and human education, which, through pleasure, helps the student lead a happier, healthier human existance."

"The problem is that we apply vocational standards of excellence, performance and the mastery of certain skills to things which are designed exclusively for pleasure."

"You take a course in art or history to satisfy, not a degree requirement, but an innate curiosity. You study these things because they're delightful just to know. And, by knowing, you are able to appreciate more. This is not an intellectual appreciation, but an emotional one. It makes you feel good."

"It is cruel to try to judge and grade people on how much they enjoyed or understood a novel . ."

Dr. Drum would prefer pass-fail grades in vocational courses and no grades at all in other courses. Students, he feels, should be able to learn and enjoy without fear of punishment for not learning and enjoying.

According to Dr. Drum, the problem with present education in America is that it's associated with economic considerations. "Grades and jobs and education are all inter-related and none satisfactorily. Education suffers because of the grade requirement.

"Too much time is wasted in mechanically keeping track of book work. Yet after the student gets a job, his grade doesn't count at all. The good worker who got poor grades in school is preferred to the bad worker with high grades."

Dr. Drum then began to talk about American attitude toward money. "Because of the seriousness with which most Americans approach money, the university atmosphere is sometimes very joyless. With a few exceptions, the classroom is a mirthless place. The American system prevents total healthy learning. "I believe that education should be a delight, not a drudge."

Instead of force-feeding knowledge, the university should encourage curiosity and a joy in learning and it should provide the opportunity to learn.

"Students today are being educated in a way that doesn't even pertain to today, let alone tomorrow. They are being educated for yesterday."

"In my course, my concern is not to make people any better than they are, but to make them as good as they are right now. I want them to take what they have and make the most of it."

"I'm concerned with how they feel then years from now—how they're functioning as human beings, not how much they remember about plants, but how much better they feel with plants."

UMass Law School To Try New Interview Approach

It was announced today by Kenneth J. Suid, Pre-Law Advisor that a new approach to law school interviews is being tried on an experimental basis this year. In addition to the usual individual and group interviews conducted by law school representatives, several actual classes will be presented by law school professors.

"By participating in a class, students will be able to gain more insight into the law school curriculum than they have had in the past", Suid says. Before attending class, students will be asked to read materials pertaining to the discussion for the evening.

The first such class will be conducted by Professor David Ruder of Northwestern University School of Law on November 13 at 8:00 P.M. in the Converse Administration Building of Amherst College. Students from Smith, Amherst, Mt. Holyoke Colleges and the University of Massachusetts are to attend.

Several new sources of information concerning law schools are now available to students. This fall, the Association of American Law Schools published a "Pre-Law Manual" which includes information from every accredited law school in the country.

Similar to the guide for graduate business schools, the manual is essentially a condensation of law school catalogues.

Suid and Professor William C. Havard, Chairman of the Government Department, have compiled a manual for students and pre-law advisors entitled, "Inside Law Schools." This pamphlet has essential data on admissions standards and qualities of every law school.

This pamphlet has recently been published by Cowles Education Corporation as part of their "How to Pass The Law School Admission Test." Both "Inside Law Schools" and the "Pre-Law Handbook" are available in the Office of the Pre-Law Advisor, third floor, Whitmore Administration Building.

In addition, there will be a Pre-Law Association for all interested students on Thursday, Sept. 28 at 7 p.m. in the Nantucket Room, S.U.

All students interested in the possibility of attending law school should register in the Office of the Pre-Law Advisor.

You want to be represented . . . but you hesitate: you want action . . . but you fail to act.

At the present time, there are no candidates for the Student Senate in approximately twenty residence halls. No candidates have declared from either Sororities or Fraternities. This means that 3,000 students will not be represented when decisions are made in many areas directly affecting them.

It's not too late—nomination papers must be returned by Thursday. They may be picked up in R.S.O. office.

Safety Decision 'Harried' Fusia

By TOM FITZGERALD
Sports Editor

"It was a judgment call, but I thought it was harried," Coach Fusia said yesterday in reference to a controversial safety decision against the Redmen during Saturday's lopsided 30-9 victory over Maine.

The questioned play came in the fourth quarter when Maine quarterback Dave Wing tossed an intended touchdown pass that was intercepted by UMass cornerback Mike McArdle near the goalline. McArdle made a diving catch, and the official nearest the action immediately lifted his arms in the air with palms together, signifying a safety.

Many observers felt that a touchback should have been called, with the Redmen taking possession on their own 20-yard line. The play, of course, had little effect on the game's outcome.

"It didn't hurt, but one day it could hurt," Fusia said.

The Redmen were penalized a total of 70 yards Saturday, but the coach said, "We're usually around the 100 mark." He said that the team has been helped by the use of a squad of officials at all its scrimmages. No less than four officials were present at each simulated game, he said, to keep the players on their toes with respect to the fine points of gridiron regulations.

Fusia said the key to Saturday's victory was the team's ability "to come up with the big third down play all day." He hopes the Redmen continue the knack when they become TV stars this Saturday against Dartmouth at Alumni Stadium.

Redmen Rantings — "For a first game I thought the offensive line did extremely well," Fusia said. "There were fewer mistakes made than in any opener since I've been here" . . . He lauded the consistent blocking of Noel Schablik and Bob Santucci, an injury victim all last year whose last game against Maine was the heart-breaking 10-8 loss in 1965. . .Dennis Gray is "rapidly becoming a fine linebacker," Fusia said. He also singled out middle guard Bruce Gombar, linebacker Ernie Smith and safety Steve Rogers.

One aspect of the Redmen's play that Fusia frowned on was the kickoff return defense, particularly on a razzle-dazzle reverse pulled by Charlie Harney and stellar soph Gene Benner, who legged the ball 60 yards. "It wasn't such a startling play on their part, but rather poor coverage on our part," he said . . . Doctors have said that fullback Don Durkin may return to action for the B.U. game . . . Durkin suffered a broken clavicle and torned ligaments in pre-season play.

Schablik McArdle

Junior linebacker Randy Robinson, who has been told by doctors that his playing days are through because of a back injury, is assisting Coach Dave Kelley with the frosh . . . Bruno Debiak's twisted knee should be in good shape for this afternoon's practice, Fusia said. The doctors "don't think it is serious." . . . Schablik is in the infirmary with a sore throat and a fever . . . Dave Driscoll, sophomore brother of junior Tim, is back at practice. The hard-hitting cornerback had been out several days with an injury.

A meeting of all candidates for the freshman basketball team will be held Wednesday, Oct. 4, at 7 p.m. in Room 250, Boyden Building.

Panthers Blank Colt 45's On Dramatic TD Pass, 6-0

A hot and heavy dorm intramural slate last night was climaxed by a pulsating 6-0 victory by the Panthers over the Colt 45's.

With 45 seconds left in a scoreless duel, quarterback Dana uncorked a 40-yard touchdown pass to Dufan to decide the issue.

In other action, the Cougars beat the Jaguars, 15-6. Last year's campus champs, the Adams Smashers, showed true to form by trouncing the Marauders, 36-6, on Al Craig's three touchdown passes.

The Spartans shut out the Lions, 7-0, and the Broncos whitewashed the Chestnuts, 6-0, on Kerens' TD pass. Led by Ed Polchlopek, who made five touchdown passes, the Buffalos trampled the Cherries, 33-0.

In a tight duel, the Giants edged the Birches, 7-6; the Barracudas beat the Black Bears, 10-6, and the Commanchees licked the leopards, 15-12.

The Bruisers and Ironmen forfeited to the Academics and the Seagram 6's.

Independent action saw the Chem Club beating the Roman Numerals, 20-8, and the Comets whipping the Tophids, 12-0.

In Monday's late fraternity games, SPE, last year's frat champ, beat TC, 14-6; TEP ripped BKP, 14-0, and ZN buried APO, 33-6.

Show Must Go On

Despite a strike of technicians and announcers of the American Broadcasting Company, the UMass-Dartmouth game, and three other "game-of-the-week" programs, will be televised Saturday, the network said yesterday.

The other games are Michigan at California, Kent State at Ohio University and Maryland at Oklahoma.

Starting Soccer Spots Still Up for Grabs

By WALT STACHURA
Staff Reporter

Soccer coach Larry Briggs is pleased with the progress of his squad in early season practices.

Coach Briggs credites a new system of conditioning for having his charges in better shape this year at this time than in previous years.

The battle for positions on the starting team continues. Several positions have been secured on the front line. Marty Smith, Rich Rosoff, Gerry Cellilli and Gary Gibbons appear certain of starting.

The remaining place on the front line is still being contested between Joe Bregoli and Marty Megoho, one of six Africans on the squad.

Newcomers Tom Malone and Steve Kramer are contending for goaltending duties. Malone was freshman goalie last year while Kramer is coming off a year layoff due to injuries.

Rosoff Gibbons

Injuries have taken a toll on the team. Cellilli was out for a few days but returned Monday. Still out of service were Phil Bozenhard and goalie candidate Malone.

Coach Briggs looks forward to a well-balanced Yankee Conference race this year. "Any team can win on any given day," he says.

Connecticut, Vermont and UMass appear to be the main threats for the conference championship.

'No Tomorrows' Says Williams As Sox Fall Behind

By The Associated Press

"We're running out of tomorrows," Red Sox manager Dick Williams said Tuesday after the Cleveland Indians had jolted his team's pennant hopes with a 6-3 victory.

Meanwhile the Minnesota Twins tok sole possession of first place in the American League with a 7-3 triumph over California. Although they are virtually tied for second place, the Red Sox are one point behind the Chicago White Sox, whose night game at Kansas City was rained out.

Chicago plays a double-header against the Athletics today. The fourth place Detroit Tigers, who edged New York, 1-0, are a half game out of second place and one-and-a-half behind the Twins.

The standings:

	W.	L.	Pct.	G.B.
Minnesota	91	68	.572	—
Chicago	89	68	.567	1
Boston	90	69	.566	1
Detroit	89	69	.563	1½

Cleveland 6, Boston 3

BOSTON (AP) — Light-hitting Chico Salmon drove in three runs with a homer and a double to offset Carl Yastrzemski's 43rd homer as the Cleveland Indians jolted Boston's pennant hopes with a 6-3 victory over the Red Sox Tuesday.

Salmon, who carried a .222 batting average into the game, hurt the Red Sox by doubling home the first run and then scoring himself in the second.

He capped his personal slugging spree by hoisting a two-run shot into the left field screen in the sixth for his second homer of the season.

Cleveland scored its third run on a throwing error as the Boston defense collapsed behind starter Gary Bell in the third. Chuck Hinton's 10th homer leading off the sixth against Jose Santiago accounted for the Indians' other run.

The Red Sox were unable to break through Cleveland right-hander Luis Tiant until the seventh.

Jose Tartabull launched the three-run uprising with a one-out pop single to shallow right. Jerry Adair followed with a line single to the same sector, Tartabull stoping at second.

Yastrzemski, who lined his 31st double to right center in the fifth, looked at a ball and then lifted a tremendous drive into the centerfield bleachers.

Minnesota 7, California 3

MINNEAPOLIS-St. Paul (AP) — Minnesota reclaimed undisputed possession of first place in the pulsating American League pennant race Tuesday, riding a pair of Harmon Killebrew's mighty home runs and a homer and triple by Bob Allison to a 7-3 comeback victory over California.

Killebrew's 435-foot two-run homer after Cesar Tovar singled ignited a four-run Twin's rally in the sixth inning that wiped out a 3-2 California lead.

Killebrew then added a solo shot 430 feet to left-center in the seventh, tying him with Boston's Carl Yastrzemski for the American League homer lead at 43.

Allison hit his 24th homer with the bases empty in the fourth inning, after tripling and scoring on Rod Carew's single in the second. Allison also singled in the seventh. Carew added three singles for the Twins.

Detroit 1, New York 0

NEW YORK (AP)—Mickey Lolich kept Detroit's dim pennant hopes alive Tuesday night when he shut out New York on four hits and beat the Yankees 1-0.

Lolich and Mel Stottlemyre were locked in a scoreless duel through the first five innings with the game's only hit a single by New York's Horace Clarke in the first.

Then, Lennie Green sliced a double to left, opening the sixth. He moved to third on Dick McAuliffe's single up the middle. When Joe Pepitone's throw came through to the plate, McAuliffe took second. Al Kaline was purposely walked, loading the bases with none out.

Ed Mathews sent a long fly to Steve Whitaker in left field and Green raced home with the game's only run.

Libe Opens Stacks to Accommodate Growing Enrollment

Many students, trying to take a shortcut to the libe, have been surprised when they found themselves turned away from the side entrance.

By John E. Healey
Staff Reporter

Students are being allowed to browse Goodell Library stacks this fall in an effort to provide better service to an ever increasing number of patrons, Dr. David Clay, Director of University Libraries, told the Daily Collegian.

As part of the new policy, only the main entrance is open. For about 106 hours during the week, security guards are on duty to prevent unauthorized removal of books. Although an inventory has not been taken, many books have disappeared in the past. Dr. Clay believes the loss was more the result of negligence than malice.

To man the exit, the University has hired four men who work directly for the library. Bernard Turner, Theodore Slate, and Edward DeBarbieri are now on campus; the fourth, Walter Ely, will soon arrive.

Turner, the man in charge, has the most colorful background. He has been with the London Metropolitan Police, British Intelligence and the Singapore Police. He was recently the superintendent of security at the University of Western Australia.

There are no plans to institute a "fool proof" system to check the exit. Sophisticated electronic devices, believes Dr. Clay, are not only expensive, but they have flaws.

"I expect," said Dr. Clay, "the checkout process to speed up once the students get used to the system." When students become accustomed to presenting books at the exit, the delay will become minimal, he said.

The increase in the size of the University has brought other changes within the library. Room 506 is closed and will be renovated as a staff area. Dr. Clay hopefully believes this will be the last reading area taken before 1970 when a new University library opens. Because it was the smallest reading area, Room 506 was chosen; and it will require only minor modifications in wiring and furnishings.

The loss of Room 506 reflects the increasing size of the library staff. There are now 45 professional members and 117 nonprofessional members. New divisions have required more people. Goodell now has a full-time government documents librarian, Mina Pease, who is in charge of 112,000 items. A new division of bibliography is maintained by a committee of four to which more members will be added.

The increase in volumes also indicates the growth rate. Last year the library had 470,000 volumes. In one year 92,000 volumes have been added, roughly 20 per cent.

Built in 1935, Goodell Library will be replaced by a 28-story building. The fate of the old building has not been decided. It may or may not be used for library purposes.

The new library will be the tallest building on campus and will contain 35 departments; however there will still be divisional libraries in other buildings.

"The next three years," said Dr. Clay, "are going to be difficult." With a goal of one million volumes by 1970, readers, staff and books will become increasingly crowded. Dr. Clay hopes that all will cooperate and bear with the inconveniences.

No Physical Damage Found In Boston Marijuana Study

BOSTON (AP) — A physician testified Wednesday that marijuana caused no physical damage to 200 users of the drug he studied at Beth Israel Hospital, Boston.

Dr. David Lewis, a doctor of internal medicine at Beth Israel, said the only physical abnormality noted was a decreased heart rate and reddening of the eyes.

Both symptoms disappeared quickly, he said, a short time after the marijuana was smoked.

Dr. Lewis was a witness at a pre-trial hearing in Suffolk Superior Court on motions to dismiss charges of possession of marijuana against two Philadelphia men, Ivan Weiss, 25, and Joseph Leis, 26.

He was asked by Chief Judge G. Joseph Tauro whether marijuana should be legalized in Massachusetts.

There is not enough scientific evidence available for me to give an intelligent answer as to whether it's wrongful," he replied.

Volpe Says Sears Biggest GOP Man

BOSTON (AP) — Gov. John A. Volpe said Wednesday he believes the showing of Republican Rep. John W. Sears in the Boston mayoralty primary makes Sears the dominant GOP figure in the city.

"I don't see how it could help but make him a stronger figure on Beacon Hill," the governor told a news conference, "because of his strong showing."

Sears, first Republican candidate for mayor since 1933, finished third in the race for two nominations.

Volpe said he is not ready to endorse either of the successful candidates because "I am not a voter of Boston and I am not going to tell the Boston voters how to vote."

The winners, Mrs. Louise Day Hicks and Kevin H. White, both are Democrats.

Military-Civilian Differences Sharpening Over Vietnam War

by Bob Horton
AP Military Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Military-civilian differences over North Vietnam bombing sharpened Wednesday as the war problem drew critical discussion both in Washington and at the United Nations.

The controversy whirled around these developments:

Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara reiterated his stand against attacking the Communist port of Haiphong, major entry point for Soviet aid: "A risk I don't believe we should undertake at this time."

Republican Sen. Thurston B. Morton of Kentucky, speaking to the Business Executives Move for Vietnam Peace, charged that President Johnson was "brainwashed" by U.S. military and civilian leaders into believing a military solution is possible in Vietnam.

—Canada, in a policy stand voiced by Foreign Secretary Paul Martin at the United Nations in New York, said a halt to the bombing of North Vietnam is the first priority in efforts to start peace talks with the Communists.

—Denmark's Prime Minister Jens Otto Krag told the National Press Club in Washington the United States should "run a limited risk" and stop the air attacks to see whether negotiations might follow.

McNamara, before leaving Washington for a NATO nuclear meeting in Turkey, discounted once again the extent of the military men's differences with the Johnson Administration over conduct of the war.

The Pentagon chief, in low-key remarks, portrayed Wheeler's testimony as "a balanced appraisal of the potential risks and gains" of raiding Haiphong while Soviet ships may be docked unloading supplies.

But Wheeler, in comments given Aug. 16 to a closed hearing of the Senate preparedness subcommittee, asserted that after considering all factors, "I have come down on the side that we could undertake actions against the port of Haiphong."

Morton noted in his speech that his view is a switch from 1965. "When the President began to escalate the war, I supported the increased American military involvement."

"If the President of the United States has been mistaken, so have I," he told his applauding audience.

Johnson, in turn, brainwashed the American people during the 1964 presidential campaign by saying the Southeast Asia war should be fought by Asians, rather than Americans, Morton declared.

Canada's policy enunciation before the U.N. General Assembly said it seems clear that all attempts to bring about talks between the United States and North Vietnam "are doomed to failure unless the bombing is stopped."

Martin acknowledged, however, that a bombing halt is "only one side of a military equation." If there is to be a success, he said, peace efforts cannot preceed "as if the other side did not exist."

Indian Ambassador Answers Charges Of CIA In filtration in Bihar

NEW DELHI (AP)—U.S. Ambassador Chester Bowles issued an angry retort Wednesday to a claim that CIA agents have infiltrated industrial areas of Bihar State and American missionaries are converting famine-plagued farmers under duress.

Chandra Shekhar Singh, the state's irrigation and power minister, was quoted Tuesday as saying Central Intelligence Agency agents infiltrated a strategically important industrial complex in the garb of missionaries and research scholars.

The United News of India said Singh claimed a number of people reported to him that scores of drought and flood victims had been converted to Christianity on the promise they would receive relief. He was quoted as saying children in mission schools were forced to say the United States had saved them from starvation by providing food to them and employment to their guardians.

The Singh statement was published widely.

Bowles' response called it false and irresponsible.

"These are malicious fabrications calculated to undermine the spirit of cooperation between dedicated officials of the government of India and the United States and various voluntary agencies," Bowles declared.

Faculty Fellow Program Seeks to Help Students

By Randi Kinner
Staff Reporter

Looking for help or just a friend? Seek out your "Faculty Fellow"!

A "Faculty Fellow" is a member of the faculty at the University. He is one of a group of fellows who, when sought out by the student, will help the student in anyway possible. He is there, as an aid not only to the academic problems but also to the social problems of the individual.

The "Faculty Fellow" organization seeks to break down the heavy line between teachers and students and establish fellowship and communication.

This organization consists of many faculty members who have volunteered their services. It is, however, the responsibility of the student who wishes assistance in any phase of college life to seek out a "Faculty Fellow".

If, for instance, a student wishes help in Physics, he goes to the head of residence and presents his problem. At this time, if he so desires, he also gives the name of a faculty fellow from whom he wishes help. The head of residence, then gives the list of names to the head of "Faculty Fellows" and from there, contact is made to the faculty member.

Hicks Is Confident Despite Opposition

BOSTON (AP)—"May the best woman win in November."

With that whimsical comment, Louise Day Hicks, a Democrat, nominated for mayor in Tuesday's non-partisan primary election, brushed aside reports of a coalition of Republicans, Democrats and civil rights leaders against her.

"Each of them has only one vote," she said. "I'm going to win."

Her opponent in the Nov. 7 final election will be Secretary of State Kevin H. White, a fellow Democrat. They finished one-two in a field of 10 candidates.

Mrs. Hicks, school committee —woman for six years, has opposed state efforts to abolish racial imbalance in public schools.

First to announce opposition to Mrs. Hicks was U.S. Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., who said "we will unite behind Kevin White . . . and we will win."

Mrs. Hicks said Kennedy's opposition was not unexpected, adding "I haven't seen Senator Kennedy actively supporting anyone except Senator Kennedy."

Republican Gov. John A. Volpe said he "would not be casting a vote for Mrs. Hicks" if he were a Bostonian. The governor is a resident of suburban Winchester.

Authorities Conduct Search For Poisoning Pesticide

TIJUANA, Mexico (AP) — Authorities in this border city conducted an all-out search Wednesday for the source of a powerful agricultural pesticide blamed for the mass poisoning of children.

The number of deaths since the outbreak Monday was listed at 17 by Deputy Federal Dist. Atty. Hector Valdivia. He said estimates by others Tuesday that ranged as high as 34 were wrong.

Most deaths occurred Monday, with a few new ones Tuesday and Wednesday. Some 250 persons were hospitalized at the peak of the outbreak but all but 50 have been released.

Milk first was suspected as the source of the poison. But Tuesday night the California Department of Agriculture laboratories in Sacramento determined that the deadly insecticide parathion had been found in Tijuana bread samples.

Sale of flour and baked goods was halted immediately and samples from grocery shelves were subjected to laboratory analysis.

Experts said only a small amount of the poison-used to spray various crops—could cause death. They said there apparently was enough of the stuff in tainted samples to kill children but not adults. All the victims were children.

Parathion was found in the bodies of two young victims, an Agriculture Department spokesman said.

The spokesman theorized that the insecticide may have somehow contaminated a bread ingredient.

Valdivia said he was not entirely satisfied with the Sacramento analysis. Some victims ate no bread, he said, but did eat sugar on cereal. He said sugar was being checked as a possible poison source.

Bishop Claims Contact With Dead Son in Seance

NEW YORK (AP)—Did Episcopal Bishop James A. Pike communicate with his dead son during a seance that was taped and televised in Toronto earlier this month?

The bishop believes he did. Some experts in the field of psychical research believe he didn't.

At the seance, which took place Sept. 3 and was shown on CTV, the private Canadian network, Sept. 17, the Rev. Arthur Ford, a widely known medium and ordained minister of the Disciples of Christ Church, went into a trance. His spirit control, Fletcher, a French-Canadian he had known as a boy, relayed messages to the bishop purportedly from dead friends and relatives.

The controversial bishop said in an interivew in Seattle Tuesday that during the session his son, James Jr., spoke to him directly through the medium-without the control.

The Bishop's son committed suicide in February, 1966, at the age of 22.

"He referred to events—a lot of difficulties—and seemed very aware of things, said the bishop. He said his son knew of his dispute with the Church over interpretation of some traditional doctrines.

Dr. Karlis Osis, director of research for the American Society of Psychical Research, who has done elaborate investigation on the question of survival after death, said Wednesday: "I do think there are some facts discovered in parapsychological research which suggest that possibility, but it is by no means conclusive at the present stage.

"I strongly doubt that proof of one medium in one session could give us more evidence than has already been obtained in a series of long, well-planned experiments."

Martin Ebon, formerly administrative secretary of the Parapsychology Foundation in New York, New School lecturer in the field and author of "Prophecy in Our Time," said: "Bishop Pike represents the kind of searching individual and researcher who has found subjective proof in an area where many scientists, including J. B. Rhine, hold that objective proof cannot be found with current investigative methods."

The seance, he said, "doesn't prove survival after death but a high and specialized form of ESP. The medium could have picked Pike's memory."

Mideast Continues In 7-hour Duel

Egyptian and Israeli forces pounded each other with artillery, tank and machine-gun fire across the Suez Canal cease-fire line Wednesday in a seven-hour duel. Each side accused the other of starting it.

The Israeli army claimed Egyptian gunners ignored six cease-fire calls from U.N. observers in the battle that ranged along a 75-mile front from El Qantara to Port Suez.

It was the ninth clash across the canal this month.

Israel announced that two Israelis, one a civilian, were killed and 11 wounded. The Egyptian listed their casualties as one dead and three wounded, but did not say whether they were civilian or military.

An Egyptian military communique said Israeli gun positions on the east bank of the canal intermittently opened fire on military installations and civilian targets at Suez, Ismalia, El Qantara and Dversoir on the opposite bank.

Israel said each incident was started by Egypt in spite of U.N. observers' efforts to re-establish the cease-fire. The firing died off in the late afternoon.

In another development, an Israeli army spokesman in Tel Aviv said two Israeli border policemen and two El Fatah terrorists were killed in gun battles near Tulkarm in Israeli-occupied Jordan Wednesday.

Student Senate Needs You

"Unless one nomination paper is returned for every vacancy available, no election will be held for said vacancy." (S.G.A. By-Laws, Article XII, Section 4.)

This means in a two seat constituency, for example, if only one paper is returned, only one person will be elected; a write-in can only be elected by getting more votes than the person whose name appears on the ballot.

The following constituencies are lacking papers:

Residence Hall	Seats Open	Papers Returned	Will Be Elected (presently)
C. Coolidge Lower	1	0	0
C. Coolidge Middle	1	0	0
Van Meter North	1	0	0
Commuters	8	5	5

This means that, thus far, about 3600 students will not be represented.

Rusk Willing For Peace Talks

Secretary of State Dean Rusk challenged North Vietnam Wednesday to meet American peace overtures and pledged he would go anywhere in the world for talks.

"We shall not stand on ceremony or worry about saving face," Rusk told the American Banker's Association. "It's not a question of saving face, it's a question of saving South Vietnam."

Rusk also said those calling for a halt to bombing of North Vietnam should insist Hanoi stop aggression in the south. He said he found it "hard to understand how one side can stop a war."

Personal Phone Services Increases

by FRANCES CLINES

There are over 6000 telephones in use on campus, according to Robert N. Brooks, Assistant to the Dean of Students, and Robert M. Fowler, Staff Assistant, Treasurer's Office. Student telephones number 3941, giving over 75 per cent of the resident student body personal telephones.

Five hundred and four new telephones were installed in Crampton, Mackimmie, Patterson, and Prince Dormitories for this semester.

While student phones replace lobby phones and intercoms, a few dormitories will retain the old system. This is for the benefit of students who prefer not having personal service, and special groups, such as those on the education block, whose schedules vary from the university service and billing system.

Free Bus to Run Bi-Nightly For Students

Free bus transportation in the evening for the four-college area begins Monday, October 21. Chartered by the Four-College Student Coordinating Committee, the full-size bus will make two round trips each evening. This bus service is open to any student or faculty member at Smith, Amherst, Mount Holyoke and the University of Massachusetts.

The four-college bus is the first of a series of services projected by the committee for the 1967-68 academic year. The purpose underlying the bus and the committee's existence is to mobilize students at all the academic institutions to lend their enthusiasm to events of particular interest on every campus.

A temporary time schedule for the bus is set for at least two weeks. The schedule is flexible to the needs of the bulk of passengers.

Class of '70 Sponsors The Pozo-Seco Singers

As CASH-BOX, a music trade weekly, said, "They have a folk sound combined with a beat, which is now folk-rock, but something all its own." They'll be at the Soph-Frosh Picnic; will you?

Coming to UMass this weekend for a free concert sponsored by the class of 1970 are the Pozo-Seco Singers. They will appear on the lawn by ahe Student Union from 4 p.m. to 7 p.m. at the Soph-Frosh Picnic.

The distinctive sounds put forth by this talented Texas threesome are currently being heard coast to coast via several best-selling records in addition to their critically-acclaimed concert, television and night club engagements.

A new and exciting group, the three met several months ago on the campus of tiny Del-Mar College. The school's folk festival had invited both Susan Taylor and The Strangers Two, among others, to take part. But by the time the curtain rang down, the pretty blonde soloist had joined forces with the "Strangers" Lofton Kline and Donnie Williams to create the Pozo-Seco Singers.

The Pozo-Seco Singers surprised the popular music market when they showed immediate staying power in the "here today, gone tomorrow" world of the Top 40. Their first single, "Time," became a best-seller upon release.

On the heels of that initial success, the trio followed with another ballad, "I'll Be Gone," repeating the pattern established by "Time."

As Cash-Box, a music trade weekly, said, "They have a folk sound combined with a beat, which is now folk-rock, but something all it's own."

All natives of the Lone Star State, Susan, Donnie and Lofton were raised in the Southwest and Midwest.

The pert 5'3" Susan attended Del Mar College in Corpus Christe, Texas.

The youngest of the trio, she has surprised many a fan with her varied instrumental abilities. In addition to the guitar, she is proficient on everything from piano to harmonica to the bass violin.

A native of Floydada, Texas, tall, lanky Donnie grew up in Missouri and Iowa in addition to Texas. After attending high school in Portland, Tex., he served in the Army before joining the group.

Lofton, born and raised in Corpus Christi attended Texas A&I at nearby Kingsville. It was at the Kingsville Naval Air Station's Officers Club that the Pozo-Seco Singers performed their first professional engagement.

Lofton came to the group quite naturally since he previously had sold guitars and given guitar-playing lessons. He also is competent on both the drums and bass.

Our Laws You're Breaking

The United States government is currently engaged in a war in Vietnam.

This week it was reported that a 320 member group, who call themselves RESIST, issued a statement pledging to raise funds to support those resisting the draft and the war.

A spokesman for the group made the following comment:

"All of the people involved in this statement have been making peaceful and patient protests against the war by conventional means for two years — and getting nowhere."

Acts of disobedience are planned by some of the signers, the New York Times reported yesterday.

While we support the right of individuals to conscienciously object to military service, we do not believe that active resistance to the government because of political conviction is necessary in our society.

We do not believe that acts of civil disobedience are required to enable individuals to enjoy their right of freedom of expression.

On the contrary, we believe that the politically active should turn their attentions to the politically inactive so that together the two groups might form a majority which might act through the legitimate channels of policy making.

What the RESIST group is saying, among other things, is that the government is not representing the people. The organization that has just issued "A Call to Resist Illegitimate Authority" might consider issuing a call that the vast majority of people who sustain legitimate government examine the policies of the government more carefully.

For if government is legitimized or constitutionalized to act in the best interests of all the people then it seems that a minority of 320 (albeit composed of "professors, writers, ministers and other professionals") is doing a disservice to the community at large.

They are saying that the government is not acting in a proper manner as the legitimate agency of the people. Yet the group is not going to the people through the means of politics (getting people elected to public office who share your views and reminding them of your views while they are in office).

This group is saying that because we disagree with the government we will ignore the people who brought it into office and who sustain it and we will call the government illegitimate.

The American people deserve more than to be told they have erred and they are incapable of correcting their error.

The Aftermath

A public handshake and a written memorandum of understanding have ended the teachers' strike. As the schools prepare to resume normal operations tomorrow or Friday, the city's overriding reaction will be one of relief that more than a million children will finally start regular classes. Now that last week's ill-fated tentative settlement has been taped back together, only the negligible prospect of a rejection by the United Federation of Teachers rank and file can block a return to work.

Gratification over the end of the educational blackout must not obscure the legal issues which remain unresolved. The extra benefits the U.F.T. gained through its defiance of the state's new Taylor Law increase the danger that other unions of public employees will decide there are dividends in coercing the community. Whether the new law can effectively restrain such misuse of economic power will be determined by the outcome of the proceedings now under way in State Supreme Court and in the Public Employment Relations Board.

On the education side, the aftermath of the disruption leaves the school year drastically curtailed just when many communities are giving consideration to a lengthened academic calendar. Mayor Lindsay's earlier demand that the missed school days be made up at the start of the summer vacation is sure to displease almost everybody, since it would throw summer travel and work schedules into disarray. But the time lost is too great to be skipped, whatever the price in inconvenience all around.

Priority must now be given to healing the tragic rifts which the stoppage engendered in the community. The children, already hurt by the upheaval and acrimony, must not be hurt even more by words or actions which will turn schools into battlegrounds.

It would be naive to pretend that public arguments and agreements so painfully arrived at will have left the scene unchanged. Indeed, changes are essential, and new relationships between school and community must, after the destructive skirmishes, be encouraged to evolve. The experimental programs, designed to improve the slum schools and agreed upon in the settlement, will mean little unless they inspire new efforts to open up a productive future to generations of pupils. Such a commitment alone can unite teachers, parents and the school system in an essential new partnership.

"It Was Mine"

To the editor:

I went into the Collegian office Tuesday night to talk with the Collegian's advisor, Mr. Alvin Oickle. When I went into the business office to talk with him, I left my notebook on one of the side desks in the outer office.

In or on my notebook was the rough draft of a story I was writing for Record week. It was an interview with Dr. Ryan Drum, the Botany 101 teacher.

When I came back to the dorm, I opened my notebook to get the story because I was going to finish writing it. It wasn't there. So I rewrote it from the notes I had.

This afternoon, one of my friends told me that the Collegian had scooped me on the story I was planning for Record Week. I looked at the Collegian's story. It was mine.

I did not put that story on the news editor's desk. May I suggest to the Collegian editors that before they pick up a stray story and put it into their paper, they first find out who wrote it and where it came from.

Gena Corea.

Chivalry Is Dead

To the editor:

Last Saturday evening a girl friend and I decided we were hungry and would like to get something to eat. Since it was eleven-thirty, and there were no on-campus facilities open, we were forced to walk into town.

While passing a fraternity, two young men who were sitting outside, tried to stop us and ask us to a party. We ignored them and kept on walking. Apparently we had acted quite improperly by refusing such a kind offer, for one of them most gallantly threw his drink at us, getting beer all over my suede jacket. This I believe was quite uncalled for!

Because these fine noble lads had difficulty obtaining dates for themselves, that is no reason why they should take their frustrations out on two girls innocently passing by. Maybe, if they acted a little more maturely and not quite so thoughtlessly in the future, they would be able to obtain dates. That is not my concern, however. I would merely like to thank the brothers of that upstanding institution for the dry cleaning bill I now have to pay.

Sen. Yarborough Denounces Gov. Connally

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Ralph Yarborough, D-Tex., just back from inspecting flood-devastated areas of Texas denounced Texas Gov. John Connally Wednesday for not speedily asking President Johnson to declare their state a disaster area.

With Sen. John Tower, R-Tex., among the few in the chamber at the time, Yarborough told the senate he had heard that Connally only Wednesday had asked the President for the declaration. Such a step by Johnson would make the state eligible for various federal relief programs.

The Queen Mary Faces A New Future

SOUTHAMPTON, England (AP) —Firebeats, helicopters, hovercraft, military bands and thousands of cheering spectators gave the Queen Mary a sentimental last welcome Wednesday night as the majestic old liner ended 31 years of transatlantic voyaging.

The 81,235-ton three-stacker came home in a festoon of streamers, surrounded by ships of many sizes, with its mighty siren blast drowning out the rear of the crowd. She docked dead on time at the end of her final voyage from New York.

After two short cruises, the Grand Old Lady will sail around Cape Horn next month into honorable retirement as a floating hotel and museum at Long Beach, Calif. She had been losing money in recent years, mainly to passenger plane competition.

Capt. John Treasure Jones exclaimed: "What a magnificent welcome by the people of Southampton. New York gave us a tremendous sendoff, but this was the best. The whole of Southampton must have been there."

Valenti Speaks

Fernando Valenti, distinguished harpsichordist, lectured Tuesday evening in the S.U. Colonial Lounge on the complexities of his instrument.

Valenti demonstrated the effects of the sound structure of the harpsichord, citing its differences from the piano and other instruments, and gave a brief description of its history.

Smith College Presents "A Land Called Crete"

From October 6 until November 19 Smith College will present "A Land Called Crete," an exploration of the Bronze Age civilization so rich in history and literary associations, and second to none in the fascination of its archaeological remains. There will be an operatic concert on Friday, October 6; a symposium on October 6 and 7; and two art exhibitions continuing through November 19, all of which the public is invited to attend without charge.

The occasion will honor the memory of Harriet Boyd Hawes, a member of the class of 1892 at Smith, from 1900 to 1906 professor of Greek at the college, and, more than half a century ago, one of the pioneer archaeologists to discover important Cretan sites.

The symposium, which will be held in Wright Hall, will consider in the light of new discoveries the changing evaluation of the relationship between Crete and sites on the mainland like Mycenae since Mrs. Hawes' work at the beginning of the century. Authorities who have been invited to speak on various aspects of the problem are: J. Walter Graham, University of Toronto; T. Leslie Shear, Jr., Princeton University; Emily Townsend Vermeule, Wellesley College; and Sterling Dow of Harvard.

Professors Graham, Shear and Vermeule will be heard on Friday, October 6, at 2:30 p.m. Professor Graham's topic will be "The Cretan Palace: 67 Years of Exploration." Professor Shear will speak on "Minoan Influence on the Mainland: Variations of Opinion Since 1900." Professor Vermeule, a research fellow at the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, will speak about "The Decline and Fall of the Minoan-Mycenaean Culture." At 11 a.m. on Saturday, October 7, Sterling Dow will discuss "Literacy: the Palace Bureaucracies; the Dark Age; Homer."

A concert presentation of Mozart's rarely performed opera "Idomeneo, Re di Creta" is scheduled for Friday evening, October 6, at 8:30 in Sage Hall. The title role will be sung by William LaFond of Springfield who will be joined by soprano soloists Adrienne Auerswald and Lynn Meyers of the Smith faculty, and also Carolyn Lewis of New York City. Chorus preparation, narration and musical direction are by Iva Dee Hiatt, Vernon Gotwals and Edwin London, respectively, all of the Smith faculty.

One of the two exhibitions to be held in the Smith College Museum of Art centers about the work of another Smith alumna, Alison Frantz of the class of 1924. Miss Frantz, herself an archaeologist and scholar, is noted for her photographs of Greek landscapes and works of art.

The second exhibition in the museum will supplement these photographs by presenting a selection of actual Minoan and Mycenaean works of art borrowed from public and private collections here and abroad.

The Smith College Museum of Art is open Monday through Saturday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., and on Sundays from 2:30 to 4:30 p.m. On October 6 and 7, the museum will remain open until 10 p.m.

Big Plans — Big Year Scheduled by Scrolls

Scrolls, a sophomore women's honor society, will give time, toil and energy in planning its activities for this school year.

Scrolls service to the school wil be seen in by the campus community in two areas; one in which the woman will be helping the freshmen become adapted to university life while in the other they will be ushering at university functions.

These sophomore women hope to make this football weekend an extra special one for the freshmen. They will place a Dartmouth dummy on the program rally bonfire Friday night. On Saturday, the Scrolls will sit with the freshmen in reserved Sections 19 and 20, where with UMass' first touchdown the '71 beanies will fly.

After this weekend, the Scrolls will set their sights on such events as dorm breakfasts and ice cream socials. On a more sober note, they will be ushering at the Distingulshed Visitors Program lectures. Money-raising schemes will be planned by the Scrolls to help sponsor scholarships for deserving fellow students.

Cadet Christian B. Snook, a sophomore from 1st Platoon, D Company, has been chosen as the outstanding cadet of the week in the Army ROTC Brigade. Cadet Snook finished first in a competition involving more than one hundred other sophomore cadets. Cadet Snook's selection was based on his military appearance and on his knowledge and understanding of drill.

Rioters Plot To Poison Police

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Dist. Atty. Arlen Specter revealed Wednesday a plot originally conceived "to poison hundreds of policemen" if a riot was started in Philadelphia this past summer.

Specter said the conspiracy, under investigation for some time, was hatched by the Revolutionary Action Movement RAM, which he described as a Negro extremist group.

Specter, promising prompt arrests possibly within hours, said an informant advised RAM sought persons to place potassium cyinide or other poisons in coffee and sandwiches served police officers on riot duty.

It was alleged the informant surrendered to FBI agents a quantity of poison, enough to have killed 1,500 persons.

During the summer, police here and in New York City arrested a number of RAM members on conspiracy and inciting to riot charges.

Railroads Ease Steel Strike Tension

PITTSBURG, Pa. (AP)—A scheduled meeting to talk over the five-week, eight-state strike by some 10,000 independent steel truckers failed to stem a fresh rash of shootings and threats from Indianapolis to Pittsburgh Wednesday.

Meanwhile, mills depended on the railroads to struggle back toward normal production.

Police said three steel haulers reported being shot at on Interstate 74 near Indianapolis, and one received a flat tire. Truckers reported a bullet tore a tire to shreds near Battle Creek, Mich.

Police in western Pennsylvania counted 10 reports of windshields smashed by rocks during the night.

The incidents came on the heels of the announcement of a scheduled meeting between Teamsters Union officials and the striking drivers. The meeting — to be held Thursday in Pittsburgh—was the product of a conference Tuesday between the truckers and Pennsylvania Gov. Raymond P. Shafer's top aides.

The truckers, who own their own rigs, want their share of shipping costs hiked by six per cent to 79 per cent. They want payment while waiting at the mills to be loaded and a separate contract with the trucking companies.

The independents are now covered under a section of the Teamsters national contract.

The steel industry, which normally moves from 50 to 60 percent of its products by truck, reported steel was still choking warehouses in Pennsylvania, Michigan, Ohio, New York, Indiana, West Virginia, Illinois and Kentucky.

But diversion of shipments to rail eased the situation. One major producer who had cut back earlier said it was returning to near normal production.

Redmen and Indians Make TV Debut at Alumni Stadium

There's more to football than three yards and a cloud of dust.

For the University of Massachusetts-Dartmouth game on September 30, New England Telephone linemen have provided extensive communications facilities for ABC-TV regional coverage.

Alumni Stadium—with one of the best communications arrangements in New England — already houses 12 lines to the field house near the south end zone; televisions in both ticket booths; eight press lines; a teletypewriter connecting to both wire services and four coin telephones for the public.

In addition, telephone linemen will install two private telephones for the University of Massachusetts coaches and spotters and one for the Dartmouth team. They will also install 22 circuits for ABC.

Coaches for the Indians and the Redmen will maintain contact with their spotters through telephone extensions. Each phone will have a 30-yard long extension cord enabling the coach to move along the sidelines following the game's action.

New England Telephone has installed 10 circuits for ABC technicians on the field who will control four cameras. One camera is located on a platform 40 feet above the north end zone, one moves along the field in an electric cart and two are stationed within the press box.

The six network technicians on the field receive directions from the ABC remote control van by a large cable which crosses under the field at the 50-yard line. This cable is protected from the players' cleats by a two-inch thick conduit.

In the van, ABC personnel have 10 direct lines to field technicians, cameramen and network headquarters in New York through microwave relays located atop Mt. Tom.

Arranging for the game's communications were: PBX installer Walter E. Terrell of R.F.D. Conway, Ashfield; foreman Chester W. Faszcza of Bridge St., Hatfield; and plant manager Lloyd P. Padgett of 56 Baldwin Drive, Hampden.

Telephone men and ABC crews tested the cmoplex communications network in about 12 dry-runs. Two months of preparations help guarantee that when a quarterback fades back, the viewer's television picture won't fade out.

Vets Get More Money For Monthly Allotments

As a result of a new bill passed this month by the Federal Government, military veterans presently entitled to financial benefits for education will be receiving larger monthly allotments.

George Emery, veterans coordinator at the University of Massachusetts, told the Collegian that the increased allotments for full-time students as of Oct. 1 will be as follows: a single veteran with no dependents, $130 a month; veteran with one dependent, $150, and a veteran with two dependents, $175. Veterans with more than two dependents will receive $10 for each additional dependent. The changes reflect approximately a 20 percent increase.

Emery stated that he advises students not to expect increased federal checks before November. However, he said, "hopefully" veterans might receive their allotments in October.

Emery pointed out that the increases in allotments are independent of any state benefit program. Massachusetts, for example, has a program under which Vietnam service veterans may request a waiver of tuition if they are enrolled in a Massachusetts state institution.

Dr. Bert Gerard Examines The New Style of Rebellion

by Rose Miller

THE NEW STYLE OF REBELLION

Dr. Bert S. Gerard presented a fast moving hour lecture to an almost capacity audience in the Plymouth Room Tuesday night. The lecture was on "The New Style of Rebellion."

Gerard's examination began, in his words, "with the gap between the culture and society of today." Man feels the need for involvement through rebellion.

Dr. Gerard also placed the blame of rebellion on the communication media, namely television. Television beams the picture of an affluent middle class white America, where "have-nots" do not exist. He submitted that there is a correlation between the envious "have-nots" watching their television tube, and the riots in Newark and Harlem.

Another aspect of the rebellion mentioned was the rise of the flower people. The flower child should be listened to, but it should be remembered that he is a contradiction in himself. He preaches love and understanding, but he refuses to accept the worth of the previous generation. A lack of parental care may have alienated the two generations.

Parental concern would also relieve the pressures and fears of failure in college. The college hippie evolves from an individual who feared to fail, thus displeasing his family. The courage to try new ideas and avoid escapism is needed.

In essence, Dr. Gerard believes the new style of rebellion is practically all style but not much on content. Only through study, worship, and good deeds can one act for the betterment of his society.

A half hour discussion of the lecture followed when two points were elucidated by Dr. Gerard. Rabbi Martin Kowal, Director of Hillel, brought the evening to a close by stressing need for involvement in religion. In his words, "only through putting something in, can one receive anything in return."

The Balsam Kroll Heifetz Trio composed of an outstanding pianist, violinist and cellist will perform in concert this Sunday evening at the Student Union Ballroom at 8 p.m.

University Concert Association Presents Balsam Kroll Heifetz Trio

The Balsam Kroll Heifetz Trio will present a concert Sunday at 8 p.m. in the S.U. Ballroom. The group is being presented under the auspices of the University Concert Association.

Formerly known as the Albeneri Trio, the group consists of Arthur Balsam, piano; William Kroll, violin; and Benar Heifetz, cello.

The ensemble has a large repertoire which runs from Haydn, Mozart and Beethoven via Mendelssohn, Dvorak and Brahms to Balsam, was born in New York Ravel, Martinu and Walter Piston. The latter composed a trio expressly for them.

The outstanding achievement of the Balsam-Kroll-Heifetz Trio, whose members have been leaders in the field of chamber music for four decades, is their unique balance of instruments: three voices blended into but one, yet each bearing an unmistakable stamp of its own.

Pianist Artur Balsam has had a most distinguished career as a soloist, chamber musician and educator. Born in Poland, he completed his studies at the Academy of Music in Berlin where he was awarded the Mendelssohn Prize in 1930. He is on the music faculty of Boston University and the Kneisel School in Maine.

Violinist William Kroll, a longtime musical associate of Mr. Balsalm, was born in New York City and at the age of ten became a student of Henri Marteau at the Conservatory of Music in Berlin.

Later on, he graduated with highest honors from the Juilliard School of Music in New York, winning the Loeb Prize and Medal.

In 1942, the Library of Congress in Washington D. C. awarded him the Coolidge Medal for his services to chamber music.

Kroll's teaching activities include the Mannes College of Music in New York, the Cleveland Institute of Music and the Chamber Music Dept. at the Berkshire Music Festival.

Cellist Benar Heifetz was born in Russia and trained at the Conservatory of Music in St. Petersburg (Leningrad), where he made his professional debut at the early age of 12. After the Revolution, he left his native country for Germany to continue his studies in Leipzig.

He first joined the Philadelphia Orchestra under Leopold Stokowski and then, upon the invitation of Arturo Toscanini, the NBC Orchestra.

When the Maestro retired, Benar Heifetz followed suit, devoting his time from then on to teaching and chamber music.

The program provides hundreds of short films (from 10 to 30 min.) on a wide variety of topics.

The program is a presentation of MODERN TALKING PICTURE SERVICE INC., the worlds largest distributor of free entertainment films.

The films used in the program are drawn from MODERN'S vast film libraries maintained in its 33 offices, located in the U.S. and Canada. The subjects include art, travel, sports, humor, science, health, newsreels, product information, social problems, history, technology, and medicine.

RSO Office Initiates Survey

The RSO Office is initiating a Student Activities Placement Service. The purpose of this service is twofold: to inform students of the activities and requirements of the various RSO groups and to inform RSO groups of the interests and abilities of students to aid in their membership selection.

Questionnaires have been sent out to obtain information about operating procedures and activities of various campus organizations. The questionnaires will then be made available to the organizations for use in selecting members through interest files on individual students.

Crabtree Sponsors "Folk Festival"

By Doreen LePoer

Eight O'Clock, Sunday night in the lounge of Crabtree, over sixty people crowded in to listen to a Folk Festival sponsored by members of the dorm, headed by Jean Patriquin. With the incentive of the new house parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. Davis, the dorm hopes to hold a similar event each month.

The evening began with a group called the "Dubies", named after their instructor, Dr. duBous. Their style was similar to that of the Swingle Singers. Al Tompkins, of the "Dubies", sang various hits including his favorite, "The First Time Ever".

Solos included Fran Botelho singing "Mariah" and Karen Connolly informing the crowd on "One Hundred Ways to Lose a Man." Other attractions were a dorm group singing "Gloria" and a Jug Band in which Mr. Davis played the Wash Tub.

The evening ended with a request for an encore for Barry Wendall and the "Dubies" singing "The Lion Sleeps Tonight".

In the future the dorm hopes to hold a Halloween Party to which the faculty children will be invited.

Indians Hard-Pressed to Extend UM Skein

Offensive and Defensive Backs Lack Experience

When the Indians of Dartmouth College take the field at Alumni Stadium Saturday, they will have quite a legacy behind them. And the Redmen will be well aware of this in addition to some 18,000 spectators and a regional TV audience.

The fact of the matter is that UMass has never beaten Dartmouth. In 18 meetings with the Redmen, the Big Green has won 17 and tied one. The tie, coming in the first game of the series in 1902, was 0-0.

Actually, the series was discontinued after 1919 when the Aggies saw little future in it. However, UMass revived it in 1962 when the Indians, who were to go unbeaten, downed the Redmen, 27-3. And last year, the Big Green won, 17-7.

This year could be a different story. Dartmouth is not as strong as its powerhouses of past years, and Coach Bob Blackman realizes that UMass will have a lot of incentive going in this one. Dartmouth, which has won or shared the Ivy League title four out of the last five seasons, again has a shot at the crown although some pessimists regard this as a rebuilding year.

NORM DAVIS
Dartmouth linebacker

The backfield was hardest hit by graduation. Three-quarters of it, including All-Ivies Mickey Beard (QB) and Pete Walton (FB) are gone. Also departed are All-Ivy center Chuck Matuszak and All-Ivy placekicker Bill Hay. Add this to five lettermen lost in pre-season to injuries and withdrawals, and it is easy to see why Dartmouth could have trouble this year.

The backbone of the offense will be Gene Ryzewicz. One of the most explosive runners in the East, Ryzewicz has been moved to quarterback because of the Indians' lack of backfield depth. Blackman, however, would rather play him at halfback. If Blackman can find a capable quarterback, Ryzewciz will move back to his old running spot. But for now, he'll direct the offense.

A 5'9, 175-pound senior from Springfield, Ryzewicz has a little quarterbacking experience. With him at the helm, look for the Big Green to switch to a rollout offense.

Sophomore Bill Koenig, once he learns the intricacies of college football, should take over at quarterback in a few weeks. But, according to Blackman, he's not ready yet.

New faces will comprise the rest of the backfield. At one halfback slot will be 5'8, 160-pounder Bill Donovan, who played on the JV team last year and was moved into the starting varsity position when letterman Bob Lundquist was hurt in pre-season practice.

At left half, Dartmouth will use Captain Steve Luxford, a 5'11, 200-pound senior who played rover (or chief) on defense in his sophomore and junior years.

Fullback is not yet settled. Dave Boyle, a 5'11, 180-pound junior who saw limited action last year, appears to have an edge over Vic Chaltain. Watlon's back-up last year.

SKIP SMALL
Dartmouth guard

Blackman has three returning starters in the offensive line. Skip Small, a 6'1, 205-pounder, is quick and his speed will be important to Dartmouth's rollout attack. The other guard, Jerry Kirkpatrick, weighs 185 pounds and could be the lightest major college starting guard in the nation. His blocking ability, however, makes up for his lack of poundage.

The other returning lineman is also small. Hank Paulson is a 6'1, 196-pound senior tackle. But he too is an aggressive blocker and can handle larger men.

Dave Skinner, 190 pounds, will fill Matuszak's shoes at center, while another non-letterman, Dick Olmsted, will take over the left tackle slot. He weighs 203 pounds. The ends will be Randy Wallick, a 6'3 junior who will do the bulk of the receiving, and sophomore Jack Wimsatt, last year's leading frosh receiver.

Backfield is also experiencing backfield problems on defense. Like the offensive backfield, Dartmouth has lost three-quarters of its defensive backs. The lone returnee is Gordie Rule, a 6'2, 179-pound cornerback. Gone are rover Luxford, who has moved to offense, and All-American Wynn Mabry by graduation and Sam Hawken by an injury.

The other cornerback will be junior John March, a non-letterman. At safety will be Rick Wallick, Randy's twin brother, of whom great things are expected in his career at Dartmouth. Junior Sam Faber will take over Luxford's rover spot.

Blackman feels that his defensive line is stronger than last year's. The two end spots are Indian strong points, just as they are for UMass. Randy McElrath, 6'1, 195-pound senior, has recovered from an early injury last season and his speed will be a great asset.

The other defensive end, Pete Lawrence, played the whole 1966 season for the Big Green. The 6'3, 205 junior is a strong, hard hitter and must be rated an All-Ivy candidate.

The defensive line is also stacked well at tackles. 210-pound junior Jeff Norton is another All-Ivy candidate, while Giff Foley, a 201-pound junior, should develop into an outstanding tackle. Rounding out the defensive line, is middle guard Mike Machan, a 228-pound senior who has a history of injury problems. But Dartmouth will be hard to run against, no matteh who they play.

Two-year letterman Norm Davis will be a standout at linebacker. A 6'3, 2-11 pound senior, he'll anchor the Big Green defense. The other linebacker slot is up in the air.

The flashy Dartmouth offense of the past few years is gone. The Indians will have to depend on defense, and it is imperative that the secondary comes through. But Blackman has been known to work wonders. And, of course, there's always Ryzewicz.

Gambar Moved Back to Old MG Position

By Pete Carroll
Staff Reporter

Bruce Gombar is playing a different position this year with the Redmen, but it's hardly a strange one to the 6', 200-pound senior from West Springfield.

When last year's injury-riddled squad lost center Dan Harrigan for the season with a bad back, Head Coach Vic Fusia called upon Gombar, the regular middle guard on defense, to take the center position.

Gombar snapped the ball all season for the Yankee Conference Champions, but with a number of capable centers this season, Fusia moved him back to the "nutcracker" spot.

At West Springfield High School, he was named "Western Mass. Lineman of the Year" in 1962 and he and his mates captured the Class AA championship. He was also a member of the track and skiing teams at West Side.

BRUCE GOMBAR
Nutcracker Sweet.

He spent his freshman year of college at Alfred University in New York before transferring to UMass, where he is majoring in physical education.

In his first year of football here, Gombar was "one of the finest middle guards in the Yankee Conference," according to Fusia.

"He's a knowledgeable ball player with quick reactions, and he's a fine athlete to coach," Fusia said recently.

The coach added that Gombar played a fine game last Saturday at Orono, assisting in many tackles and making a few single-handed.

After graduation, Gombar plans to enter the service with Officer Candidate School before attending grad school. He then hopes to teach physical education and coach football on the college level.

Gene Ryzewicz -- 'The Biggest Green'

Gene Ryzewicz, the most exciting running back in modern Dartmouth history, will be a quarterback when he and his fellow Indians face UMass on Saturday.

As a running back, Ryzewicz has been a national statistical leader in the past two years. During that time, he has run off yardage at a clip of 7.5 yards per carry.

In 1965, he was the national leader in kickoff returns with a 34.8 average. Last season, opposing kickers tried their best to keep their kicks away from Ryzewicz.

MOVED TO QUARTERBACK—Gene Ryzewicz, for two years an explosive halfback for Dartmouth, will start at quarterback Saturday.

Gene's ability to advance the ball when it is tucked under his arm is unquestionable. However, what ability he possesses in throwing the ball will be put to its first test at Alumni Stadium on Saturday.

Long kickoff and punt returns and outstanding runs from scrimmage are Ryzewicz's specialties. His longest romp from scrimmage was a 64-yard touchdown against UMass a year ago when the Big Green downed the Redmen, 17-7.

The "Biggest Green" has accounted for 72 points in his two varsity seasons. Those points came on five TD's as a soph and seven as a junior.

The 5'9, 175-pound native of Springfield does most of his damage against Ivy League opponents. Beset with injuries last fall, he played in every game except the Indians' finale against Penn.

As a quarterback, Ryzewicz will be able to demonstrate the versatility for which he is noted. The mild-mannered senior is constantly being compared to all-time great Dartmouth gridders.

An all-around athlete, Gene is as adept at baseball as he is in football. He was a third-team All-American at second base last spring. However, football is his main concern at present, and the All-East, All-Ivy, All-New England footballer will be the main concern of the Redmen defense Saturday.

Class Day 1967

Tonight and all day tomorrow, UMass will experience its first annual Class Day.

Class Day is a united effort of the classes of '68, '69, '70, Scrolls, Revelers, Keys and Cheerleaders, to promote a spirit in University students which will make them proud of their athletic teams and actively support them.

The Class Day Committee believes the events planned will create a spirit in the student body that has never existed before. Instead of a quiet, apathetic crowd of fans at the Dartmouth game tomorrow, the Committee expects a cheering crowd that will rival even those at U.C.L.A.

The weekend will begin with a rally tonight on the lawn of the South Terrace of the Student Union. There will be a parade led by the Revelers and assisted by the Southwest Patriots, to lead the Student Body to the Rally. It is hoped that the Rally will show the team that the student body is behind them 100%.

The Class Day giveaway will be at the end of the Rally. All University Students present will be eligible for the 13 prizes, including a portable television set, AM/FM short wave radio, several $10 dinners at the Lord Jeff, and $10 cash prizes.

Tomorrow the big event will be Dartmouth - UMass football game, which will be regionally televised on ABC. To encourage active and vociferous support for the team at this game, the Committee is planning fireworks, large signs, and special freshman "Card sections." The three classes will also be giving away '68 and '69 buttons, and '70 pennants. Noisemakers and horns will also be supplied free to many of the fans at the game in order to rally as much noise as possible.

Immediately after the game the annual Soph-Frosh Picnic will be held on the Union terrace lawn. It will feature the Pozo-Seco Singers and the crowning of the University's first "Miss Freshman." Hot dogs and cola will also be provided at the event, which is open to the entire University community. Class Day will be concluded by a Soul Concert

Judy Wolski, "Miss Hawaii 1966" will attend the UMass-Dartmouth football game tomorrow as a guest of the Daily Collegian. (see page 5)

Hopelessly Frustrated . . .

Dear Dr. Brothers:

I have a serious problem. It seems that ever since I can remember, my children have enthusiastically worn their beanies to the first home football game.

Now, this year, they are very apathetic and almost scornful about the matter. They just don't have the ole spunk we used to have. Just what is this modern generation coming to?????

Hopelessly frustrated,
MOTHER TIME

Dear Mother:

It's a shame your children have lost the true meaning of school spirit and tradition. I can look back to a time when your University was a small school and the beanie tradition was born.

Each year all the Freshmen would wear their beanies with pride to the first game. At the first touchdown, midst the thunder of yells and screams, the sky would rain with a beanie downpour.

Perhaps your children lack the motivation and interest in this sort of tradition. Or, maybe, they are suppressing their true desires.

Nevertheless, whatever the case may be, these individuals should be urged to unleash their inhibitions. Screaming for the team is one means of releasing built up frustrations and throwing beanies is a definite sign of suppressed aggression.

We must rid these students of schizophrenic tendencies. Make your game Saturday a new step in psychological rehabilitation. Support your school tradition!!! Wear a beanie for "brothers"!!!!!

Beanie Bylaws . . .

1. Class Day at UMass will henceforth and forever occur on the day of the first football game of each season.
2. At that time all FRESHMEN are required to adorn themselves with proper HEAD COVERINGS as will be issued to them by the illustrious SCROLL and KEY societies.
3. No member of the CLASS OF 71 may expose his head until permission is granted by Chief Metawampe; such approval will be manifested in the form of a TOUCHDOWN or a similar type of SCORE by Metawampe's REDMEN.
4. Failure to comply will result in CAPital PUNishment.

ABC Strikers Picket Stadium; But Game Will Be Seen on TV

by GLENN BRIERE, Staff Reporter

The American Broadcasting Company's television coverage of tomorrow's UMass-Dartmouth football game at Alumni Stadium will proceed as planned, despite the nationwide strike against the network by the National Association of Broadcast Employees and Technicians (NABET).

NABET strikers set up picket lines at the stadium yesterday as ABC moved its equipment in. Network supervisory personnel are handling all of the technical and production aspects of the telecast.

The strike began last Saturday after the union "overwhelmingly" voted down a proposed contract by ABC. No negotiations are in progress and neither side shows signs of yielding.

Max Crouch, a spokesman for the picketing NABET members at Alumni Stadium, said yesterday that they will stay there around the clock until the network packs up and heads back to New York City on Sunday.

"The last I heard," Crouch said, "we're going to try to get together later this week." But as of now, it looks like a long strike.

He also pointed out that the American Federation on Television and Radio Artists (AFTRA) is respecting the picket lines. "We respected their lines last April," Crouch said, referring to the AFTRA strike against the networks.

This would mean that Keith Jackson and Jackie Jensen, the scheduled announcers for the game, would not cross the lines. However, ABC Producer Richard Kirchner told the Daily Collegian Wednesday that Jensen has agreed to do the telecast, and if Jackson chooses to honor NABET's picket lines, "Wide World of Sports" commentator Jim McKay will do the play-by-play.

Chris Schenkel and Bud Wilkinson refused to do the telecast of last Saturday's Penn State-Navy game at Annapolis. There was also talk of somebody "sabotaging" the lines at that game, but neither ABC nor NABET professed any certain knowledge of what happened.

When asked if there was any possibility of such sabotage at Alumni Stadium this weekend, Crouch emphasized that such actions would not be condoned by NABET. "We're not here for any of that," he said.

He also pointed out that the first thing the strikers did when they arrived in Amherst was to contact the police. A tight security guard has been set up around the stadium, although the picket lines have been and will continue to be orderly.

In the meantime, ABC supervisory personnel will handle the telecast, and network management officials expect no trouble at all in televising the game.

Unit Manager Joe Gianquinto, who is in charge of setting up the equipment, said everything is going as expected. "We are trying to do as much as planned

Senate Holds Special Election For Treasurer

The Student Senate elected a treasurer for the coming year at its Wednesday meeting.

Under the heading of special business, Paul Silverman was elected treasurer.

Mr. Silverman promised to straighten out the fiscal policies of the Senate and to get the burden of preparing a proper budget off the Senate floor and into the committee responsible for the bill.

He also stressed that he would enforce existing regulations instead of changing them by using the already existing Budget and Finance Committee.

Also in special business, the cheerleaders were granted eighty-three dollars for the purchasing of cards for a freshman card section at the football games.

In its regular agenda, the Senate tabled most of its work until the new Senate comes in next week.

It did, however, pass a resolution calling for a report by next week on the situation concerning complimentary tickets.

New Extremist Group Charged In Philadelphia Conspiracy

PHILADELPHIA (AP)—A fugitive from a Georgia prison gang has told police of an alleged plot to assassinate Philadelphia's mayor, district attorney, police commissioner, President Johnson and FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover.

Dist. Atty. Arlen Specter said the informant, Robert Earl Bailey, 23, of Anniston, Ala., also said City Hall, the Federal Courthouse and Police Administration Building were to be blown up in a plot allegedly hatched by the Revolutionary Action Movement RAM.

Just Wednesday, RAM was charged with planning to start a riot in Philadelphia, then poison thousands of policemen and top city officials. RAM is a Negro extremist group.

Bailey, awaiting extradition proceedings for his return to clean-up Georgia, told police in a long statement Mayor James H. J. Tate, Specter and Police Commissioner Frank Rizzo were to be assassinated, along with the President and Hoover.

Bailey told police he was approached several months ago by a member of RAM, while he was in a Philadelphia prison.

Mayor Tate, he said, was to be killed by a dynamite charge in his car. He said he did not know what the murder plans were for Specter.

According to his statement, Bailey said RAM members had promised to have him freed so he could kill Rizzo. RAM also had plans for inciting riots and "explosions and assassinations" in Richmond, New York, Washington, and Baltimore, he said.

Disclosure of Bailey's statement came in the wake of the arrest of three of four men accused in the alleged plot to poison "hundreds of policemen" during a planned race riot in Philadelphia.

Austrian Professor to Speak On 'Decline and Fall of Man'

Professor Erik Ritter von Kuehnelt-Leddihn, student of theology, specialist in human geography, a linguist who is conversant in six languages and reader of fifteen languages, will speak at the Southwest Dining Commons #7 on Sunday, October 1.

The Austrian professor is also a world traveller, having published works in thirteen different countries. Among his books known to the American public, are Gates of Hell, Moscow 1979, and Black Banners.

Dr. Kuehnelt-Leddihn has taught in several colleges and universities in both the old and new worlds. He classifies himself a conservative, and is one of the world's most eminent protagonists of the classic doctrine that democracy is the enemy of human liberty, and that constitutional monarchy is liberty's only guarantee.

He was last heard on the UMass campus three years ago, when he spoke at the Newman Center to a large and enthusiastic audience.

Dr. Kuehnelt-Leddihn's lecture will be entitled "The Decline and Fall of Man." His visit to UMass, is his first stop on an extended tour that will take him to several universities and colleges throughout the U.S. and Canada.

After the lecture, informal discussion will take place, to be followed by coffee. There is no admission charge, and all members of the public are invited. The talk will begin at 8:00 p.m., and, as mentioned previously, will be held in the Southwest Dining Commons #7, on Sunday, October 1.

Angel Flight Plans Rush For All Upperclass Women

Angel Flight starts a new year. Starting the activities will be the annual Upperclass Rush on the 3, 4, and 5 of October. The pledges taken at that time will be initiated on December 5 and thus replace the graduated seniors.

Among the girls' coming projects will be a tour of Westover, participation in military reviews and various other service projects connected with the promotion of the U.S. Air Force, the University AFROTC program, and the Arnold Air Society.

Second semester will feature their now annual "Best Dressed Girl on Campus" in conjunction with Glamour magazine. A dance in late January will add to the year's festivities and let the campus become better acquainted with the Flight. Freshmen women will also have an opportunity to meet us at Spring Semester Rush (dates to be announced later).

American Air Squadrons Strike Into Center of Haiphong Again

SAIGON (AP) — American air squadrons lashed at North Vietnam again Thursday, and a broadcast dispatch from Hanoi said Haiphong, hit repeatedly by Navy fliers recently, was among the targets. It declared two U.S. planes were shot down over that port.

American authorities had no immediate comment.

A Haiphong city committeeman, Pham Gia Tuan, complained in a statement relayed abroad by North Vietnam's official news agency that the raiders in the past have sometimes hit the heavily populated heart of the city.

Tuan declared 600 houses, three schools, three hospitals and "many" economic establishments have been damaged or destroyed. He offered no assessment of the effectiveness of the American campaign, aimed largely against bridges to prevent trains and trucks from moving into the countryside the war supplies that ships bring to the city.

While gun duels, patrol clashes and occasional open battles bleed Communist ranks in the South, U.S. combat losses in Vietnam are expected to top the 100,000 mark this week.

Combat losses dropped appreciably on both sides last week, reflecting a lull in the fighting except for lethal artillery duels engaging U.S. Marines and dug-in Communist gun crews across the border demilitarized zone.

Drawings for positions on the ballots in the Senate Elections will be held tonight at 6:00 P.M. in the Student Senate office. Candidates are invited to attend. Frederic Hartwell, Chm. S. G. A.

originally on our survey," he said, "We foresee no problems."

Gianquinto also said that there will be no cutback in the amount of equipment used. "There will still be four cameras," he said, "and we have no reason to see why there should be less."

The network will also have the same number of personnel on hand as originally expected. "We're not shorthanded," Gianqunito said.

The New England Telephone Company, which sets up all of the lines that ABC will need to feed the telecast to the network, said that its union employees are also honoring NABET's picket lines.

Roland Moriarty, a representative of the company, said that its management personnel will set up the lines.

Kirchner, who will arrive today, said Wednesday in New York that announcers Jackson and Jensen face possible legal action if they refuse to do the telecast. "We have previous specific contracts for this game with them," he said. "They are in jeopardy of legal action if they don't agree to do it."

However, the NABET strikers said that AFTRA will back them fully if they don't do it, even to the extent of paying legal fees.

About six pickets were on hand yesterday morning when the network arrived to start setting up at the stadium. NABET expects more to be on hand today and tomorrow. The strikers have made arrangements to stay in the area while the ABC personnel will be lodged at the Howard Johnson's Motor Lodge in Hadley as planned.

UMass Campus Changes Landscape Both Above and Below Ground

MARGARET EWING
Staff Reporter

That the University of Massachusetts is a constantly changing campus is fairly evident from just a cursory glance. There is almost no place on campus where a person can stand and not be aware of the construction taking place, either by hearing the noise, seeing the dirt, or by actually watching the machines at work.

However, the contour of the campus is changing in another not as apparent way, and yet this change may be of more concern to us in a few years than the changes that are now so obviously taking place.

According to Mr. Thomas E. Rice of the geology department, two buildings on campus, Morrill Science Center and Baker House, are evidence of this second type of change — a change due to the geological formation of the ground on which they are built.

Underneath one corner of Morrill Auditorium and under several layers of earth is a layer of gravel which serves as a natural drain for water. Water has been carried along this layer of gravel to the building, entering cracks in the concrete. The problem was discovered and remedied by use of a drain tile which now carries water around the building and into the pond.

Baker House, however, presents a problem of a different nature which has not yet been solved. This building was constructed on a hill formed originally during the ice age, and because of the gradual expansion of the ground following the melting of the ice, there are now cracks in layers parallel to the sub-soil.

The foundations of Baker House are presently settling in these cracks creating a process called differential sliding, which causes cracks in the plaster and walls of the building.

This process is a common occurrence, which presents more of a nuisance than a major problem. However, had this occurence been foreseen and pillars driven into the earth under the footings of the building when it was built, this process probably would not now be taking place.

These examples can only add up to the fact that perhaps it would do us well in the future to look down as well as up as the campus constantly shifts and changes.

CLASS DAY . . .
featuring Stevie Wonder and Wilson Pickett.

The chairman of the Class Day Committee believes that the events of the two days will promote greater university spirit in the future. "The Committee can provide the occasion and material for creating spirit and vitality in the student body; however, it is up to the University to be the spirit," he concluded.

Chamber Music to be Presented By Trio With Varied Repertoire

A chamber music concert by the Balsam-Kroll-Heifetz Trio, whose members have been leaders in the field for over four decades, will be held Sunday at 8 p.m. in the University of Massachusetts Student Union ballroom.

Each member of the trio, Arthur Balsam, piano; William Kroll, violin; and Benar Heifetz, cello; has been a noted chamber music player for many years. Their unique musical balance, three instruments blended into one, yet each bearing an unmistakable stamp of its own, has been acclaimed by critics throughout the nation.

Pianist Arthur Balsam has had a distinguished career as a soloist, chamber musician and educator. On the music faculty of Boston University and the Kneisel School in Maine, he has edited a number of Mozart piano concertos and has recorded some 200 works.

Violinist William Kroll is a graduate of the Juilliard School of Music in New York. He has been awarded the Coolidge Medal by the Library of Congress for his services to chamber music and has served on the chamber music department of the Berkshire Music Festival. His composition "Banjo and Fiddle," which was recorded by Jascha Heifetz, has become a favorite concert piece.

Cellist Bernar Heifetz was born in Russia and trained at the Conservatory of Music in St. Petersburg. He made his professional debut at the age of 12.

In the United States since 1937, Mr. Heifetz has played with the Philadelphia and NBC Orchestras.

The trio has a large repertoire which ranges from Haydn, Mozart and Beethoven to the contemporaries. Sponsored by the Concert Association, the performance will be open to the public with an admission charge.

Striking Teachers Set to Return to Their Classrooms

NEW YORK (AP)—Striking New York City teachers voted an end Thursday to a massive walkout that deprived 1.1 million children of normal public schooling for 14 class days.

The nation's gravest classroom crisis was dissolved by a vote of better than 5-1.

"Tomorrow will be the opening of the school year, and I am very happy," said President Albert Shanker in announcing the vote of his 49,000-member AFL-CIO United Federation of Teachers.

Operetta Guild Sets Auditions For "Once Upon a Mattress"

The Operetta Guild of the University of Mass. is proud to announce auditions for its fall production of "Once Upon A Mattress" to be presented at Bowker Auditorium on November 3, 4, 10, 11, and 12.

Tryouts will be held on Tuesday, Oct. 3, from 6:30-10:30 p.m. and Wednesday, October 4, from 2-6 p.m. in J.Q. Adams, Tower 4, on the fifth floor lounge. All those interested in any phase of production, off stage as well as on, are encouraged to attend auditions and become acquainted with our new director, Bob Buchanan.

"Once Upon A Mattress", a musical comedy version of "The Princess and the Pea", has already proved itself a hit on television — remember Carol Burnett?—and should be another funfilled success for the Guild. Tryouts are open to all, and we hope to see many freshmen and interested upperclassmen there.

Dorm Socials

A proposal was made last week by the Student Life Committee to amend the University policy concerning open houses. It was recommended that each residence hall government have the authority to determine its own policy concerning the frequency, duration, social conduct and door policy subject to the recommendations of the Student Life Committee.

It was further recommended that each dorm would vote a week in advance of each event, with the issue being decided by a majority vote. The present University policy concerning open houses would remain in effect until each house government determines its own policy.

House councils have the authority at present to decide on other social events. They can generally decide the frequency of events such as dances. Why shouldn't the privilege be extended to all social events?

We urge the Dean of Students to adopt this policy recommendation. We feel that each dorm should hold the power to decide on the frequency and conduct of its social events. We further feel that the adoption of this policy would be another positive step in the direction of increased student responsibility. — THE EDITORS

The Food Feud

The picketing at Southwest Dining Commons #5 has brought to light the controversy concerning the situation of food services which the students receive.

The protestors, organized by Carl Weinstein, objected to long lines, lack of variety and mandatory meal tickets for Greeks, among other things.

Joel Stoneham, associate director of food services, has stated that he doesn't feel there is a lack of variety in the food, or there are long lines. He also said that the dining commons operation is NOT in debt, as rumored. But the food services are operating on a balanced budget.

He stated that the Food Services buy grades of hamburg which contain a higher percentage of meat than other grades. He agrees that at times potatoes are lumpy and gravy cold, but that this is due to the human element and will be corrected.

Many students feel there is a lack of variety in the main dishes, although according to the menus a variety is offered. Complaints of lack of seasoning have also been heard.

Certain issues expressed by protestors and other students stand out.

They disagree with Stonham on the variety of food and on the length of lines, and they are the ones receiving the service.

Whatever happened to the Greek exemption?

These are the questions raised.

Wednesday, a Daily Collegian editor reported that he waited in line 20 minutes at lunch time.

To try to answer the question of variety in food, the paper will publish the menu so that students will have a record of what is planned (and in case of changes, they may keep a record of what was served).

The sign-carrying students have made public the problems of Southwest food service. The problems should not be ignored.

Erroneous Complaint

To the editor:

I should like to comment briefly on a letter referring to the School of Engineering contained in your "Letters to the Editor" section on Fri., Sept. 22nd.

It should be pointed out that most of the material in the letter was either completely erroneous or contained sufficient half-truths that one who is familiar with the facts might wonder whether the letter itself was merely a prank or represented some malicious intent on the part of the writer who seemed sufficiently unsure of himself to ask that his name be withheld.

In closing let me indicate that the School of Engineering strongly endorses the resolution passed by both the Student and Faculty Senates during the last academic year and published in the current Student Handbook which reaffirmed the mechanism which is available to all students to have their complaints heard through appropriate channels. The writer of the letter has not voiced his complaints to either the Department Head involved or to myself and I should like to express willingness on both our parts to discuss this matter factually with the sender of the letter.

Commons Sense

The Press Speaks

This column is written in an attempt to sort out the facts of the Southwest Commons situation so that attention can be given to the real issues remaining.

The time spent waiting in lines as of today remains a problem.

The letter from Barbara L. Fifield of Local # 1776 was concerned with "the deplorable working conditions."

The letter states that "One prime example of administrative disregard . . . is the now established practice of insisting upon additional time off (compensatory time) for employees in lieu of overtime pay."

According to Joel M. Stoneham, the associate director of food services, employees are asked to take compensatory time off in the place of overtime for holidays. The practice is legal. However, employees are not asked to take additional time off in lieu of paid overtime. This practice is illegal.

According to Stoneham, this year the dining commons have 8,800 students to feed or 1,200 more than last year. Of the increase, 800 students are assigned to Southwest commons.

The position of the Food Services is that neither #5 nor #7 handle more students than their capacity.

As for the charges of a help shortage or lay-off, Stoneham said that for the first time the food services have employee organization charts for each commons and that there is no help shortage anywhere.

Southwest commons opened this year with 10-15% more help than last year, he said. No one is forced to work overtime, he continued, due to the 800 additional students being fed—employees, however, are able to get in overtime as they wish.

In answer to the letter today from Clarence Hunter of the Massachusetts State Employees Assn., Stoneham explained that of the 27 people who had worked last year (over the 10-month academic year) and who were not rehired as of the opening of school on Sept. 11, 18 had been rehired as of yesterday. The associate director emphasized that the 27 were not rehired on the 11th of the month only because they were not needed.

"Our service has not been curtailed because of budgetary reasons," he said.

The number two man at Food Services added that he expected all of the remaining 9 who had worked last year (and wanted to be rehired) to be rehired within a reasonable time due to normal turnover. The former employees will be asked to work for the commons again before any new people are sought, he said.

Stoneham countered by saying that employees are not asked to work more than 8 hours a day now regardless of the (lesser) number of hours required of them previously.

He added in an allegorical fashion that if a cook serves 5 people, the same person can serve 15 by throwing more meat and potatoes into the pot.

A wait of over 10 minutes, he said, was too long.

The wait during the first week of school he said, was partly due to the fact that students had not yet-self-regulated themselves in selecting the time to go to the commons. He also said that the administration erred by opening two few breakfast lines—which they have since corrected.

The Employees Speak

To the editor:

Due to the added 3,000 or more students there has been an added burden placed on the Dining Hall Employees, thereby creating poor service to the Student Body and this we are greatly concerned w...

Mrs. Barbara L. Fifield in her Letter of the 26th, hit lightly on the facts, but as usual the AFSCME, Local 1776, were improperly informed as to the facts.

Fifty, Ten-Month Employees were released for the Summer and only twenty-five were recalled, thereby creating a help shortage.

Between 1,500 and 3,000 additional students were added to the rolls, thereby creating a feeding problem. How can you expect to feed additional students with less help? That's one for you Math Students to work on.

We feel quite sure that if you students would direct your complaints in the direction of these gentlemen more would be accomplished than if you directed them at the employees.

In closing this note I would like to suggest that you who are being neglected, have your parents write the Administration and let them know just how you and your fellow students feel about the treatment you are receiving, and I am sure something will be done about it.

Clarence Hunter
Executive Officer, MSEA

The Students Speak

To the editor:

The question concerning meal tickets and facilities in dining commons rose in heated debate at the Sept. 14, Class of '70 Executive Council meeting and many members of this body wish to express themselves through this organ of student government.

From informal discussions I have learned that many sophomores as well as other students have had to wait for over 20 minutes for breakfast in lines that stretch from Dining Commons #7 past Tower 4.

In an attempt to focus attention on important student problems I call on the Dining Commons Administration to alleviate this problem as soon as possible. The Student Senate, through the Food Services Subcommittee will, I am sure, work efficiently and accomplish a favorable outcome to this problem.

As for Greeks in Southwest there is little question that they should be allowed to eat at their respective houses.

Clearly the administration is contradicting itself when it claims to work for the students' benefit and then turns around and encumbers us with seriously hampering dining procedures.

Miss Hawaii '66, Born in S. Hadley, to Cheer for UM

"You have a beautiful campus, much prettier than the University of Hawaii." Her brown eyes sparkled and the twenty year old graduate of that University and native of South Hadley, a town not far from the UMass campus, went on to tell of her travels as the daughter of an Air Force officer.

"I'm looking forward to rooting for UM Saturday."

Judy Wolski left Western Massachusetts at the age of four and after making the "Air Force route" settled in Hawaii with her family five years ago where last year she was crowned "Miss Hawaii" to become that state's contestant in the 1966 Miss USA contest in Miami, Florida.

Miss Wolski is currently visiting relatives in this area and has toured the UMass campus guided by her cousins, Stan Bialy, a grad student here, and Carol Bialy, a senior and sister of Sigma Sigma Sigma.

JUDY WOLSKI, MISS HAWAII 1966

While posing for Daily Collegian photographer Paul Boliver in the stadium Wednesday, Miss Wolski commented that she is "looking forward to cheering for UMass Saturday."

Landry chosen top conference back; Smith, Grasso, cited in weekly picks

UMass quarterback Greg Landry, Rhode Island split end Frank Geiselman and Maine end Gene Benner have been chosen as the top back, lineman and sophomore in the Yankee Conference for their performances last Saturday.

Landry, a 6'3 200-pound senior, directed the Redmen to a 30-9 Conference victory over Maine. In guiding the Redmen to their 10th straight Conference win, Landry completed eight of 14 passes for 119 yards and netted 98 more rushing, including a 10-yard touchdown run, on 17 carries.

Geiselman was a stellar clutch performer in Rhode Island's upset 28-17 win over Delaware. The 6'2, 210-pound senior caught five passes for 109 yards. His biggest catch was for a 43-yard touchdown that put the Rams ahead with two minutes to play. Geiselman also caught a 49-yard bomb that set up an earlier Rams' score.

Benner, a 5'11, 170-pound soph, made a sparkling debut into varsity competition. The Black Bear end caught seven passes for 148 yards, including a nifty 60-yarder, returned a kickoff 49 yards to set up Maine's touchdown and also played in the defensive secondary.

Other nominations were—backs George Platter (Maine), Bob Mitchell (Vermont) and Larry Caswell (Rhode Island); linemen—Keith Keiderling (Vermont) split end; Ernie Smith (Massachusetts) guard-linebacker; and Pete Norris (Maine) defensive end; sophomores—Jerry Grasso (Massachusetts) wingback; and Frank Mazanec (Vermont) safety.

Soph. Flanker Boosts Attack

by STEVE ROSS
Staff Reporter

For many years the Redman attack has lacked a fleet flanker. Sophomore Jerry Grasso may finally fill the bill.

JERRY GRASSO
Flashy Flanker

Running end sweeps and catching passes with unbelievable poise for a rookie, Grasso starred in the Redmen's 30-9 victory at Maine Saturday.

Grasso, a 6' 181-pound speedster from Everett, had the unenviable task of filling the shoes of Bobby Leo in high school. He filled them well, starting at running back for two years.

"We played Ohio State football—power running and little else," he said.

After prepping a year at Phillips-Exeter, Grasso chose UMass. He was also sought by the Big Ten, Southeast Conference and several major independents.

Grasso was the outstanding player on last year's freshman eleven. He spent the majority of the season at running back, and it wasn't until this spring that he was moved to the wing. The move has thus far been successful.

"I like playing running back, but I also like playing flanker," he remarked. "As a matter of fact, I just like playing football."

In his first game, he accounted for 114 yards (76 with four receptions and 38 with seven carries).

UMass Harriers to Open Defense of League Title

by VIOLA OSGOOD
Staff Reporter

The fighting Redmen cross country team is looking forward to its first meet Oct. 7 against Maine and Northeastern at Franklin Park in Boston.

The Redmen had a successful 1966 season winning the Yankee Conference championship, tying for third in the New England meet and finishing the season with a 6-4 record. Coach Ken O'Brien says that if the team comes along this year as well as it did last year, UMass expects good things from returning stars and co-captains Greg Bowman and Mark Gelinas.

Along with them will be juniors Paul Hoss and Charlie Lang. These four stars were all in the top 10 of the conference meet last year.

O'Brien feels that there are several questions. The answers will determine the success of the team this year. The questions:

- Can sophomores Dave Evans and Ed Currier and junior Ron Ryan perpetuate the winning tradition of the Redmen. They have won the last five Yankee Conference championships, in track and cross country?
- Can Gelinas recuperate from an early season injury?
- Can the upperclassmen pull the newcomers along as they have in the past?

O'Brien believes that the strength of the team may lie in Hoss and Lang, who, he says, could be two of the better runners in the Conference. Though each team has at least five lettermen returning as well as a strong group of sophomores, O'Brien says that the actual battle will be between the best balanced teams.

The Redmen have to face such strong independent teams as Holy Cross, Providence, Springfield and Central Connecticut. "Never," says O'Brien, "have so many teams been so strong."

Despite Difference in Recruiting

Conference and Ivy League Even, Graham says

by TOM CONUEL
Staff Reporter

Bob Graham, defensive line coach of the UMass football team, faces a tough assignment this Saturday as his charges will be out to stop Gene Ryzewicz the sensational Dartmouth back.

Coach Graham, however, knows the Ivy League almost as well as he knows the Yankee Conference. He came to UMass via the University of Pennsylvania and so has a good knowledge of both conferences.

Born in Lewiston, Pennsylvania, Coach Graham graduated from the University of Pennsylvania where he starred in both baseball and football. In 1949 he was the recipient of the Edgar Church Cup presented to the member of the Penn football team who had contributed most to the squad.

In 1950 he captained the Penn baseball squad and later played a year of minor league baseball.

After coaching high school football in Washington, D.C. for several years, Coach Graham joined the University of Pennsylvania football staff in 1958. He served as a defensive coach at Penn until coming to UMass.

Coach Graham feels that there isn't a tremendous difference in the level of play in the two leagues.

"Take the top two or three teams in our league and the top two or three teams in their league and they will play on an even level", Coach Graham said.

BOB GRAHAM
"We're just as tough."

"Where the Ivy League has an advantage over the Yankee Conference", Coach Graham says, "is in their recruitments for athletic scholarships". Ivy League schools give out substantially more athletic scholarships than do Yankee Conference schools, he said.

This, plus the prestige of the Ivy League schools, allows them to get occasional super stars such as a Bobby Leo or a Gene Ryzewicz. But, Coach Graham emphasized, "our players are every bit as tough as their players, and our league just as good.

"UMass", Coach Graham concluded, "is on an even par as far as football goes with any Ivy League school."

Tight End Carty, a Traveling Man

From Malden High School, to Furman University, to the Converse Rubber Company, to the University of Massachusetts: this has been the route Bill Carty has taken to his present starting position at tight end on the Redmen.

After starring for three years in football and basketball at Malden High, the 6'4", 230-pounder entered Furman, a small liberal arts college located in Greenville, S.C. He enjoyed a fine sophomore season there against some tough Southeastern Conference competition, notably East Carolina, The Citadel, and William and Mary.

Bill's biggest game was the homecoming tilt with Presbyterian when he caught a pair of touchdown passes. He also had a big afternoon against the Atlantic Coast Conference power Clemson.

But by this time Carty was married and a father, and neither he nor his wife Barbara, a resident of Malden, were happy being 1000 miles apart. So after the fall semester of his sophomore year, he left Furman and went to work in Malden at the Converse Rubber factory making basketball sneakers, hoping to transfer to UMass.

Bill entered the University in the fall of 1965, but he had to sit out a year of eligibility, according to NCAA rules concerning transfer students. In the meantime he became a father for a second time, as a daughter, Kelly, joined Billy, Jr.

The year's layoff from football did not help Carty at all during his first year of competition at UMass last fall. When versatile Bob Ellis was switched from tight end to defensive back, Carty was given a starting position. He has maintained it ever since.

Still, the big end was less than satisfied with his 1966 performance. From the final moment of that season, Bill was pointing to this season as his biggest.

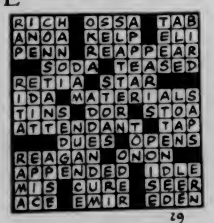
Carty started by reporting to summer practice at a svelte 230 pounds, 10 less than he played at last year. He enjoyed a fine preseason and had a good afternoon against Harvard in scrimmage, scoring his first touchdown in almost two years. Saturday at Maine he caught a couple of first down passes from Greg Landry and made several key blocks.

Although he is majoring in physical education and preparing for a career in teaching, Bill hopes to postpone that career for a few years while he plays pro ball. He has been contacted by nearly all the pro clubs and is hoping for a shot at the big time. He wants a chance to do as well as the last tight end to wear number 82 for UMass, Milt Morin of the Cleveland Browns.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT—UMass tight end Bill Carty and Billy, Jr., 3, discuss the Redmen's stategy for the Dartmouth game over a box of animal crackers. Carty (inset) looks tougher in uniform.

Redmen Foes Face Tough Sledding This Weekend

Connecticut and Vermont will each be trying to tie UMass for first place in the Yankee Conference when the two teams square off against each other tomorrow.



In other games involving UMass football opponents, Boston College, minus star fullback Brendan McCarthy, hosts Army at Chestnut Hill, and Boston University heads for Philadelphia to battle Temple.

Also, the Citadel will play the Maine Black Bears in Portland, Me., and Rhode Island and Brown meet in Providence for another confrontation of the Yankee Conference and the Ivy League, Rutgers faces Princeton tomorrow and New Hampshire plays Colby.

A meeting of all candidates for the freshman basketball team will be held Wednesday, Oct. 4, at 7 p.m. in Room 250, Boyden Building.

Huge Throng Expected for Home Debut

by Walt Stachura
Staff Reporter

Television will not cut significantly into the ticket sale for tomorrow's game, if the enthusiastic response of both UMass and Dartmouth students is any indication.

Of the 11, 810 Dartmouth game coupons that were issued here on Registration Day, 8,775 have been turned in at the ticket office in the Boyden Building, indicating a huge UMass student turn-out for the home opener.

An estimated 17,000 will be on hand for the clash between the Yankee Conference and Ivy League powers.

The Dartmouth football team will not be without support, when they take to the field at Alumni Stadium.

The team will have the support of a large contingent of fans in addition to the Big Green band.

Ticket manager Walter Novak said that the ticket office had originally sent 1,200 tickets to the Hanover, N. H. campus. However, by Monday another 400 tickets were sent to Dartmouth because of the large sale.

Dartmouth fans and the band will be seated in three sections on the east side of the stadium.

In last year's game, which Dartmouth won, 17-7, the Indians took a fast 14-0 first period lead. San Hawkins scored on a 48-yard punt return, the first punt return TD against UMass in 54 games. Gene Ryzewicz upped the margin with a scintillating 64-yard TD run.

UMass, behind Greg Landry's passing (17 for 31), marched up and down the field but were able to score only once on Landry's one-yard plunge in the last period. The Redmen ran off 84 plays to Dartmouth's 52 but the Big Green defense was tenacious deep in its own territory.

METAWAMPE'S GRID PICKS

For an Indian, Metawampe has a peculiar affinity for a kind of "vast wasteland" his ancestors would never have dreamed of.

He calls it simply the "flickering box," but the staid warrior wept bitterly when "Last of the Mohicans" went off the air. And he wonders what Jay Silverheels, X Brands, and Michael Ansara are doing these days.

Tomorrow he'll watch his favorite program of all time—a tribal war between the Redmen and a band of renegades from the north in the concrete canyon to the southwest. He'd go there himself but they won't let him play his fire-water trade among the eager observers.

At any rate, he would rather see the Pickett at the Cage than the picket at the Stadium. Besides, his computer-like mind functions better far from the maddening crowd. His 31-9-2 record on last week's football games speakers for itself.

The oft-painted prognosticator nevertheless considers his last-week performance below par. True, he picked Houston's upset of Michigan State, but he missed UMass' total points by two points and Maine's by one. Those all-nighters just don't pay off.

Showers Force Tigers, Angels To Play Pair

DETROIT (AP) — The crucial game between Detroit and California was postponed last night because of rain.

The teams will play a twi-night doubleheader, starting at 6 p.m., EDT, today.

Tiger Stadium was buffeted by a driving drizzle and 44-degree temperatures. Despite the weather, about 10,000 fans turned out for the scheduled opener of the four-game series.

The Tigers are one game behind the Minnesota Twins, in first place in the American League, but the two clubs are tied in the critical less column.

The Twins were not scheduled Thursday, and Boston, tied with Detroit for second place, and Chicago also had the day off.

'Other' UMass Teams Rehearse for Rally, TV Appearance

by PETE WARD
Staff Reporter

There is more to football than the game. All this week, preparations have been underway for the Dartmouth game.

In addition to the teams' drills, the band and rally squad have been busy planning to make the UMass debut on ABC regional television a success. Making two and a half hours on Saturday an exciting event, is an ardous operation. The following is a resume of what goes on from the Friday before the game to Saturday at 1:30 p.m.

The team begins its final preparation at 4:30 today with a practice, including dress rehearsals of plays, kickoffs and strategy. At 6:15 the players will eat supper and relax until they gather at the Student Union at 7:15 for the "Beat Dartmouth Rally" on the south terrace of the Union.

Also working towards the rally are the honorary societies, including the Revelers, Scrolls, Maroon Keys and the cheerleaders, all under the direction of Adelphia. This morning, they checked to make sure the staging, microphones, lighting and ropes are ready.

The Maroon Keys began to construct the bonfire that will bring the rally to its climax. By 6:45 p.m. the Revelers, Scrolls and Maroon Keys will have already been out to the dorms rounding up students for the rally. By 7:15 p.m. the rally will be ready to begin.

Today is also a big day for the Marching Band. All week the musicians have been working on their high-step precision marching and their big sound for tomorrow's TV engagement. At 4:40 Friday, they will have a television rehearsal until 5:55. Rehearsing with them will be twirlers Bonnie Rheborn and Jane McKay, the props crew under Lionel Willoughby, and the dramatic squad under Jane Hellman. At 7:10 the Band will gather for the pre-rally rehearsal and prepare to march from Old Chapel to the south terrace.

At 7:30 the band honorary societies and team will unite for the spectacular Beat Dartmouth Rally and build up the spirit of the UMass fans for the big day ahead.

When the rally ends and the students move into the rally dance in the Student Union Ballroom, the team will retire to a squad meeting, followed by a movie and then bed at 10:30. While they sleep, the fans will still be dancing and waiting for the first UMass victory over Dartmouth in the history of the 18-game series.

Saturday morning, the pace will pick up again. The team goes to church at 9, have breakfast and briefings until 11:30 when the players dress for the game. The band will rehearse at 10 and 11 and step off for the Stadium at 1:10. The honorary societies will arrive at the Stadium before 1 to begin building up spirit with the cheerleaders. At 2 all three organizations will be ready to go. At 2:05 there will be just one purpose left for all — BEAT DARTMOUTH!

UMass Spirit Unequaled As BoSox Clinch AL Pennant

By RON LABRECQUE
News Editor

The University campus broke into pandemonium last night when the Boston Red Sox clinched their first pennant in 21 years.

Forming in the Southwest complex, the demonstration moved to the Student Union where more than 6,000 exuberant students from all parts of campus gathered around a bonfire by the pond.

The cheering crowd then slowly made its way up North Pleasant St. bringing the spontanious rally to the Amherst College campus.

Some ninety minutes after the demonstration had begun, the still ecstatic students dispersed to the various dormitories, fraternities and sororities.

President Calvin Plimpton of Amherst College, when contacted by the Daily Collegian, had no comment on the demonstration, but said that "it is a wonderful thing that the Red Sox won the pennant." UMass' President Lederle expressed his pleasure in the orderliness of the students and the fact that no incidents had been reported to him.

It was learned that President Lederle spoke to a number of students during the demonstration.

Amherst Town Police, contacted shortly before midnight last night reported only minor incidents of "a few stolen street signs".

The excitement generated on campus was unprecedented in UMass history. Said one male student "Its pretty wild up here, I'm running around campus kissing every pretty girl I see . . . and they just smile and kiss me back".

Reports from Southwest stated that the entire complex was covered with large quantities of paper, the majority of it being toilet paper thrown from the upper floors of the high-rise dormitories.

Reporting by Daily Collegian News Editor Dick Kline brought the story of the demonstration to the wires of the Associated Press.

BOSTON (AP)—The Boston Red Sox, sparked by Carl Yastrzemski's four hits, beat Minnesota 5-3 Sunday and won the American League baseball championship in the tightest race in the league's history.

The Red Sox actually didn't clinch the championship until about two hours after their final regular—season game was over, when the California Angels defeated Detroit 8-5 in the second game of a doubleheader at Detroit.

Boston last won a pennant in 1946.

Had Detroit won the game, the Tigers would have tied with Boston for the championship and a playoff would have been necessary.

As it developed, however, Boston won it outright, with Detroit and Minnesota only one game behind and Chicago only three games out.

Boston ace Jim Lonborg, the victim of unearned runs in the first and third innings, mastered the Twins for the first time in his career with a pressure-packed seven-hitter, finishing the regular season with 22 victories.

Volpe Makes Bet With Missouri's Governor Hernes

BOSTON (AP)—Gov. John Volpe of Massachusetts said Sunday night he is so confident that the Red Sox will win the upcoming World Series, that he is willing to bet a dozen Massachusetts lobsters on the outcome.

In a telegram to Gov. Warren E. Hernes of Missouri, home of the National League Champions, the St. Louis Cardinals, Volpe said he was making the bet with "faith and confidence in our Red Sox becoming the 1967 world baseball champions."

"I invite you to Massachusetts to see the Red Sox win the first two games," Volpe said, "and I will be in St. Louis for the wrap."

The demonstrators were orderly as they marched briskly through the center of Amherst towards Amherst College.

Boston Chanting: 'We're Number One!'

BOSTON (AP) — At 7:45 p.m. Sunday the bunched crowd in front of Fenway Park, home of the Boston Red Sox, broke and ran. They were youths with transistor radios listening to the special broadcast that brought news of the Detroit loss making the Sox the American League pennant winners.

Youths and girls ran down blocks—long lines of traffic that had backed up, shaking hands through open car windows. Cars blared their horns, a bearded man on a motor scooter tooted his, fire crackers flashed above the street in the dark.

Boston mounted police mingled in the crowd along the Fenway Park's side streets. They could do little to keep traffic going. Two raised their fingers in the V-for-victory sign. The crowd applauded and chanted, "We're number one, we're number one."

A line of some 50 persons waited outside a lounge across the street. A man about 25 in the line said, "This is where we're gonna celebrate the pennant." His friend asked, "on the sidewalk" he said, "yeh," and waved the Red Sox banner he had resting on his shoulder.

Judy Gunning, 22, of Windsor locks, Conn., said she had to stand to see the game but "it was beautiful."

On the other side of Boston, a scattering of hippies sat in the 50-degree night air on a corner of Boston Common. One of three teen-age girls with long hair and capes said, "I don't like baseball.

"Just Like A Tickertape Parade!"

AMHERST (AP)—Thousands of UMass students swept the campus Sunday night when the Red Sox clinched the American League pennant.

"It's just fantastic, like a tickertape parade!" said one pretty coed as she stood watching residents of the school's 22-story residence towers empty wastebaskets and throw streams of toilet paper from their windows.

About 14,000 students live on campus and most of them left their dormitories to wander about campus yelling and setting off fireworks.

Photographer John Griffin captured these UMies on film from the top of the Daily Collegian's make shift press car.

"V-for-victory" signs and "We're Number One" placards were in evidence throughout the crowds of exuberant UMies.

From the President of the Student Senate . . .

To all Students:

Tomorrow evening the student body will elect its representatives to the Student Senate. In order that the electorate may be able to select the best candidates from their constituencies, I should like to take this opportunity to speak of the nature of student government at the University of Massachusetts and of what responsibilities the office of Student Senator entails.

The Student Senate, as defined in the Student Government Association Constitution and approved by the Board of Trutees, shall "have vested in it all legislative functions of student government and shall promote the welfare of the student body. The Senate shall make all rules pertaining to the general campus conduct . . . (which) shall become effective upon approval of the appropriate officials (the President of the University or those appointed by him). The Student Senate shall have all necessary power to insure the proper functioning of student government."

In fulfilling its charged duty of "promoting the student welfare," the Senate has evolved into a legislature which has eleven standing committees and appointing power to ten joint Faculty-Student Committees.

The "seconds" policy at the commons, abolishment of upperclassmen women's curfews, and the adoption of a pass-fail system of elective courses are recent results of Faculty Senate, Student Senate, and administrative cooperation. Presently, new code of residence hall social regulations, which originated in the Student Senate, is being considered by faculty and students in the Student Affairs Committee with a tentative reporting date to the Board of Trustees of mid-October, 1967. Also, investigations of the waiting lines at the Southwest commons are now being conducted.

It would be impossible to delineate the exact issues which will be the concern of student government during the next year. These shall be decided, in great measure, by the voters and the types of individuals elected to the Senate. In essence, the Senate will be as legitimate as the students wish to make it.

In an academic environment it is unacceptable that decisions be made which affect other members of the community without first interacting with those members to formulate the most logical and beneficial conclusions. However, unless the students take great pains to insure that their voice is well directed, they cannot expect as favorable new policies as might be possible.

Your Senators must be expected to provide responsible and efficient student government. They must realize that the students have the right and opportunity to cooperate in creating the University environment, and it is their duty to represent their fellows intelligently and rationally in this context.

Therefore, the elections which shall be conducted in all the residence halls or areas tomorrow evening will greatly determine the quality of your government during the coming months.

Sincerely yours,
James G. Collins
President
Student Senate

University Press Publishing Books by Faculty Professors

By KEN CARTY
Staff Reporter

In 1964 the University of Massachusetts Press came into existence, following a directive from UMass' President, John Lederle. At that time, Mrs. Leone Barron, a former English teacher at the University and a co-founder and former editor of The Massachusetts Review, became its director.

From meager beginnings the press has been growing steadily. The staff, which originally consisted of Mrs. Barron, has grown to include a part-time editor, a designer-production manager, a sales manager, promotion manager, and a secretary and shipper.

The UMass Press is one of over 65 college and university presses in the country and is also a member of The Association of University Presses. Mrs. Barron pointed out that the great difference between a university press and a commercial press is the material with which it deals. A university press has the basic structure for commercial publishing but the distinction is that works published by a university press are almost always of scholarly or exceptional literary value.

The Press' first book, The Talkative President: The Off-the-Record Press Conferences of Calvin Coolidge, published in September 1964, was a highly successful selection of official transcripts of the press conferences of Calvin Coolidge edited by Howard Quint, head of the UMass history dept. and former chairman of the University Press Committee, and Robert Ferrell. The book is still receiving excellent reviews.

At the end of this season the Press will have published thirty books on a variety of subjects from Thoreau in Our Season, edited by John Hicks of the UMass English faculty, to The Urbanization of Japanese Labor: 1868-1955 by Thomas Wilkinson of the Sociology and Anthropology Department. Critics' reaction to the majority of the books has been excellent. It is interesting to note that over half the books published by the Press have been edited or authored by former or present UMass faculty members.

The process by which a manuscript is finally published is complex and fascinating. A manuscript may be solicited or not. If after a preliminary reading the manuscript shows promise, it is sent to scholars in the respective field who file reports on it with the University Press Committee. William Havard, head of the Government Department is the current chairman. If the script is approved by the committee, it is edited, designed, and produced, then sent to a commercial printer. Finally it is promoted, advertised, and, hopefully, sold.

The excellent basis on which the UMass Press has established itself is an indication of the future growth of the Press as well as the University. The relationship between the Press and the University is summarized by Mrs. Barron: "When a university comes of age it needs a press."

A Little Bit Too Much Litter

Printed below is a letter from the mother of a UMass student commenting on student carelessness. It was sent, like others from time to time, to the President of the University.

Dear Sir:

Last Sunday I visited my daughter and as I approached the University I was thrilled with vistas, and the beauty of the campus. However as I came closer, I was appalled at the papers strewn over the lawns, the cigarette stubs in the corridors of the beautiful new dormitory, paper cups, coke bottles, straws in the elevators, newspapers flying at the entrance halls—I was sickened by the unkempt look. Why can't the boys and girls use ashtrays? Why can they abuse such beautiful grounds and buildings?

We wish to join with this parent to ask the question, "why ?"

We, too, find the active assault of litter discouraging. No wonder, the letter uses the terminology, "boys and girls." — THE EDITORS

Don't Vote Tomorrow

A big day for some people comes tomorrow. That's when candidates for the Student Senate must be elected. We may estimate that the 35 or so present Senators, the 60 odd victorious candidates, the 40 or so other candidates who won't make it, the roommates and close friends of these candidates, and a handful of administrators will take an active interest in this election.

A less intense interest will be held by the several thousand who will vote or who walk by the voting places off to some "more important" engagement.

Then, too, there should be a flicker of interest when the results are announced.

This description is one that could be used for many "November" elections when some of the citizens go to the polling places to elect mayors and representatives and the like.

That's what is so sad. The two types of elections—for student government officers and for local, state, and national officers—are exactly alike. The elections are alike.

The powers, responsibilities, types of candidates, prestige, monetary rewards—all these things are different.

But the elections are the same. There's no other way for Student Senators or Congressmen to get in office. Somebody has to vote for them.

There's a good body of students who look forward to voting when they are 21. They wish that they could go home and vote in primary elections for mayor sometimes.

But a large number of students are unconcerned about voting for Student Senator. They have reasons: maybe there's no election due to the lack of one willing candidate; maybe the candidate is unopposed; maybe they don't know the candidates; maybe they don't know what the Student Senate is.

So they don't vote. Why should they?

No these students shouldn't vote. If you are one of them, don't vote.

But maybe they could vote next year. In the meanwhile they can find out what the Student Senate is and who those people are in the dormitory who seem to like that sort of thing.

Why should these students who are unconcerned about voting bother to do this? Probably only one reason should motivate the students.

After a year of study and listening to their peers, these students will know whether student government is something worth the effort of voting candidates into — or whether those other students who talk about student government matters are worth voting for.

And why should this task be undertaken? One factor might be the handfuls of people who insist now that these elections to the Student Senate are meaningful.

Every student ought to have an opinion as to whether these vocal people are right when they assert that they are glad that they can vote for other students to represent them in a student self-government.

Commuters

To the editor:

The Student Senate is a place where much good can be done. It is involved in virtually every aspect of student life. I have decided to run for the office of Commuter Senator because I feel that with my background in student government I can offer something to the student body.

I also feel that as a commuter I am able to sense the particular needs of this segment of the student population and will be able to represent the commuter in an effective way. I see two major problems facing the commuter today. First, the highly unfair way the commuter is being treated in regard to parking. I myself do not relish the long walk from F lot to the campus now, and I dread to think what it will be like when the snow starts falling.

The second problem that I wish to mention is that of communications. I feel that the present means of notifying commuters of campus activities is inadequate and often times the commuter misses a campus activity only because he didn't know about it.

I can promise you that if I am elected I will do all in my power to find a solution to these problems. I also guarantee every commuter that I will listen to all problems and suggestions and in this manner provide the commuter population top notch representation.

Arnold M. Schneider

I am a candidate for the Student Senate for many reasons, which can be collected under two headings.

One heading, the more meritorious than the other, is what I hope to do as a Senator, this second time around. I hope to be able to contribute to the Wednesday evening debate. After observing the Senate for a year, I consider this aspect of its functionings crucial.

I also hope to participate in a revived Commuters caucus so that the eight of us Senators can act in a united way.

Under the other heading, my reasons for running are that I consider it an honor to be a Senator—an honor every time someone asks you a question or asks you to do something for me. I hope you will give me your confidence to preserve this aspect of the Senate and perhaps spread it.

Patricia A. Petow

Brett House

To the editor:

It seems ironic that Brett House being the closest dorm to center campus is in fact the furthest removed from a knowledge of Student Senate proceedings. Residents, and moreover the dorm government itself has come to ignore the Senate as it has seemingly ignored them.

This year, however, under the leadership of President Collins the Senate promises to be more than just a debating society. It will demand of its members imagination and a genuine interest. Within the first weeks of school the Greenough and Southwest Commons incidents point out that the Senate will deal with more than just budgetary matters.

The gap between the dorm Senator and his constituency must be bridged if the Senate is to function properly. "This year find out what's going on.....elect Paul Harold, Brett House Senator."

Paul Harold

To the editor:

As a candidate for re-election to the Student Senate I would at this time like to ask for your support in the election Tuesday night. I have served continually for the past year in the Senate, ani a member of finance and food services committees, as well as an active member of Homecoming Committee, and Sophomore Executive Council.

Although as of yet I have not proposed any major legislation nor have my name on any bills, I have gained much experience in the ways of the Senate and fully understand its powers and functions. I have come to respect it as the most powerful and influential student organization on campus that cares about the individual student as a person.

The Senate must continue its leadership in the drive for a continually improving experience on campus. Action must not be made in haste or in poor judgment, yet the student must come first, for it is their school and their lives that are going to be influenced the most.

We must, in the Senate, continue to press for academic reform, for more reasonable conditions with the entire eating situation on campus, especially with dining commons charges and quality.

The job of a student Senator is one that consumes at least ten hours a week, I know. I am also fully prepared to continue the work I have started and again I ask for your support in Tuesday's election.

"A Day In The Life"

By DAVID BASKEN
Editorial Staff

I read Newsweek today, o boy! It told how the Birchers prescribe a formula for marital joy. Though it was really sad, well I just had to laugh reading all that guff — they really should turn you off.

The J show the right way for a guy to pick a wife today.

Beware of Vassar Grads—they are a danger to Red (oops)-blooded American lads. Also Members of the League of Women Voters, perhaps they are trying to fill their Commie quotas.

Watch out for hippies, contemporary revolutionists and mods who're trying to make the world better—evil 'cause they don't conform to the letter.

John Birch should really turn you off.

(Time out: please pledge allegiance to the memory of John Foster Dulles.)

The society also warns your future spouce could be a Commie louse.

If she likes vodka (comes from Russia doesn't that crush ya?) or, if she likes Ginsberg's verse she's been infected by the Commie curse.

Translations of the Bible that are mod if she reads them, she's insulted the true Red White & Blue God.

So right-thinking men please ponder this the Birchers show the way to mental bliss.

They show the road to pure American life. The men who would take us back to 1910 and the generation that was afraid to sleep with its wife.

John Birch should really turn you off.

(If you are getting anything out of your education they should revolt you entirely.)

Election Law

"Unless one nomination paper is returned for every vacancy available, no election will be held for said vacancy." (S.G.A. By-Laws, Article XII, Section 4.)

This means in a two seat constituency, for example, if only one paper is returned, only one person will be elected; a write-in can only be elected by getting more votes than the person whose name appears on the ballot.

A recent luncheon at the University of Massachusetts honored Miss Florence Stiles of North Amherst, registered architect who has left her post with the University of Massachusetts Physical Plant department to retire. Miss Stiles came to the University in 1960 as a member of the library staff and transferred to the physical plant department a year later. An expert on laboratory furniture, she had helped in the planning of UMass laboratories and worked on a reference manual of standards for new University buildings.

Baltimore Sun Editor Speaks On Newspaper Editorials

By MARTHA CURRAN
Staff Reporter

"Editorial writing as a profession no longer appeals to young bright minds." A. D. Emmart, editor of the Baltimore Sun, said during a campus interview Thursday.

Defending his profession after a twenty-five minute address to a group of journalism students, Mr. Emmart defined an editorial as a device "to prod the reader into thinking and to, one way or another, aid that thinking."

An editorial, he continued, "is the last relic of ideas present in our daily lives." It is a significant pattern of the great number of facts to which a reader is exposed via mass media, he said.

Editorials were once determinants of the character of a newspaper, but not so any more. They are quickly forgotten, despite timeliness and authority. This is one reason that editorial writing is less appealing to young journalists, Mr. Emmart said.

Youths Arrested In Narcotics Raid

CAMBRIDGE, MASS (AP)—Police arrested 19 youths ranging in age from 15 to 22 on a variety of narcotic charges in a raid on a hippie apartment early Sunday morning.

Officers said four of these arrested were teen-age girls. One of these, a 17-year-old from Newton Center, who reportedly had taken LSD, was taken to Cambridge City Hospital.

Police said they confiscated a quantity of marijuana and unidentified pills.

Lederle Addresses Faculty Senate On the Traffic Problems on Campus

By MICHELLE A. KACZYNSKI
Faculty Senate Reporter

President Lederle addressed the Faculty Senate concerning the traffic problem on campus. Lederle emphasized unanticipated problems, such as the closing of the Rt. 116 bridge, which added to the congestion. He predicted that the general traffic problem should be cleared up within six months.

President Lederle was asked to speak on the campus parking problem by Prof. William Havard (Government), who submitted the following question to the Faculty Senate. "Was the assignment of the faculty and staff, whose offices are in Machmer Hall, to Parking 3 solely for my benefit (I live in South Amherst and that lot is closest to my home), or was it because the people in Machmer are more in need of physical therapy than the habitues of other buildings, or were other reasons predominant?"

Prof. Havard also wished to stress that the administration has responded favorably and successfully to this problem.

Lederle answered that many unanticipated problems come up when instituting a new system. He said that an effort was being made to accomodate petitioners, and hoped that the problem would straighten out.

President Lederle also mentioned that towing of vehicles improperly parked would continue. Personally, he was not in favor of this policy, as it creates bad public relations between administration and student, but said that this was the most effective means of controlling unauthorized parking.

Other matters considered at the meeting dealt with changes in the Faculty Senate by-laws. These changes greatly increased the power of the Secretary by giving him a three year term, by designating him as spokesman for the Faculty Senate, and by having him oversee and coordinate the activities of Senate committees.

These changes make the Secretary, a faculty member, virtually the head of the Senate. Previously the University president or provost, an administration person, had been the orientating force of the Faculty Senate.

"Barefoot in Park" is a Comedy on Newlywed's Life

By JOHN M. McWALLY
Staff Reporter

Barefoot In the Park is definitely one of the best movies in the "play-movie" genre of today. In the female lead, the producers have wisely picked one of the new up and coming actresses, Jane Fonda, to portray the newly wedded Corey, who "may not make a good wife, but is definitely sexy." Playing opposite her is another new comer to the movie business, Robert Redford, who does an excellent job of portraying Paul, a young aspiring lawyer.

Even though these two new comers do a good job, Mildred Natwick, who plays Corey's mother, steals every scene that she is in. Another well known actor, Charles Boyer, plays the part of Victor Valasco, a middle aged "bluebeard who is really a nice guy."

The movie opens in New York with the newly-weds on their way to a hotel to spend their honey-moon. The first substantial lines in the show are Corey's. "Paul, if the marriage doesn't work out, let's not get divorced let's kill each other." This line sets the scene for what can only be called one of the funniest post-marriage adjustment period in history.

Their apartment is on the sixth floor of a tennament which houses "the greatest wierdos in the world." Its too small. The plumbing works backwards. Their bed is too big for the bedroom. Mother drops in early, and a whirlwind of other catastrophies happen.

All in all, Barefoot in the Park is one of those few romantic comedies which definitely should not be missed. Everyone should go "barefoot in the park" at least once in their lives.

Big Green Turns Early Tables to Win, 28-10

Ryzewicz Pilots Dartmouth Surge From 10-0 Deficit

By MIKE CURRAN
Staff Reporter

AMHERST—Dartmouth spotted UMass a touchdown and a field goal, then came rolling back to score a convincing 28-10 win Saturday before 18,100 fans at Alumni Stadium in a regionally televised contest.

The Indians' victory gives their fans hope for another Ivy title, while the loss is disheartening to the Redmen who figured to score their first victory over a Dartmouth football team.

UMass won the opening cointossing ceremonies and elected to kickoff with the wind at its back. Dartmouth, unable to move the ball, was forced to punt. A bad hike from center sent the punter, Jim Burke, chasing the ball and he was nailed at the Big Green ten-yard line by Paul Minar.

After a TV commercial, the Redmen could only move to the three-yard line, and so they settled for a 21-yard Ed Sherman field goal.

For the remainder of the first quarter, the ball was in or near Dartmouth territory, but UMass couldn't capitalize on the Hanover Indians' troubles until early in the second period.

A 40-yard punt return by sophomore Steve Parnell gave the Redmen first and goal from the Big Green nine. On fourth and one, quarterback Greg Landry muscled in on the left side. Sherman's conversion made it 10-0 and everything looked rosy.

On the ensuing kickoff, however, the Ivy Leaguers started to come to life. Senior Gene Ryzewicz, in his first game at quarterback since high school, engineered a 77-yard touchdown drive which featured the running of Steve Luxford and Bill Donovan.

The big play, though, was a Ryzewicz pass to John Wimsatt, good for 29 yards. Ryzewicz snuck over from the one-yard line and Pete Donovan's point-after made it UMass 10, Dartmouth 7.

The Redmen tried to come right back but a Sam Faber interception gave Dartmouth the ball at midfield with a couple of minutes left in the half. Ryzewciz hit Randy Wallick at the UMass 36. After an incompletion, soph Bill Koenig took over the helm and on his second pass attempt found Bob Mlaker in the end zone, putting UMass down by four at halftime.

The second half was all Dartmouth. The Redmen had the ball for only three downs in the entire third period. Meanwhile, the Big Green stayed on the ground and rolled up the yardage. Only a fumble recovery by Mike McArdle at the Redmen two kept them from scoring in the third stanza.

At the start of the fourth period the visitors notched their third score on a Luxford run on a fourth and goal situation after UMass had stopped their first three attempts from the one-yard line.

The Redmen finally got a drive underway in the fourth quarter, but after moving from their own 27 to the Dartmouth 35, Giff Foley, a defensive tackle for the Indians, recovered a UMass fumble.

A Big Green touchdown followed and the ballgame was over.

Dartmouth's offensive and defensive lines were both very tough, continually beating the bigger Redmen to the punch. Ryzewicz and Luxford were the Indians' individual heroes, while Ernie Smith and Parnell stood out for UMass.

The Dartmouth-UMass series, which began in 1902, now stands at 0-18-1 in the Big Green's favor.

REDMEN FOES BITE DUST

It was sunny but gloomy in more places than Amherst Saturday. Five out of eight UMass opponents also dropped contests.

Maine was clobbered by The Citadel, 42-14. The Cadets used a massive air attack to build up a 42-0 lead before the Black Bears managed two scores late in the fourth quarter.

In a Yankee Conference battle, junior quarterback Pete Petrillo scored two touchdowns and led Connecticut to a 17-6 win over Vermont.

Rhode Island, the team that will probably give UMass its hardest Yankee Conference clash, upset Brown, 12-8. In trimming the Ivy, the Rams threw up a superb defense to stop a last-minute drive by their in-state rivals.

Boston University, probably looking ahead to its encounter with Harvard next weekend, was dumped by an inspired group of Temple Owls, 22-16. The Terriers, down 22-0 going into the fourth quarter, made a valiant comeback effort, but couldn't quite make it back up the steep grade.

A two-point conversion pass in the final seconds of play sent an underdog Rutgers team down to defeat at the hands of Princeton, 22-21.

New Hampshire, revamped over a year ago, crushed Colby, 42-0. Bill Estey, former Wildcat quarterback, turned flanker and started the scoring with a 35-yard punt return.

The Boston Eagles had their wings clipped by Army, 21-10, before a packed crowd of 26,000 at BC Stadium.

Then, of course, Notre Dame was beaten 28-21 by the fired-up Purdue Boilermakers. But then, Notre Dame won't be an opponent until around 1984.

player in baseball history to win the coveted Triple Crown as he collected a double and three singles and two runs batted in.

Yaz led the league in batting with a .326 average and in RBIs with 121. He tied Minnesota's Harmon Killebrew with 44 homers, but the deadlock does not go against him in the Triple Crown records.

With their backs to the wall after dropping two games to Cleveland last Tuesday and Wednesday, the Red Sox made a dramatic comeback in sweeping a two-game weekend set with the heavy-hitting Twins.

After rallying for a 6-4 victory Saturday, they settled down to pull out the official finale behind Lonborg.

Yastrzemski singled in the first and doubled to start the fourth, but both hits were wasted as Minnesota starter Dean Chance was tough in the clutch.

Yaz wasn't finished, however. In fact, he was just warming up for the big hit.

Lonborg started the decisive sixth by beating out a neat bunt down the third base line. Jerry Adair and Dalton Jones followed with ground singles, loading the bases.

Yastrzemski, ignoring the pressure, took a ball inside and then, ripped a single to center, scoring Lonborg and Adair.

Al Worthington relieved chance and got Ken Harrelson to hit a high bounder near the second base bag. Zoilo Versailles elected to try for a play at the plate, but his throw was far too late as Jones scored.

Harrelson reached first on the fielder's choice and gave way to pinch runner Jose Tartabull. Worthington then uncorked a pair of wild pitches, Yastrzemski scoring and Tartabull advancing to third.

Tartabull raced home with the fifth run of the 25-minute half inning when Killebrew booted Reggie Smith's grounder down the first base line.

Singles by Adair, Jones and Yastrzemski loaded the bases in the seventh but Jim Grant, the fourth Minnesota pitcher, ended the threat on a double play grounder and a strikeout.

Lonborg, who lost nine games, allowed only two hits in seven innings, but ran into trouble in the eighth.

Rich Reese led off with a pinch single, but was erased on a double play. Killebrew, Tony Oliva and Bob Allison then singled in succession for a run. However, the uprising ended as Allison was thrown out by Yastrzemski while trying to stretch his hit into a double.

Lonborg got pinch hitter Rich Rollins on a pop to Petrocelli for the last out—and promptly was mobbed by his teammates and hundreds of delirious Boston fans in the crowd of 35,770.

The victory enabled the Red Sox, who finished ninth in 1966, to close the regular season with a 92-70 record. Minnesota wound up with a 91-71 mark.

Boston now goes into the World Series with the St. Louis Cardinals, National League champion the same team they faced in 1946. St. Louis defeated the Red Sox then, four games to three.

University College To Continue A Century Of Expansion

. . . The Old

Thirty-four young men took a three-hour exam in English grammar, geography, and algebra at a brand-new campus 100 years ago and became the first class at what is now the University of Massachusetts.

They had arrived the day before and were greeted by four professors, including the president, Dr. William S. Clark. The group was lonesome and heartsick after viewing the unfinished construction on the raw campus. Today's students on the growing UMass campus often voice similar sentiments.

The thirty - four applicants were all accepted.

This was a far cry from the problems of this year's entering class of 3,000 freshmen at UM. More than 17,000 applied for admission.

The first class had a campus which consisted of four buildings on 310 acres, built at a cost of $46,000. Today, the University has more than 100 major buildings on its 1,100-acre central campus, with an assessed valuation of more than $50 million.

The life of a student was quite different 100 years ago. Admission to M.A.C. carried with it an agreement to work two hours a day—without pay—for the College. In the fine old tradition of "early to bed, early to rise," all students were awakened at 6 a.m. After breakfast they spent 15 minutes at prayer. Lectures and classes were held from 9 a.m. to noon. They then spent 30 minutes in gymnastics or military tactics. After the noon meal, they worked afternoons on the farm and studied.

The student of today at UM avoids early morning risings, Saturday classes and anything else that might interfere with a few hours sleep. But he probably stays up later at night because of the plethora of extra curricular and cultural activities available in the modern day

The final proposals for the University College should be released by administration this week, according to Prof. William C. Havard, the chairman of the Committee to Plan the Academic Program of University College and head of the Department of Government.

The final draft of the proposals has been gone over, revised and approved by the committee and is now being printed, Dr. Havard said.

The 100-page report, Dr. Havard explained, "states our broad educational aims and working assumptions and provides a curriculum plan which we think is most exciting."

Briefly, the report will outline the recommended four-course curriculum, describe all other relevant academic arrangements, blueprint the proposad administrative structure, describe the favored physical facilities and make suggestions for phasing the development of the College.

Dr. Havard described the proposed University College as "a form of decentralization in the next phase of growth of the University through the creation of an autonomous college which would not be just a repetition of a liberal arts college, but would contain department units from all the different schools of the University." He views University College as a way of "trying to deal with the problems of numbers on a realistic scale."

Prof. Havard stressed that University College will not be an honors college, but will be open to all who are interested. In this way, he said, it differs from similar undertakings of other universities in the country. "No other college or university in the country," he stated, "has experimented in dealing with decentralization

Faculty Recital Series

Olevskys To Perform Tonight

Internationally - acclaimed violinist Julian Olevsky, who joined the University of Massachusetts music department faculty this fall as resident artist, will be heard in a recital Tuesday, Oct. 3, at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium with his wife Estela, a concert pianist.

Mr. and Mrs. Olevsky will play works by Tartini, Bartok, Webern and Grieg in a concert open to the public without charge. It is the first of this season's UMass music department faculty recital series.

Mr. Olevsky was born in 1927 in Germany of a distinguished musical family and began his musical studies there at the age of seven. Two years later his family moved to Argentina, where he became an eight-year scholarship pupil of the famed violinist and teacher Alexander Petschnikoff.

He made his concert debut as a boy prodigy in Buenos Aires and performed in many parts of South America, making his North American debut in New York City ten years later.

He is now an American citizen and a world-wide concert performer. He has appeared from coast to coast in this country with most of the major U.S. symphony orchestras. He has performed with such leading European orchestras as the Vienna, Oslo and Stockholm Philharmonics and the Residentie Orchestra of the Hague. In 1959 he made the first of two tours of the Orient, starting in Japan and performing in Korea, Formosa, Hong Kong, Malaya, India, Pakistan and Turkey.

Mr. Olevsky's extensive repertoire embraces concerti from Bach to Berg, sonatas from Beethoven to Bartok and shorter pieces by a variety of composers

STUDENT SUICIDE

Bruce A. Batease, a sophomore history major from North Adams plunged to his death late Friday night from the 19th floor of Kennedy Tower.

Eyewitnesses stated that Batease sat on the balcony railing for approximately an half hour before jumping from the guard rail.

Dr. Sheldon Clapp, Hampshire County Associate Medical Examiner ruled the death an "apparent suicide".

Batease lived at 39 Page St. with his wife Sandra. He was literary Editor of Yahoo. Funeral services were held this morning in North Adams.

Sen. Kennedy Is Preferred By Democrats

WASHINGTON (AP)— Sen. Robert F. Kennedy now is preferred by Democrats over Pres. Johnson as the party's 1968 presidential candidate, the Gallup Poll reported Monday.

Kennedy, the New York Democrat who has sharply criticized some aspects of administration Vietnam policy, was picked by 39% of the Democrats polled by Gallup as their choice to run for president next year. Johnson drew support from 37%.

It was the first time since last January that Kennedy had outpolled the President in the Gallup sampling.

Kennedy was shown with a big lead—51-39%—as the preferred candidate in Gallup's poll of all adults, regardless of party affiliation.

The Harris Poll, copyrighted by the Washington Post, indicated Johnson's handling of the Vietnam war is approved by only 31% of those queried—a new low. Johnson's policies drew backing from 49% polled last November but had slumped to 33% support by August.

Peace Corps Opens Recruiting Campaign

Peace Corps week on campus is October 2 through October 6. Recruiters will be at a booth in the lobby of the Student Union to answer questions and give out applications and literature.

The recruiters, who are all recently returned volunteers will be available to address any clubs or organizations during the evening hours. The returned volunteers have served in India, Malawi, Nigeria, Ghana or El Salvador doing a variety of jobs including teaching, community development, and agriculture.

Movies on the Peace Corps in India, Kenya, and Brazil will be shown in the Plymouth room at the Student Union every day at 11:00 and 2:30. The Peace Corps Placement Test, a 30 min. modern language aptitude test, will be given in Bartlett 61 on Wed. at 3:30, 4:30, 5:30, and 6:30 and on Thursday at 3:45, 4:45, 5:45, and 6:45.

A new regional recruiting headquarters for the northeast states has been opened at 408 Atlantic Avenue, Boston. The office is headed by Peter Walsh, 26, who was a volunteer in Chile after graduating from Harvard.

Boston is now one of four regional recruiting bases from which 115 returned Peace Corps Volunteer recruiters are traveling to about 900 U.S. campuses this year. Although they are working primarily in education, community development health and agriculture progams, over 300 skill categories need filling.

University Theatre Begins Four-Play Season Oct. 18

Oh Dad, Poor Dad, Mama's Hung You in the Closet and I'm Feelin' so Sad, Arthur Kopit's zany farce about "Momism," will hit the boards of Bowker Auditorium as the first University Theatre production of the 1967-68 season. Scheduled for October 18-21, it will be followed by Pirandello's illusive Enrico IV (December 6-9), Shakespeare's triumphal Henry V (March 6-9), and Jean Giraudoux's zestful Madwoman of Chaillot (April 24-27).

Each play will run for four nights, with an 8:30 curtain time. A matinee performance of Henry V will be presented Saturday, March 9, especially for high school students. While reserved-seat tickets may be purchased for each production, theatregoers will be offered the convenience of a season coupon book which guarantees the holder a seat for all four productions. Season coupon books are on sale this week and may be purchased from undergraduate salesmen on the campus, at the box office outside the front of Bartlett Hall, or by mail to the University Theatre.

OH DAD, POOR DAD

Oh Dad, Poor Dad, which opened in New York in 1962, depicts the maniacal behaviors of a daffily arrogant Mom and her over-protected, under-aggressive son. The domestic scene is colored by a noisy Pirhana fish, some hungry Venus fly-traps, a seductive baby-sitter from next-door, and — of course — Dad, whose mortal form has been preserved by a taxidermist. This is a flamboyant story about love and death in the illusive, nonsensical world of the theatre of the absurd.

ENRICO IV

Enrico IV dramatizes the actions of a 20th-century Italian who imagines himself to be the 11th-century Henry IV of Germany and commands a foursome of companions to adopt his illusion and portray themselves as 11th-century German knights, foils to his Henry. Sanity and insanity become so confused that the characters themselves seem unable to determine who is mad and who is not, and the audience is left to ponder whether Henry's behavior is a playful ruse, a compulsive madness, or a deep wisdom.

Henry V

Henry V is a celebration of England triumphal. Like the Bard's own monarch, Queen Elizabeth, Henry V succeeded in organizing England into a powerful dominating nation. He has coalesced his nation into a spearhead of united action for conquest that is consummated in the defeat of France at the Battle of Agincourt. With Henry V Shakespeare comes to the end of his career as a chronicler of English history by bringing his country up to that point of unification and national triumph in the 15th century that he saw repeated and amplified in the reign of Elizabeth.

THE MADWOMAN OF CHAILLOT

The frantic, fantastic world of French farce opens in The Madwoman of Chaillot, Paris's posh Chaillot sector is the scene of a world-shaking battle between good and evil. In a small cafe, a duo of evil capitalists teams up with a prospector to unearth from the depths of Paris crude oil which will make them filthier in wealth than they already are. Their plots are stymied by the very moral and benevolent madness of the "madwoman of Chaillot" and her friends, who channel the potential despoilers of the earth into a bottomless pit—a dry one at that—opening out of her cellar. With evil buried, joy, justice and love return again to the world.

Marshall is Judge In Supreme Court

WASHINGTON (AP)—Thurgood Marshall—"kind of jumpy" beforehand, according to his 11-year-old son—took his seat Monday as the first Negro to serve as an associate justice of the Supreme Court.

President Johnson, who named Marshall to the tribunal in June, witnessed the impressive ceremony at the opening of the court's new term.

Marshall, former chief legal officer for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, swore in an oath administered by the court's clerk, John F. Davis, to "administer justice without respect to persons, and do equal right to the poor and to the rich."

Marshall, the 96th man to sit on the court, had taken the first of two oaths administered to new justices on Sept. 1, from Justice Hugo L. Black. He has been performing judicial duties since. Chief Justice Earl Warren opened the 49-minute session.

The remainder of the session was given over to the admission of 223 lawyers to practice before the court, 134 of them former FBI agents.

Decisions and arguments on cases will start next Monday.

Adult Education Program Begins

Greeks Think Ahead

The Greek system may be accepting some of the responsibility that accompanies their many freedoms. At this semesters onset, Freshman rush was to begin in September, as it was in the fall of 1964. Thinking more of the Freshmen and not of themselves, the Interfraternity Council moved the start of Freshman rush to second semester. The only one that benefits from a first semester rush is the Fraternity. They get the extra men and, consequently, the extra money that much sooner, but the Freshman lose precious study time.

Remembering the prime reason for attending a University, academic excellence, the Greeks are giving the Freshman the time they need to adjust and finish one semester. Without the worry of pledging, they can concentrate on their studies.

By looking out for the Freshmen's welfare, the Greeks are insuring their own. As you may already know, the minimum house cume for each fraternity had to be 2.0. This minimum will increase one tenth of a point each year for the next three years until it reaches 2.3. If a fraternity falls below this minimum for one year they will be put on social probation for the following year. They must reach the following years minimum cumulative average or remain on social probation.

With this stipulation hanging over the heads of each fraternity, the I.F.C. recinded a previous ruling which required all rushees to have a minimum 2.0 cume. This places the burden of responsibility to maintain the minimum squarely on the shoulders of each house.

As well as changing the starting time of Rush for most of the Fraternities, the I.F.C. decided to give a helping hand to the two new houses on campus as well as one that nearly had to disband a year ago. These three houses, Delta Chi, Pi Lambda Phi and Phi Sigma Kappa, will start their rush programs on the twenty seventh of October. This Preferential Rush program was designed to help these houses get the brotherhood they need to survive. This is the first instance where the I.F.C. has made a conscientious effort to help strenghten new or faltering houses. It is a step for which the Interfraternity Council should be commended.

At first thought, there seems to be a basic incongruity between the Preferential Rush program and the reasons for the switch to second semester rush. With further consideration this can be eliminated. There will be a few Freshmen that orient themselves quicker than the rest and will feel confident enough to rush first semester. Of these relatively few that rush, there will be less that pledge, but the headstart that these houses get may be just enough to keep them going.

Through these new policies, the Interfraternity Council has taken a giant step forward in accepting the responsibilities which they have so often been accused of neglecting.

Police Respond With Soul

The Soul Sound Concert was, as Senior Class Pres. Dick Wood promised, a great show. Anyone who attended the Saturday evening concert will agree that it was one of the best shows ever at this campus. Rhythm and Blues singers Wilson Pickett, Stevie Wonder and Jimmy Helmes completely captivated the audience.

By the time that the concert was over there were people dancing in the aisles, standing on their chairs and trying to get on the stage with Wilson Pickett. The audience and the University Police should be commended for their actions at the concert.

As Wood said the crowd was, "Both responsive and responsible," to the driving beat of the rhythm and blues sound. However, it seems that no one expected the audience to respond so strongly.

For their part the ten Campus Policemen who were on duty at the Cage deserve special acknowledgement. When the audience began to surge forward during Pickett's performance, they handled the situation very capably. Instead of panicing at the sight of 4,500 responsive people, they just escorted anyone off stage, other than the performers.

When Pickett finally left the stage at 12:05, after performing for twenty minutes, the audience dispersed and the police breathed a sigh of relief.

Provost Tippo to Keynote at SWAP

The Student Workshop on activities Problems Conference (SWAP) will take place this fall at the Andiron's Motor Lodge in West Dover, Vermont on October 27-29. Swap in the past, has led to numerous reformations in social and academic aspects of University life. Yet, we the members of the SWAP committee feel that there is an even greater and more significant role the conference can take upon itself.

At what is very likely the sole opportunity for students, administrators, and faculty to jointly discuss the salient issues and problems facing this university, there is the realization among all participants that the discussions at this conference can be and will be of great value in ascertaining the correct solutions to these various problems.

This year in an effort to make the SWAP conference a greater success than it has been previously, the committee has undergone a thorough self-evaluation program. Resulting from this examination we have implemented a number of innovations in format. The conference shall be divided among three general areas of discussion. These areas shall be (1) student government, (2) social, and (3) academic reform.

The activities of Friday evening shall commence with a keynote address to be delivered by Provost Oswald Tippo which will be followed by an hour of informal but structured discussion. Saturday morning's conferences will be preceded by an address by Professor Harry Schumer of the Psychology department who, although he has occasionally been critical of student actions, has always presented valid arguments and constructive thoughts.

Among the innovations for this year we have planned a pre-conference meeting to be held in the Student Union ballroom on Sunday, October 15 at 7:00 P.M. This meeting will center around the various points which are felt to be worthy of discussion at the conference. Although primarily for student, administrative, and faculty delegates, all members of the University community are invited to attend this and express what they feel may be important to the Conference meetings.

Lastly, the SWAP committee plans not only to organize this conference but to evolve into a permanent organization to follow up on the conference's proposals. It will then direct these into the proper channels so that action may be taken on them and changes made.

To reiterate, SWAP is a unique opportunity to critically examine our environment within the University. Plans can be made and in time results can be achieved. This conference can be a time for close interaction between students, faculty, and administrators on a personal level that is rarely achieved at institutions of this size. It will be a success if we work to make it all that it can be. SWAP is for your benefit.

Only if your opinions regarding the needs of the University are made known can they be acted upon. Therefore, we ask that you seek out the delegates from the organizations in which you are a member to tell them what you want. With your help SWAP will be a success and in turn will help you.

SWAP Committee 1967

Campus Comment

To the Editor:

It has become apparent to me, through eating at the dining commons #5 in South West, that the quality and desirability of a great many meals presently being provided are definitely not palatable to myself and a large number of students to whom I have spoken. This porblem is not only confined within the South West Residential College but also is in existence at the other two dining facilities of the University.

On Tuesday, September 26, I organized a student movement within this residential community in order to more dramatically and effectively present the problem is not only confined within the One might now ask that if the condition of the food is so wretched at times, why then is it not already evident to the students?

This is quite simple to answer. In reference to the article printed in the Collegian of this date by Mr. Tim Roche, Mr. Roche states, "out of a student population of 13,000 we are having a hard time g ing enough candidates to hold election Analogous to this statement is the fact that no one seems to care about the affairs on this campus, and those that do, have a very hard time getting supportors to back their differences.

This is another goal of the Students for Better Food (S.B.F.)—to get the students of this university riled enough to take a stand and not to remain apathetic to existing conditions. Today the vanguard of the S.B.F. moved forward toward our goals. We presented petitions to the students entering dining commons #5 and #7.

Stated in general terms were the two main ideals of our cause; better prepared meals and more of a variety of meals. By gathering together a large number of signatures we are now able to present our ideas with concrete evidence of the discontent which exists among the students toward the preparation and service of commons food.

The S.B.F. is not against the administration, or the dining commons staff or for that matter the Food Services. Simply stated, we resent being served food which is distasteful and unappetizing. I am positive that the quality of the food is of a high calibre but evidently the standard of preparation needs to be raised to the point where the students will enjoy their meals and not eat just as a means of subsistence.

Carl Weinstein
Chairman of the S.B.F.

Dump-Johnson Groups Emerge

Although hundreds of college student body presidents and editors signed anti-Johnson petitions this summer, an informal CPS survey of groups likely to promote such a campaign reveals that there are individual state efforts but nothing on a national level.

The group most likely to form such a movement is the Alternative Candidate Task-force, known as ACT '68, which got its start at last month's National Student Association Congress when 500 delegates, many of them student body presidents, signed an anti-LBJ petition. Later 100 college editors at the U.S. Student Press Association Congress also signed the petition. It was hoped that the effort would become a national anti-Johnson campaign.

But Sam Brown, a Harvard Divinity School student who took over ACT '68 after he was narrowly defeated for the presidency of NSA, says his group is almost defunct as a national movement. "We have decided that the shape action will take has to be determined in the individual states," says Brown. "What we want to do is energize groups to start working in the states." Brown says student groups working to "dump Johnson" have already been formed in New York and Wisconsin, and that a group will probably be set up in California soon.

David Hawk, who is working full-time in New York for ACT '68 and the Campus Coordinating Organization founded by the group of student body presidents that sent a letter to the President last spring calling an end to the war in Vietnam, says the problem is money. He believes ACT '68 will survive, however. Hawk said ACT '68 has been offered funds by supporters of Gen. James Gavin, but has turned them down. "We don't want to be tied to a particular candidate," he says.

Campus Americans for Democratic Action (CADA), a group that virtually disappeared last year when some members of the national board quit, is attempting to get started again this year. It may not be able to use a call for Johnson's defeat as a drawing card, however.

Last week, ADA, the campus group's parent organization, voted down a "dump Johnson" resolution at a national board meeting in Washington.

When asked if that vote would hamper CADA's freedom, the group's national chairman, Elliott Abrams of Harvard, said "we will not be eunuchs." Craig Pregillus, national director of CADA, said Abrams' statement meant that CADA would remain flexible on the question of a "dump Johnson" program. "We can't officially endorse a 'dump Johnson' program," he explained, "but that doesn't mean that CADA people won't participate in such programs on individual campuses."

Pregillus indicated that the question of CADA's freedom to work against Johnson in spite of the parent organization's policy would be debated at the CADA's national board meeting October 21. Meanwhile, the group that was established last year by dissatisfied CADA board members, the Independent Student Union (ISU), is in the process of folding. A call to the organization's New York office revealed that ISU has effectively gone out of existence.

Although students today don't donate free hours of work, they do work at the University and last year 2,500 men and women received more than $500,000 for work done; approximately 5,000 students received scholarships and loans.

Of course financial aid was available a century ago too. Robert W. Lyman of Easthampton, a member of the first class, received $51 annually from the Hampshire, Franklin, Hampden Agricultural Society; enough to finance his tuition and room rent.

The freshman curriculum for those first students in 1867 was broad in scope and very demanding. Algebra, human anatomy and physiology, chemical physics, geometry, French, chemistry and botany were the basic courses offered during the first year. Agricultural material was presented during work sessions on the farm by Professor Levi Stockbridge.

The words of the first President, Henry Flagg French are as apt today as they were then: "Massachusetts, the prolific mother of teachers, can do no nobler work for education and humanity, than to send through our wide borders, these heralds of her great ideas of liberty, equality and the dignity of labor. Let our motto still be Progress; and let us pursue our study beyond the mere instruction of classes in their prescribed course, and endeavor by careful experiment in the field and careful investigation in the study and the laboratory, to make discoveries in science, and to enlarge the boundaries of existing knowledge, fixing no limits to our researches but the limits of finite intelligence."

on such a large scale."

The original charge of the provost for University College was given to the committee in March, 1966. The outline recommended "that the new residential complex for 5,000 students planned for 1969 be organized as a separate college."

According to the original outline, University College will have "its own separate, independent faculty with its own dean reporting directly to the provost and thence to the president."

Classrooms, faculty offices, living quarters for students and faculty, dining hall and library will be located in the same unit. University College, according to the outline, "will be coeducational and each of its component residential units or colleges will be coeducational."

The curriculum, Dr. Havard said, will involve "more independent study, giving students breadth plus careful depth study."

As the original 1966 outline described the curriculum, "there will be more reliance on discussion courses, fewer formal class meetings, greater emphasis on the writing of papers, more stress on concepts and ideas and less concern for details, and longer reading periods. The central emphasis of the faculty will be on teaching and the central emphasis of the students will be on independent study."

The concept of University College, therefore, provides the many advantages of the small college with its intimate contact between students and faculty, while at the same time offering the great resources of a university.

The Committee to Plan the Academic Program of University College consists of William C. Havard, chairman, Government Dept.; George R. Richason, Jr., Chemistry Dept.; Joseph S. Marcus, Engineering School; Robert L. Stern, Music Dept.; Leon O. Barron, English Dept.; Jack A. Posin, Russian Dept.; Donald Fairbairn, Zoology Dept.; Henry G. Jacob, Math Dept.; and Kenneth J. Suid, secretary.

WMUA Plans Expanded Facilities and Coverage

by Janice Alberghene

WMUA is more than the sound of music.

Guided by its new policy of more school involvement and community service, WMUA has expanded its facilities and programs. An increased budget and new equipment have made possible new shows plus expansion of old ones.

WMUA's program expansion has two facets, according to Hamilton Agnew, chief engineer. The first of these is the introduction of entirely new programs. The Children's Hour, on Saturday morning from 9 to 10, is an experiment in community involvement. The program consists of taped recordings of children's stories. WMUA is apt to salute hope that the program will progress to original taped stories and to live readings.

In another field, a joint effort with Amherst College's WAMF is planned. This show will deal with controversial subjects and will alternate in broadcasting from Amherst College and UMass. Campus Politics, a half-hour program dealing with UMass; is also planned and the sports department has a new 15-minute taped pre-game show.

The expansion of WMUA's established programs, said Agnew is no less diversified. WMUA is presently attempting to reactivate the old Redmen network for UMass. basketball. Action '67, on Tuesdays at 7 p.m. has sharpened its critical outlook. The classical music department is presenting twice a week the premiere in the Amherst area of works such as Mahler's Youth's Magic Horn. Increased coverage of lectures, some of them live, is also expected.

Budget expansion from $9,000 to $29,000 makes possible WMUA's "new emphasis", Agnew said. New equipment including a $450 portable tape recorder, production facility control cabinets, two new turntables, stationary tape recorder and $2,650 control board are turning WMUA from a set of crowded rooms at the Engineering Building into a recording and broadcasting studio. WMUA's new production room features the pre-recording and construction of more technically sophisticated shows. A just-installed direct line to Southwest allows live coverage of events there.

STEVE WONDER—UMass soph Steve Parnell (21) tries to outmaneuver Dartmouth's Jim Burke (8) and Vic Chaltain (44) during one of his long returns in Saturday's 28-10 loss to the Big Green at the Stadium. Parnell returned four kick-offs for 113 yards and four punts for 58 yards, including a 58-yard jaunt to set up the lone Redman touchdown.

UMass Omitted in Weekly Picks

Connecticut quarterback Pete Petrillo, Rhode Island linebacker Ken Kuzman and New Hampshire linebacker Dick Gordon have been chosen as the top offensive, defensive and sophomore players in the Yankee Conference for their performances last Saturday.

Petrillo, a 6' 180-pound junior, guided Connecticut to a 17-6 opening game win at Vermont. He completed five of eight passes for 56 yards, carried 16 times for 69 yards and scored both UConn touchdowns. Kuzman is a 6' 190-pound junior who was the outstanding player on the field as Rhode Island got its second straight win with a 12-8 decision over Brown. Gordon, starting at left linebacker in his varsity debut, intercepted a Colby pass, returned it for a 40-yard touchdown and batted down two other aerials.

Other nominations included—offense — end Gene Benner (Maine), halfback Bill Phillips (New Hampshire), quarterback Paul Simpson (Vermont), end, Frank Geiselman (Rhode Island) and quarterback Greg Landry (Massachusetts); defense: linebacker Ernie Smith (UMass) and halfback Steve Parnell (UMass).

A powerful QTV tipped PSD 27-14, while SAM took PSK 20-14. PMD ran away from TKE, 26-6, and ASP behind the passing and running of Cannatta drubbed AEP, 41-20.

In a battle with rock 'n' roll overtones, Canty's 24 points led the Dell-Vikings over the Association, 37-0. The Flaming A's continued their winning ways by disarming the Knights, 34-13. The Terrors took the Senators, 13-6, and the Huskies lost to the Monuments, 13-6. The Toads behind quarterback Moeghen beat the Rotten-Rosters, 32-7.

Where Have All the Shillings Gone?

would have been us.

We watched last year, and the year before and the year before —right down to the disappointing end. And like the abra cadabra of the magician, we would faithfully chant, "Wait 'till next year."

"Next year" would be the year Stuart would hit all his home runs at the right time, that Yastrzemski would learn how to run bases, that Jerry Stephenson would blaze the trail to first with a 30 game season.

And now it has happened—with slightly different personnel and management—but it has happened. The 1967 Baby Bombers of Boston have given us a pennant. And we watched Sunday's game as we have watched all the others.

But for this game the rec room attendance figures broke all rec room records (with the possible exception of Shindig). Don't get me wrong—I'm glad so many people in a matter of weeks were able to build up so much spirit that could only be released by mass demonstrations, screaming, etc. All the power to them. But when Rico caught that pop-up they couldn't have felt what we felt.

I think the longer you wait for something, the more you savor it once it becomes yours. It's kind of like saving an old bottle of vintage wine for a special occasion and having a few well-meaning friends burst in.

You pour the wine into glasses, and watch them chug down the wine like it was Piel's. But there you stand, crystal glass in hand, meticulously inhaling the aroma of the wine; although your friends are finished, you have not yet even begun to drink. Yet, you have already appreciated the quality and meaning of the wine far more than could your sensualistic friends.

But after the game, I went up to my room, sat quietly, listened to the end of the Detroit game, cast my vote for Red Sox MVP to Don Mincher, and then just sat pensively on my bed, going over the 1961 Sox yearbook. The screams and cheers floated through the screens into my room until about 12:30 a.m.

Then it became quiet. But I had just begun to treasure what had happened. And when they plummet next year, there will once again be those few of us watching in the rec room on Sept. 30. Come down and keep us company, will ya? After the game we can split a bottle of wine.

We started yelling in the days of Zauchin, Consolo, and Klaus. We were cheering more than a decade ago, and it isn't easy to cheer for guys you know are a bunch of losers.

But there was something about the Red Sox.

Yeah, one thing about them was that they always lost. Another was that with each contract, the team members reportedly received annual country club membership cards. They were the envy of every working man in America. The more they lazed, the more Uncle Tom seemed to reward them in dollars and pennies. Some Bosoxer always won some individual crown or other; no Bosoxer knew how to hit to the right side to sacrifice a runner up.

But it was the crown winners—and not the sacrificers—who were annually rewarded by Uncle Tom.

Still we — and there are relatively few of us—still loved them.

We listened to John Kiley on the organ welcome Leo Kiely on the mound. We winced as Bill Renna gazed skyward as a Mike Fornieles pitch sailed into the Boston clouds and Al Forrester drove out to get bullpen ace Nelson Chittum. We sympathized with Gary Geiger's stomach, loved Joe Ginsburg's two game-winning singles, thought we had it made when, as late as the second week in April, Carroll Hardy was still in the running for the triple crown.

And oh—who could ever forget Rip Repulski's first time at bat. Or that eight-run ninth when Pag hit a slam with two out to win it.

Ted Williams said Ron Jackson couldn't miss, remember? Frank Malzone had to set a record for pop-ups to the left side with runners on base.

And Chuck Schilling—was he or was he not our second baseman for the next 15 years? Where have all the Schillings gone? Probably with the Mejiases, the Schwalls, the Radatzes, and the Rohrs.

We have waited. Patiently. We have loved Carl Yastrzemski, Dalton Jones and Jim Lonborg like they were our own brothers, our wives, our selves. But we felt this same way last year too. I mean had the Sox finished ninth again this year, you would have seen maybe three or four guys watching the game in each rec room (if they could win out over the Giant fans); these guys

BOSTON (AP)—The St. Louis Cardinals, who breezed to the National League pennant, ruled the favorites over the Cinderella Kids from Boston in the World Series that opens Wednesday at old Fenway Park with Bob Gibson of the Cards facing Jose Santiago, a refugee from Boston's bullpen.

The Red Sox returned to this planet Monday after an overnight journey on a pink cloud of bubbling enthusiasm and faced the future with optimism. As a club that moved from ninth to first in one season, they were not awed by the odds favoring the Cardinals.

Santiago, a 27-year-old Puerto Rican, was the only Red Sox to suit up at Fenway Monday. The Kansas City castoff who graduated from the relief ranks in the second half of the season, threw for 10 minutes and ran for 20 minutes in the outfield, accompanied by his 2½-year-old son, Alex.

The other Red Sox wandered into the clubhouse, one by one, pinching themselves to be sure they really were in the Series for the first time since 1946.

Dick Williams, the rookie manager who is almost certain to be named "Manager of the Year" in the American League, gave the players a day off after the dramatic Sunday game in which they clinched the pennant by beating Minnesota, 5-3. Williams and the athletes waited in the ball park for three hours until Detroit's defeat in the second game had ruled out any chance of a tie and a playoff.

Williams called a morning meeting Tuesday at which the four scouts who have been trailing the relaxed Cardinals will make their reports and recommendations. Boston will work out at 11 a.m., EDT, and the Cardinals, who flew in late Monday, are due to see Fenway and the "Green Monster," as the handy left field wall is known, Tuesday afternoon.

Buddy LeRoux, Boston trainer, said second baseman Jerry Adair, spiked Sunday, will be able to play Wednesday. Adair was gashed on the left shin while completing a double play, a wound that required seven stitches. Mike Andrews will take his place if he can't make it.

Although Williams said he would not announce a definite line-up until Tuesday, it was believed he would play the same men who opened against the Twins Sunday. That would mean Adair at second, Dalton Jones at third, and Ken Harrelson in right field and Russ Gibson catching.

Happy Jose, Clutch Hurler in Drive Toward Flag, Faces Toughest Test

BOSTON (AP)—Jose Santiago, a laughing boy who becomes serious on the mound abandons the bullpen once again for the biggest test of his career—opening the World Series for the Boston Red Sox.

Santiago, an unheralded member of the Boston pitching staff most of the season, beamed proudly Monday after he was named to start against the St. Louis Cardinals Wednesday at Fenway Park.

"This is a great honor," the 27-year-old right-hander from Puerto Rico said. "It's the biggest thing that ever has happened to me."

Acquired from the Kansas City farm system for $50,000 for the end of the 1965 season, Santiago was a pleasant surprise in posting a 12-13 record for the ninth place Red Sox last year.

He got off to a slow start this year, having to overcome a minor ailment in his pitching arm, and then was shipped to the bullpen as a long relief specialist. He has started just 11 games while appearing in 50.

In the final two weeks, Santiago was used both in relief and as a starter as Boston Manager Dick Williams ran out of reliable hurlers in the run for the American League pennant.

On a crucial road trip, he won two games as a reliever in Detriot Sept. 18 and 19. Then he came back as a starter and took a 10-3 decision at Baltimore on Sept. 22.

Jose was belted for three runs on a pair of homers in two innings of relief against Cleveland last Tuesday.

"I had nothing," he explained. "When I don't have my stuff or I'm tired, I tell the manager. I don't try to kid anybody. And against Cleveland my pitches didn't do a thing."

Williams showed his faith in Santiago—sending him back out as a starter in an all-or-nothing game against Minnesota Saturday. The hurler settled down after a shaky start and justified Williams' confidence.

He allowed only two runs on seven hits before tiring in the eighth. Gary Bell, a regular starter, finished, preserving Santiago's 12th victory in 16 starts.

CARDS LIST HUGHES (16-6), BRILES (14-5)

ST. LOUIS (AP)—The long wait is over.

"It'll be Bob Gibson, Dick Hughes and Nelson Briles, pitching the first three games," Manager Red Schoendienst of the St. Louis Cardinals said Monday as his National League champions prepared for a late evening charter flight to Boston and Wednesday's first game of the 1967 World Series.

For two weeks, the Cardinals have known they were in the Series, but they weren't sure until late Sunday when or where it would be played.

The Cardinal skipper plans a workout Tuesday in Boston's Fenway Park. He said the club, which won its 101st game of the season Sunday at Atlanta, is in good physical condition for the Series.

Briles, who has won nine straight games and is 14-5 on the season, gave up four hits Sunday in a warmup at Atlanta. He had a 10-2 as a starter after appearing in 35 games in relief early in the season.

Gibson, the Series veteran who bounced back from a broken leg at midseason, pitched Friday night in Atlanta, allowing eight hits in nine innings. He has a 13-7 season's record. Hughes is the team's top winner, 16-6.

Gibson, Briles and Hughes are right-handers.

As for the Red Sox, Schoendienst said, "They've got good hitting and pitching." He noted the American League champions have only three left-handers on their pitching staff but said he didn't feel that would be too important in a short series. The Cardinals faced more than their share of left-handers during the regular season.

Senate Sidesteps Issue Of Capital Punishment

BOSTON (AP)—The Massachusetts Senate sidestepped the issue Monday and voted to submit to the voters the question of abolition of capital punishment.

Up for action was a proposal to create a special commission to study whether the death penalty is a deterrent to murder.

On motion of Sen. Mary L. Fonseca, D-Fall River, the measure was amended on a roll call vote of 18-14 to send the question to the ballot in a referendum.

The House already has passed the bill to set up the commission requested by Gov. John A. Volpe to make the study.

Proposals for a study or for modification of the death penalty law twice have been rejected in this year's session of the legislature.

There are nine men condemned to death for murder currently being held at Walpole State Prison.

Eight of the cases involve the slayings of policemen.

Politella To Coordinate Free Press Commission

By RICHARD LANE
Staff Reporter

Dr. Dario Politella, associate professor of journalistic studies at the University of Massachusetts, has announced plans for the first meeting of a newly formed national collegiate press studies commission.

The Commission on the Freedoms and Responsibilities of the College Student Press in America (CFRCSPA), with Politella as coordinator, is slated to meet October 21, in Chicago.

The meeting coincides with the annual conference of the National Collegiate Press and National Council of College Publications Advisers (NCCPA). Attendance includes 1,200 student editors and faculty advisers.

Charged with "formulating guidelines for the conduct of the student press by students, faculty and administrators" the commission was established as a two year study program by the NCCPA at its national convention in Philadelphia last year.

Among the specific aspects being taken up by the Commission are: conditions of "freedom of student press" in America; need, desirability and function of publications boards and faculty advisers; and such matters as legal and ethical responsibility of student press staffs and administrators.

Dr. Politella summed up the project's ideal goal as, "To come up with a Bill of Rights for the student press which will be universally acceptable to student journalists and their faculty friends."

At its Chicago meeting, the Commission will be concerned primarily with organization. A project board of 30 prominent members will be established to publish a final report of the Commission. An advisory board and volunteer staff will also be set up.

Support for the program's work has come from 14 nationally recognized organizations, among them the American Civil Liberties Union, Association of American Colleges and a number of national journalism honorary societies.

Several prominent authors, college administrators and journalism educators, including Dr. Politella, who is NCCPA president, are offering assistance.

A campaign is being carried on by Politella to raise money for the commission's work. The University of Massachusetts educator stated that $75,000 is being sought. The first $1,000 came from the Reader's Digest Foundation.

In return for all support, the Commission has pledged "yeoman effort to produce the critically needed guidelines to the students, faculties and administrators concerned with publication on the American campuses."

As part of a local relationship between the University and the Commission, Dr. Politella said that he plans to discuss with the University Student Publications Commission its cooperation on the project.

Blasko Discusses Campus Police

By RICHARD LANE
Staff Reporter

"Never a dull moment."

That's how University of Massachusetts Police Chief Alexander Blasko described the routine of his force on campus.

"There's never a dull moment, day or night. The weekends are worse, with more people," said the Chief.

A veteran of more than 12 years at UMass, he was referring to the increase of the student body, faculty and staff to an approximate campus population of 20,000 this semester.

Because of this increased number, the force has added four officers who will soon join the present force of 14 regulars.

The four, all experienced, are Officers Scott (Braintree), Talbot (Williamsett), Shearer (Colrain) and Rogata (Hadley).

They are to report for duty this fall after attending the Massachusetts State Police Academy in Framingham.

The 14-man force covers the entire campus, a "must" according to the Chief. Commenting on the increase to 18, he said: "As any other police chief, I always feel I need more help, to cope with more problems. It is quite a campus and takes every man and more at times."

The chief pointed out that the campus has the additional help of 20 fire and traffic officers, 10 night watchmen and eight security guards. These men are equipped with four sedan squad cars with two-way radios.

UMass police have complete authority on campus and each officer is sworn in as a special policeman of Amherst. The two departments, the chief added, maintain 100% cooperation, which includes among other things use of the Amherst jail for all campus arrests.

"Unregistered cars are the biggest problem," said Blasko. According to policy, these cars must be towed and the owners are only "hurting themselves".

Another parking problem arises out of the lack of space and construction going on at the University. The chief revealed that many students have resorted to leaving their cars on Amherst side streets, such as Lincoln and Sunset. This is turn presents a fire safety problem for the authorities.

As a direct result Blasko has warned students not to park in these unauthorized areas and that new parking tow zones may be set up.

"No one is happy," he said, "but towing is the only answer."

Regarding thefts, Blasko declared that as the national average has risen, so has the number on campus in recent years. He cited dorms, sororities, dances and state lab equipment as targets.

The chief emphasizes strongly to all students to "keep rooms locked at all times when not present. Never expose money or articles of value. And report all strangers to police."

It's "their university" and students should "be proud to be cooperative students".

Summing up his opinion of the students he protects, Chief Blasko commented that as a whole they are "good students".

"It's the same as in any city; as individuals you couldn't find any better. There's always a small 3-5% that's bad, such as an occasional fraternity way out in left field every so often," he added.

But, he concluded, "I won't part with my students. I'll take them in preference to others any day."

Kuchel and Symington Offer Plans For Vietnam Cease-fire

The Senate got conflicting advice on Vietnam Tuesday. Sen. Stuart Symington, D-Mo., proposed a U.S. cease-fire to test Hanoi's war or peace intentions.

Sen. Thomas H. Kuchel, R-Calif., opposed any unilateral standdown.

Symington, an Armed Services committeeman, told the Senate the United States should go beyond a mere halt in the bombing of North Vietnam and suspend all military operations in both the North and South on a fixed date.

If the Communists did not respond with similar action and with offers to talk, he said this country would be free to "pursue this war in any manner of its own choosing."

Kuchel, the assistant GOP Senate leader, said the United States cannot be expected to "declare a unilateral standdown that would permit the North Vietnamese unilaterally to improve their positions," particularly in the hotly contested demilitarized zone area.

Kuchel told his colleagues that Hanoi has been denied a military victory and thus is counting on "our moral paralysis in the face of mounting pressure for peace" to win a political victory. He warned against abandoning American commitments in Asia.

"It is far too late in the day to throw away what free people have fought valiantly to achieve in Southeast Asia," Kuchel said. "America must not sully her commitment to the security of free Asia by groping for a nameless settlement . . .

"In our zealous quest for a speedy end to all hostilities there we must not be blind to the indispensable necessity that the peace we seek to achieve must be just and enduring."

Symington, a former Air Force secretary, was asked in an interview if his proposal represented a change in his basic position that there should be intensified bombing of vital military targets in North Vietnam, a stance that has caused him to be labeled a hawk.

His answer: All of the testimony from civilians and military leaders that I have been able to gather here and in my frequent visits to Vietnam is that the bombing pauses, particularly in the TET holiday early this year, have resulted in many more killings in South Vietnam.

The basis of this current stream of requests for stopping the bombing is that action of this kind will bring Ho Chi Minh to the conference table. If we stop all fighting, won't he be even more inclined to talk? The thrust of my proposals is to test Ho's intentions thoroughly.

No Budget Cut-No Tax Boost

A fiscally worried House refused Tuesday to order President Johnson to cut the budget, but indirectly told him that if he doesn't it won't consider his tax boost request.

The dual action came on the House floor and in its taxwriting Ways and Means Committee.

The House sent to the Senate by voice vote a bill to provide temporary financing, until Oct. 10, for more than a score of federal agencies which technically went broke last Saturday midnight. Their money for the fiscal year that started July 1 is tied up in pending appropriation bills.

But first the House turned back, 213 to 205, a Republican drive to add to the financing measure a mandate to the President to cut at least $5 billion from the current fiscal year budget. This was a reversal of last Thursday's 202-182 vote that recommitted another temporary financing bill because it didn't include a spending—cut angle.

While the House was engaged in debate over whether the President or Congress should take the lead in cutting spending, the Ways and Means Committee, by a 20-5 vote, laid aside consideration of the President's tax increase proposal "until such time as the President and the Congress reach an understanding" on budget cutting.

Such an "understanding" may be reached before the end of this month, for the Senate is expected to extend the life of the House-passed temporary financing bill to Oct. 31 or longer.

That would give the House Appropriations Committee more time to work on the promise of its chairman, Rep. George H. Mahon, D-Tex., to review past and current appropriations with the hope of cutting back money available to the President for spending.

Enemy Pilots Improve In Vietnam War

Air Force Col. Robin Olds, an Air ace of the Vietnam war, said Monday the pilots flying for North Vietnam have improved sharply during the past year.

Olds said he did not know whether any Viet Cong, Chinese or North Koreans were in the cockpits, but "something happened up there."

"What happened, I don't know," he said. "But whatever happened, they're a hell of a lot better than what was up there last fall."

Olds, who flew 152 missions in Vietnam and is credited with shooting down four North Vietnamese MIG fighter planes, spoke with newsmen after visiting President Johnson.

Olds said the only way to end the Vietnam war is to win it and added, "I think we're winning. We're now gaining the momentum."

The bombing of North Vietnam is hurting the enemy, he said.

"Every time targets open up that were not available before we hit them," he said. "The reaction of the North Vietnamese was quite obvious. He got angry."

Olds assumes command of cadets at the Air Force Academy on Nov. 1.

RALLY AGAINST ROTC

There will be a rally at 6:30 P.M. this Thursday at Dickinson Hall in support of the following petition. You may sign this petition at the Students for Political Action literature table in the Student Union main lobby today and Thursday from 9 A.M. to 4 P.M.

We, the undersigned members of the University of Massachusetts community, demand the abolition of academic credit for ROTC and AFROTC, and the use of University facilities for non-student National Guard and Reserve Officer training for the following reasons:

(1) Non-student and veteran reserve officers are now using ROTC facilities for combat training.

(2) ROTC and AFROTC are anti-intellectual due to the totalitarian nature of the military establishment. The training of reserve officers for combat duty does not deserve the endorsement of the administration in the form of academic credit.

(3) ROTC and AFROTC encourage blind obedience to government policy on the part of ROTC students.

(4) ROTC and AFROTC encourage military solutions to world social and political problems.

Incentive Pay Bill Defeated

Incentive pay for student leaders at this University is dead for this year but a Senate committee head hopes to revive the issue next spring.

Last May the Student Senate defeated a bill that proposed monetary compensation for Collegian and Index editors, WMUA managers and Senate officers.

This bill, one of the most thoroughly considered to reach the Senate floor in the 1966-67 school year, was defeated by a vote of 18 to 20 (23 votes were needed to pass it). It was presented by the Subcommittee on Incentive Pay for Students, along with an extensive report.

"Incentive pay is feasible with the student tax as it is," According to Jim Moran, chairman of the Senate's Finance Committee. He also said that some schools receive an allotment for student incentive pay from the administration. "I have a feeling that this bill will be defeated again this year, if brought up," he said.

The 1966-67 bill would have paid $600 each publications to the editors-in-chief, radio station manager and to the Senate president. Other officers in these organizations would have received various sums ranging from $150 to $400.

Last fall, a subcommittee, including Pat Petow, was formed to research incentive pay at other colleges and to poll students and faculty at UMass. Of the 42 colleges that returned the questionnaires only seven—had no incentive pay for their editors. The average total paid was about $4,400. An average of 9.7 editors were paid an average of $452 on each of these newspapers. The students and faculty interviewed at UMass were divided in opinions.

Peace Corps representatives will be recruiting all this week in S.U. lobby. A half hour program is planned for Thursday evening on WMUA.

Ted Kennedy Favors City Aid

U.S. Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., said Monday programs to aid America's cities should not be cut or delayed because of the cost of the war in Vietnam.

Kennedy, speaking at a local Democratic dinner, said Americans lack the will, not the money to provide needed education, medical and welfare programs for urban areas.

"We hear we must hold up these programs for Vietnam," Kennedy said. 'I do not agree. We have an obligation to the security and opportunity of our people here in the United States."

"I believe our police forces need bigger operating budgets, more equipment, higher pay and more training," he said. "We need to improve the lot of our police. They have an important job to do."

Senate Public Relations Committee Plans Weekly Column in Collegian

The curiosity of some of the more observant members of the campus may have been aroused by the increasing appearance of the name of the Student Senate Public Relations Committee in the Massachusetts Daily Collegian. In the realm of student services, the committee proposes to be a jack-of-all-trades, prepared to find some kind of an answer to any legitimate problem, whether it concerns the conditions in Greenough dormitory or information on running a successful campaign for campus office.

As additional evidence of its sincerity, the committee is also planning to initiate a regular column to appear eevry Wednesday in the Collegian, which will briefly outline the items of major interest and importance listed on the agenda for the upcoming Wednesday night meeting of the Student Senate. The purpose of this service to the university is actually another facet of the theme stressed by the committee. It will inform and emphasize the matter of student concern to be discussed by the Senate each week.

UMass students will no longer be able to plead lack of information and communication as a stand-by excuse for non-participation in campus government. Each undergraduate on this campus is represented by a senator to whom he should make known his views on any issue which concerns directly or indirectly and few will not concern him. The Senate meeting itself is open to anyone who wishes to attend.

Left without valid reason for a non-active status, the choice remaining will be simplified to a question of putting up or shutting up. Either students must in some capacity, however small, enter the ranks of those involved in student government—risking the embarrassment of university-wide publicity and perhaps even tangible accomplishments — or they must cease complaining when the time is already past when something might and should have been done or said about it.

The meeting of the Student Senate on October 3 will begin at six o'clock with an orientation for the newly elected senators. After the swearing in, the regular meeting will start at seven.

Symbols

"If a man does not keep pace with his companions, perhaps it is because he hears a different drummer." When Thoreau wrote these lines, he had in mind a symbol far off in the expanse of mind and close to the realm of dreams — hope.

Throughout literature, hope as a symbol has taken different forms. William Wordsworth, in Michael, points to the cottage as the symbol that the old man is still alive, still hopes for his son's return. John Keats, in To Autumn, uses the last lines:

Hedge-crickets sing; and now with treble soft
The red-breast whistles from a garden-croft;
And gathering swallows twitter in the skies.

as the statement that Autumn is going and finally goes, and the birds could be leaving, but "gathering swallows twitter in the skies" doesn't say that they are leaving, specifically. There is the element of return in the ambiguity. Hence the hope in Autumn, jumping the gap of Winter, of Spring. Is the distant green light in The Great Gatsby a hope symbol? In Franny and Zooey, J. D. Salinger uses Zooey to say that the fat lady in the audience, never visible, is hope. One should live for the fat lady.

It is not necessary to know the full context of these hope symbols. They stand alone. Their authors intended that we take out their symbols and apply them to our lives.

Wordsworth built the story of Michael around the cottage; it didn't slip in accidentally. The poem begins and ends with the symbol. Keat's poem is about the present and the future at the same time, the beauty and the truth, tension and hope. And the whole of Salinger's book builds up to the fat lady in the audience. Salinger has also written a story about the absence of hope — despair — leading to suicide.

Memory plus hope equals the tension between the past and the future that creates the present and that can extend life or destroy it. If you have no memory, you are an idiot. If you have no hope, you are dead.

Consider that date next weekend. What are you hoping for? Are you hoping to be surprised in Drum's next lecture? What more can he do besides cut off a rat's head?

If you daydream in class, at least you know you're alive and well.

It has occurred to me that Thoreau could have said "distant drummer" and that the poetic tension and overall effect would have been more meaningful. But that is all right. There will be other people to say other things. Bob Dylan and the Beatles are saying them now, making for us a past, a present, and a future. The inner music of a man, to dream.

Thanks

We wish to express our thanks to everyone! Boston won the pennant . . . a cause worthy of our celebration. Gang, thanks for turning out. And thank you for being so orderly. Yes, we leaped and screamed, started a bonfire, took over Amherst center, and united with Amherst College; but in the midst of our victorious folly, there was no major damage and above all, no injuries to speak of . . . We were orderly.

We wish to extend special thanks to the Amherst Fire department who had been called to douse the bonfire. They recognized our celebration as such and not as an act of vandalism. Great thanks indeed go to the town of Amherst Police dept. who also recognized our "parade" of happy U-mies to be an ovation for our Boys in Boston, and not a malicious riot. And finally, thanks to those members of the UMass faculty and residents of Amherst who joined our short, peaceful, praising salute to a truly great team.

When Boston wins the series over St. Louis, we're sure the response will be just as tremendous. As long as we are orderly, our victory festivities will not be interrupted. So let's go gang! We've got a crack at the series and we're going to win!

Dead or Alive

To the editor:

Recently, a friend of mine on campus was ordered to remove a sign from her window which read "God is not dead, he is unemployed". The southwest council deemed it "Improper" because "someone might object". The objection is someone might think about it and come to a personal conclusion concerning the concept of God.

Objection! People aren't supposed to think; especially about God. The goal is to accept without thinking. The two previous sentences are absurd. The action of the council so absurd. Now, concerning the thought process, I offer the following: big, small; high, low; wide, narrow; soft, rough; action, reaction; pleasant, unpleasant; happy, sad; love, fear; hope, despair; humility, contempt; instinct, reason; create, destroy; past, future; all, nothing; now, then; life, death; conscious, unconscious; ego, self. Who Are You In There?

Thomas Hughes '68

P.S. God may or may not be dead, but if the above did not cause you to employ thought, that is, if you breezed over the paired words and, especially, if you ignored the question, you, my friend, are dead.

Ed. note: The Board of Trustees ruled during the summer that signs in the windows of Southwest dorms had to be removed.

Revelling

To the Editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to thank the UMass Scrolls. When Adelphia found itself in a real "mess" at the Rally-Dance Friday night, these lovely lasses gallantly came to the rescue. Eight Charming Scrolls worked quite hard and, in some cases, quite long selling tickets and stamping hands for the dance.

I believe the dance was a social success and, if I am correct, a great deal of credit must go to the scrumptious Scrolls.

Ladies, the gentlemen of Adelphia offer their warmest thanks.

Dirksen, Fulbright Clash In Senate Vietnam Debate

Sens. Everett M. Dirksen, R-Ill., and J. W. Fulbright, D-Ark., clashed heatedly Tuesday over whether a Communist takeover of Asia hinges on the outcome of the Vietnam war.

Dirksen, the Republican leader and defender of President Johnson's Asian policies, and Fulbright, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee and a critic of the President's policies, climaxed a day of explosive debate over Vietnam.

In a dramatic, arm-waving speech, Dirksen told the Senate that the defense of South Vietnam is essential to the security of the United States. If Vietnam falls, he said, the shadow of Communism will darken all Asia.

"Then the whole Pacific coastline of the United States is exposed," he said.

Rising directly across the center aisle, Fulbright replied softly "I don't agree at all."

He argued that the security of this country lies at home and elsewhere in the world, not in Vietnam. He said continuing the war will weaken the United States at home and lessen its ability to defend its own security.

Sen. Stuart Symington, D-Mo., sparked the debate with a proposal for a U.S. cease-fire to test Hanoi's peace intentions.

Sen. Thomas H. Kuchel of California, Dirksen's GOP leadership assistant, quickly opposed any American "standdown that would permit the North Vietnamese unilaterally to improve their position" while the United States grounded its planes and silenced its guns.

Dirksen said the Communists mean to liquidate the freedom of South Vietnam. If they do, he said, "our flank will be turned."

Fulbright challenged Dirksen's assertion that the loss of South Vietnam would force the United States to bring its western defense line to a point "'between Alaska and Hawaii and then San Francisco and Los Angeles."

Dirksen and Sens. George Murphy, R-Calif., and Democratic Sens. Henry M. Jackson and Warren G. Magnuson of Washington rallied behind Kuchel's assertion that the United States must not abandon its Asian commitments.

They supported his declaration that this country must not "throw away what free people have fought valiantly to achieve in Southeast Asia" by accepting some "nameless settlement" to end the conflict.

Fulbright backed Symington's call for a suspension of all American military operations on a fixed date, to learn if Hanoi would respond.

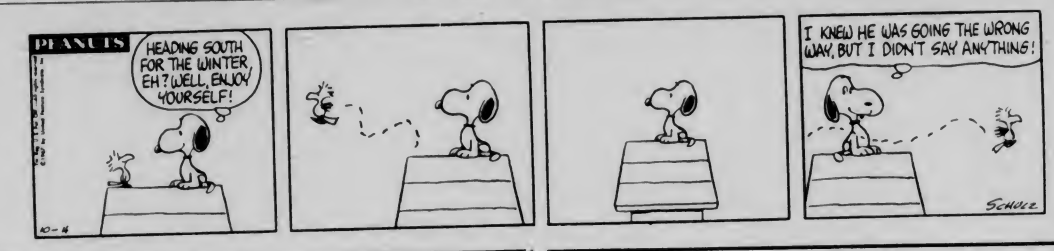
Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield of Montana and Sen. Thruston B. Morton, R-Ky. who have advocated suspension of the bombing of North Vietnam as a means to getting negotiations started, said they were not advocating that air support be denied to troops under fire—something Kuchel said should not happen to the Marines at Con Thien.

Outstanding Soph Cadet Selected

Cadet Sgt. Michael A. Taupier, 2nd Plt., D Company, has been selected as the outstanding sophomore cadet of the week for the Army ROTC Brigade.
Cadet Taupier finished first in a competition involving nearly one hundred other sophomore cadets. His selection was based on his military bearing and his knowledge of drill.

Goldwater Speaks At Salem State

Former Sen. Barry Goldwater said Tuesday that "when the Vietnam war is won, I think you can look forward to a good many years without worrying about any war."



But in a speech at Salem State College, the 1964 Republican presidential candidate also warned that all-out war could break out any day in Korea.

"There have been 28,000 violations of the truce in Korea since the conflict ended in 1953," he said. "The same could happen in Vietnam. We are not fighting the Vietcong, nor the Chinese, nor the Soviet Union. We are fighting the communist ideology.

"I happen to back my president in our action in Vietnam," Goldwater said.

"We have our honor at stake in Vietnam," Goldwater told some 1,000 students and faculty

Drug Abuse Found Widespread in Mass

BOSTON (AP)—Eastern Massachusetts is considered one of the major areas of drug abuse in the country, Richard A. Callahan, New England director of the U.S. Bureau of Drug Abuse Control, said Tuesday.

"The state of California, the section around New York City and Eastern Massachusetts," Callahan said in his first annual report, "seem to be the major hallucinogenic and amphetamine drug abuse areas in the United States."

"Four clandestine laboratories," he said, "were seized when LSD and other hallucinogenics were found to be manufactured illegally on the premises.

"Several secret laboratories were seized which were synthesizing methamphetamine, known to drug abusers as 'speed'," Callahan said. Some $6 million in drugs was seized by the bureau, either on the illegal market or for statute violations.

Spring Communication Symposium Planned

A campus Communication Symposium is being planned under the chairmanship of James Foudy, a senior journalism major who is interested in improving and unifying the existing communication organizations both on campus and in the five-college area.

The Symposium, scheduled for the spring, will be presented in two parts. The first will cover a two-day convocation bringing in the five colleges. The major objective of the program is to try to channel the dialogue into new ideas concerning the problems in communication and possible solutions to these problems, Foudy said.

During this two-day Symposium, a distinguished speaker in the field of communications will give recommendations for improving campus communications.

Supplementing qualified area communications representatives, the main speaker, will preside over work-shops. Being considered for the main speaking role are Fred Friendly, Marshall McLuhan, Walter Cronkite or Gen. David Sarnoff—all of whom are prominent in the field of communications. Foudy hopes the Distinguished Visitors Program will sponsor this speaker and the DVP will be used in coordination with the Symposium.

The second symposium session, which will take place later in the spring, is designed for specific UMass communications media. This one day series of workshops will be planned to coordinate communications media. Primarily, the purpose of this symposium is to create ideas for new publications on campus, to emphasize and strengthen good aspects of current publications and to make plans for their expansion, Foudy reported.

The need for such a symposium came into being, Foudy stated, with the belief of several persons that campus communications have become stagnant, that although the campus itself is expanding, the news media are not meeting the needs of this rapidly growing college community. This includes not only the press and the radio but also literary publications.

Foudy believes that the symposium will give new excitement to communications, that it will raise the human interest necessary to provide for bigger and better public communications. A possible way of creating this excitement may be to unite individuals in communicative organizations who would act as an enthusiastic recruiting group to generate interest in this field, Foudy explained.

Today, he continued, with such a variety of technical improvements, a whole field of exploration is open to campus news media; for example, the possibility of closed circuit television, or a telephone system whereby a person could call a specific number for news information. In relation to the five-college area, the possibility of a single reporter covering a story and teletyping the story to other colleges is a feasable system, he said.

UMass Sox Fan Hurt

A University of Massachusetts student suffered serious injuries Monday when he fell into a sidewalk elevator shaft as he waited for the Fenway Park ticket office to open its sale of World Series tickets.

Police said Thomas Murphy of Lynn, Mass., lifted a cover from the sidewalk-level freight elevator and apparently lost his balance. The elevator is in a building next to the park.

He was with a group of youths who had waited outside Fenway Park all night in hopes of being among the first in line to buy tickets for the opener Wednesday between the St. Louis Cardinals and the Boston Red Sox.

Boston To Be Object of Attack On Unemployment in Slums

The Johnson administration selected five pilot cities from Boston to Los Angeles Tuesday for the start of a new attack on unemployment in the slums, an attack already marked by political overtones.

Two Cabinet officers spelled out details of the plan at a news conference. In another part of town, Sen. Robert F. Kennedy, D-N.Y., welcomed the administration proposal but said his own program is needed also.

There is no disagreement on objectives between Kennedy and the administration—both aim to bring private industry to the slum areas to create jobs. The difference is in method.

Kennedy has introduced legislation to grant tax incentives to businessmen to locate plants in the slums.

The administration opposed this at recent congressional hearings. Under its plan, industries would locate plants in slum areas with the government helping to insure them against risks and making surplus federal property and equipment available for their use.

About $40 million in federal funds would be used to help train slum dwellers for jobs.

Asked why he thought his plan was better, Secretary of Commerce Alexander B. Trowbridge said it is now ready to go, using money and legislative authority already available.

"He believes the private sector has got to be involved," Trowbridge said of Kennedy.

"We are trying to achieve the same objective with existing legislation and money."

Secretary of Labor W. Willard Wirtz, who shared the news conference with Trowbridge, said, "jobs are the live ammunition in the war on poverty." He said current programs will be continued but the new approach will stretch federal money further.

"The center of gravity has shifted overnight to the private sector," Wirtz said. He said the $40 million would be made available from manpower training, economic development, anti-poverty and other federal programs.

Hill Students To See Macbeth

Fifty UMass students will see Shakespeare's Macbeth Saturday afternoon at the American Shakespeare Festival Theatre and Academy in Stratford, Conn.

The students, all residents of the Orchard Hill Complex will leave the resident college parking lot at 9:45 a.m. on chartered Peter Pan buses, arriving at Stratford about 1 p.m. At 1:30, the Theatre and Academy stage will be transformed into the world of Macbeth. By 6:30 the buses will be back in the garage.

Such an adventure costs each student $1.50 — which includes both round trip ticket and admission pass. Such an adventure at such a price is made possible by the Danforth Fund, which has contributed to many of the Hill's social and cultural activities.

The Eugene Field Cultural Program Committee, which is guiding this undertaking, has also arranged two other trips to the Shakespeare Festival Theatre and Academy's A Midsummer Night's Dream and Julius Caesar for later in the year.

Africans Visit Deerfield Acad.

Twelve French-speaking African students from the Ivory Coast and Malagasy, now completing agricultural training at the University of Massachusetts, will visit Deerfield Academy Wednesday, Oct. 4.

Dr. Frank L. Boyden, Deerfield's internationally - known headmaster and chairman of the UMass Board of Trustees, has invited the Africans to visit the academy and dine with faculty and students, and attend Dr. Boyden's evening meeting with students.

Dr. Boyden headmaster of Deerfield Academy for 60 years is the subject of a recent book entitled "The Headmaster."

The African students will complete their training at UMass on Friday and leave for their respective countries via Washington, D.C. on Saturday.

Peace Corpsman Assigned to Togo

1966 University of Mass. graduate, Douglas Sloane, to go to Togo as a Peace Corps Volunteer.

Douglas Sloane, son of Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Sloane of Rolf's Lane, Newburyport, Mass. has just been named a Peace Corps Volunteer assigned to Togo.

Douglas was trained by the United Auto Workers in Detroit and is one of three mechanics to join the Peace Corps program operating in Togo. These new Volunteers will try to improve vocational training by teaching mechanical skills in Togo. Other Peace Corps activity in Togo includes education, agriculture, health and fisheries.

The new Volunteers studied the language, history and culture of Togo during their training. Their early October arrival brings the number of Peace Corps Volunteers in the country to approximately 105.

Frosh Grid Outlook Boosted by Flashy Backs

Little Redmen Lure Plebes out of West Point

By PETE CARROLL
Staff Reporter

Head frosh football coach Dave Kelley is high on his team. Last year the freshmen piled up a 3-2 won-lost record. This year Kelley feels they'll be 3-3 at worst and, with a little luck, 6-0.

The frosh square off Saturday at Alumni Stadium against the plebes from West Point. Kelley, who played the defensive "chief" position for the Redmen in 1964-65, feels that three touchdowns could give the Little Redmen the victory.

It will be the first time in Cadet history that the plebes have ventured upon foreign turf.

Last year the plebes won, 13-9, after an 18-6 UMass victory in 1965. While it is the freshmen's first game Army will be playing its third. The West Pointers have beaten the Buffalo frosh, 34-20, and the Villanova frosh, 28-0, and are ranked as one of the top frosh teams in the east.

In addition to playing Army, the freshmen will fill their slate by playing three Yankee Conference frosh teams (UNH, URI and UConn) and two Boston teams (BC and BU).

The team has "an abundance of good backs," said Kelley, who plans to use two backfields for the first three quarters and the best unit in the last period. Offensively the team has a small but fast backfield. The backs may have trouble finding holes but should run well outside and form a good passing game.

Kelley has split his backfield into two teams. The starters will be Co-captain Dick Dyer, 6'1-180, quarterback; Bob Toole, 6'1-195, fullback; Neil Hering, 5'8-163, left halfback; and Pat Scavone, 5'10-172, right halfback.

Dyer hails from Nashua, N.H., Greg Landry's hometown, and Hering was a high school All-America at Hillsdale, N.J. The latter, who runs the 100 in 9.9, and the hard-running Toole should present a formidable running combination.

In the line will be Frank Mosiello, 5'10-200, center; Ed Flaim, 5'10-190, and Jeff Milanette, 6'1-190, guards; Scott Berry, 6'6-260, and Pete Johnson, 6'1-220, tackles; Nick McGarry, 6'5-210, and John Aylward, 6'3-215, ends.

'Backfield Could Be One of Our Best' —Delaney

By STEVE ROSS
Staff Reporter

A football game may be a couple of hours on a Saturday afternoon to the casual fans, but to UMass offensive backfield coach Jack Delaney its the culmination of a 65-hour work week.

"It's a labor of love," Delaney explains. "We make something like 50 cents an hour. We work from 9 in the morning until 11 at night."

Every Monday morning, Delaney studies the films of the upcoming opponent. He totally catalogues the opposition's offensive and defensive habits. According to field position, he said, each team has certain plays it relies on in certain situations, such as first-and-ten, second-and-short, etc.

JACK DELANEY
50 cents an hour.

Each day on the practice field the coach's knowledge, gained by scouting reports and films, is applied to the players, he said. There is very little hitting, 10 minutes on Tuesday and Wednesday. The goal is to have the team ready for the game to meet any situation.

For each game a "ready list" of about seven running, and five passing plays is made, Delaney said, adding that the plays are picked from more than 30 running plays and countless pass plays. Each of these 12 plays have many options because of the 26 different formations the Redmen employ.

On this year's backfield, Delaney commented, "We'll be fine as soon as we get rid of the sophomore jiggles." He also said, "This backfield has tremendous potential and could be one of our best ever."

Delaney described quarterback Greg Landry as a "fine boy and a wonderful leader. If people only knew some of the things he did last year were done with a 103-degree fever, they wouldn't be on him so much. Many times he'll look bad because a receiver will make a mistake." Delaney concluded, "Greg will make his mark in pro ball."

Delaney, UMass backfield coach since 1961, came here from his alma mater, the University of Cincinnati where he played under Sid Gillman, current coach and general manager of the San Diego Chargers.

At Cincinnati Delaney served 10 years as freshmen coach and then for five seasons as an offensive backfield coach.

Delaney said that Cincinnati lacked the school spirit he has seen at UMass. During a rally at his former school for the year's biggest game, "there were usually more players than fans."

A native of Columbus, Ohio, Coach Delaney attracted attention while performing on the basketball, football and baseball teams of Columbus Aquinas High School. After an 18-month tour of duty in the Army, he entered Cincinnati and soon was a standout on the gridiron and baseball diamond.

In 1952, his senior year, Delaney averaged almost eight yards per carry while the Bearcats were winning eight games, losing one and tying one. The following spring he captained the baseball squad.

Controversy Develops Over UMass ROTC Program

By JANE ROLAND
Staff Reporter

"We're training these people so they're better prepared, so that each fighting man is better equipped and educated for survival."

With these comments Col. Harold B. Gatslick, Prof. of wood science and technology at UM, described the US Army Reserve Branch Officers' Career course, of which he is officer-in-charge as well as principal instructor.

"The course carries no pay, for we want good people, not people just in for the money. The better the military leadership is, the less chance there is of war," he added.

The course, which meets every Thursday evening in Dickinson Hall, is for members of the Reserves in the area. About half the class are local people, most of the other half are faculty, with some vet students.

The class as it is taught centers about the latest techniques in modern warfare and studies about the army — its policies and branches.

For example, according to Dr. Gatslik, the class has discussed nuclear warfare. "With this topic," he said, "the major problem is fear. Once the fear can be reasonably overcome, the topic can be discussed."

With this course, reserve officers can get the knowledge necessary to keep time up on common and timely Reserve subjects and the credits necessary for promotion.

Although in the past such courses have been held elsewhere, the Reserves have tried to move them into areas convenient for more interested people.

Therefore, according to Col. Gatslick, "As many faculty and administrative people are also military leaders, it makes sense to hold this course on campus."

ROTC CADETS drill on the field outside the R.O.T.C. building on the UMass campus. Students for Political Action do not feel that the system is a good one while the R.O.T.C. people feel that it has definite merits.

By JANE ROLAND
Staff Reporter

"ROTC and AFROTC are anti-intellectual. . .they encourage blind obedience to government policy on the part of students. For these and other reasons we are opposed to the accreditation of campus military science groups."

With these comments, Students for Political Action asserted their position that campus ROTC should be a non-credit voluntary organization if, indeed, "it must exist at all."

"The major purpose of the University is to encourage education. The University tries to bring the principle of critical thinking to every matriculated student," said Dick Shortt, chairman of SPA, in giving his opinion of the need for dis-accreditation of ROTC.

"The training of ROTC is just that training—and is therefore antithetical to the principle of the University," he added.

In accordance with its anti-ROTC stand, SPA is distributing a petition against class credits for ROTC courses, and is sponsoring a demonstration outside Dickinson Hall on Thursday evening.

The petition, which will be in the S.U. lobby all day Wednesday and Thursday, is also against ROTC because it "Encourages military solutions to world social and political problems."

According to Dick Shortt, this problem was brought to the forefront by the recent realization that a Reserve Army class was being held weekly on campus. "The purpose of this class is to instruct Reserve Officers on recent military techniques applicable to such 'trouble spots' as Vietnam," added Shortt.

Yaz Goes Hitless; Takes Extra Practice

By LARRY ELDRIDGE
Associated Press Sports Writer

BOSTON (AP) — Slugger Carl Yastrzemski, held hitless as his Boston Red Sox lost the World Series opener Wednesday, took a lengthy batting drill right after the game in hopes of regaining his sharpness.

"My hands were slow, real slow," Yastrzemski explained. "I wasn't using my hands enough, and I think I was dropping them a little too low."

Yastrzemski said he "felt great" after the 15-20 minute session in which he hit about 100 or 150 pitches.

"If I'd hit a little we should have won today," Yaz said of the 2-1 loss to the St. Louis Cardinals. "We're still going to win the Series, though, and I can't wait until tomorrow. I wish we were playing a doubleheader."

The Red Sox slugger and American League Triple Crown winner in batting also said he could not wait for his next shot at Bob Gibson.

"He's a fine pitcher and he might get me 0-for-4 again, but I can't wait to face him," Yaz said.

Yastrzemski, who fouled out, grounded out and hit 2 easy flies to left field, said Gibson kept the ball moving all day.

"If you're swinging the bat well and feel good like I did the last couple of weeks of the season you'll hit anyone," he said. "But if you feel like I did today, my 6-yr.-old son could get me out."

Yastrzemski said he often has taken such post - game hitting practice during the season. Teammates Ken Harrelson and Rico Petrocelli followed Yastrzemski into the batting cage.

Asked if he thought "World Series jitters" might have had anything to do with his not feeling right at the plate Wednesday, Yastrzemski gave his questioner an unbelieving look.

"Apparently you didn't watch the last two months of the American League pennant race," he laughed. "After that, this is a fun game—like playing stickball in the street."

Dartmouth College Starts Massive Fund Raising

HANOVER, N.H. (AP) — A campaign is under way to raise $51 million for institution-wide development at Dartmouth Col., Pres. John Sloan Dickey said Wednesday night. He termed it the largest fund-raising effort in Dartmouth's 200-yr. history.

Rupert C. Thompson, Jr. of Providence, R.I., chairman and chief executive officer of Textron Inc., is the national chairman for the program to support faculty and new educational programs, Dickey said.

The Third Century Fund, he added, is for the college he termed as being "at a juncture of strength and unprecedented opportunity."

The campaign will continue through '69-'70, the 200th anniversary of the college.

Half the money will go to faculty and staff compensation. The other half will be used for library resources, financial aid to students, student activities and supporting educational and related facilities for the undergrad and grad programs.

A total of $5.1 million, termed a pacesetting nucleus fund, already has been raised by present and former college trustees.

Quiet Broken

WASHINGTON (AP) — The violence - marked steel haulers' strike has rudely shattered the quiet new aura of rectitude that descended over the Teamsters Union since its president, James R. Hoffa, went to prison.

The Teamsters, as well as the steel companies, are the target of dissident union members in the 8 - state strike marked by shootings, beatings, tire slashing and other violence.

Five Graduate Students Sent To Study in Virgin Islands

The Department of Landscape Architecture has sent five graduate students to work in the Virgin Islands for a five week period. The students undertook this project for their Masters' Degree in Landscape Architecture. They have been granted $25,000 from the National Park Service, Department of the Interior.

In the Virgin Islands, the students are taking inventory of natural, historical and scenic resources. At the end of their five week period, they will return to the University for an analysis of the data. Specialists will review the material collected and publish it in a report.

The Department of Landscape Architecture has already published a report compiled by researchers on Nantucket Island.

In the spring, seven more graduates will be sent on a similar project for their masters Degrees.

ROTC . . .

"One of the reasons I am opposed to ROTC is that campus facilities are used to train in anti-guerilla techniques which often results in suppression of popular revolutions," Shortt added.

Military institutions such as ROTC encourage military solutions to world social problems, and this is the error of our policy in Vietnam."

College Boys Face Judge In Boston

BOSTON (AP) — Two college boys took a flyer at scalping World Series tickets Wednesday and wound up sans tickets or profits.

The pair were brought before Chief Judge Elijah Adlow in Municipal Court and the jurist came up with a solomon—like decision to keep the boys from getting police records.

Judge Adlow dismissed the charges against the youths with the provision that they sell the 25 tickets at face value within the court building.

Court attaches, secretaries, janitors, policeman and witnesses snatched up the tickets in no time.

The boys left the building with the consoling thought that, at least, they didn't lose any money on the deal.

Pirate Radio Station Operates From John F. Kennedy Tower

Southwest residents can tune their radios to 97.5 megacycles FM and hear their very own local station.

Known as JFK Discotheque, the station is broadcasting from the 21st floor of John F. Kennedy tower at unscheduled hours, day and night.

Chatsworth Osborne, III, the originator, operates the station only for the fun of it. He constructed the system off campus in the summer of 1964. His equipment includes a record player, tape recorder and a small transmitter.

The station is operating legally without a license, Osborne claims, because it has less than 100 milowatts input, only a two inch antenna, no group call letters, no foul language and supposedly infuriates no one. Thus the FCC (Federal Communications Commission) allows the continuance of broadcasting.

Infuriated WMUA members according to Osborne, have complained bitterly amongst themselves and the student body that JFK Discotheque is drawing student listeners away from WMUA. However, he knows of no legal measures to stop the competition.

When JFK Discotheque is in full swing it takes four people for operation: a disc jockey, an engineer, a telephone request line operator and a record sorter. But it can be operated on a limited scale requiring only one person.

The station is barely operating this year according to Osborne, because his studies require more time. That, by the way, isn't his real name.

Wisconsin Prof. Of Physical Ed. Speaks at WOPE

Dr. Ann Jewett, former director of Women's Physical Education at Springfield College will be guest lecturer at the University tonight at 7:30 p.m. in the Women's Physical Education building.

Dr. Jewett is currently Professor of Physical Education at the University of Wisconsin, Madison, where she is chairman of the curriculum, supervision, and graduate areas, and coordinator of the undergraduate professional program for women.

Following the lecture an informal reception will be held in the student lounge of the women's building.

U.S. Navy Planes Strike At Center of Haiphong

SAIGON (AP) — U.S. Navy and Air Force planes plunged deep into the heartland of North Vietnam Wednesday to hammer targets in Haiphong and for a second day to strike within 10 miles of Red China's border, the U.S. Command said Thursday.

On the ground, U.S. military authorities claimed North Vietnam's regulars have taken a beating—a Dien Ben Phu in reverse—in the battle of Con Thien.

Navy pilots bombed the Kien an highway bridge only 1.7 miles, southwest of the center of Haiphong. Air Force pilots flew to within 10 miles of the Chinese border to hit the Lang Son railroad bridge, a target attacked before.

The renewed air strikes at lucrative Comunist targets are part of the stepped-up American campaign to hit the enemy hard before the monsoons later this month hamper pilots.

Coupled with tactical fighter bomber strikes were the continuation of raids by B52 bombers along North Vietnam's frontier.

Despite a 10-day slackening of Communist shelling of the U.S. Marine base at Con Thien just below the frontier, and American claims that the Communists have suffered heavy casualties from air strikes and counter artillery, the B52's kept up the saturation campaign to prevent a resurgence of enemy efforts.

UMass Sophomore Gets Gift From The University Theatre

Miss Joanne Williams, a sophomore from Baltimore, Maryland, was presented with the first subscription book to the 1967-68 production season of the University Theatre by Professor James Young, chairman of theatre and oral interpretation at the University.

Book number one was presented as a gift to Miss Williams in recognition of her being the first person to request a subscription to the University Theatre season, which opens October 18 with Oh Dad, Poor Dad.

When Miss Williams filled out the subscription order on the first day of school, she had no idea she was inaugurating the new theatre season.

"I just found the theatre schedule among my registration materials, and I decided to buy the subscription when I saw they were going to do Oh Dad, Poor Dad, which is one of my favorite plays."

Joanne, who transferred to the University of Massachusetts from Smith, is an economics major and journalism minor. She hopes to enter bankng or brokerage for her career.

Subscription books to the University Theatre season of four plays are beng sold on campus through APO and GSS salesmen and at the box office outside Bartlett Hall.

Advertisers Control Television Says UMass Speech Professor

Does advertising control our entertainment? "Yes," said Dr. Richard Harper, assistant professor of speech at the University of Massachusetts last week. "It is perfectly clear that advertisers exercise far too much control on both the type of television programs presented and the content of these programs."

Dr. Harper believes that the sins of advertising are not only those of commission, but omission as well. He continued: "So much ought to be presented to the public, and could be, through such programs as the serious documentary and the commentary, but no advertiser will buy it. Anything controversial or educational is avoided, although Xerox, Bell & Howell, Purex and Gulf have shown real courage in this area."

Professor Harper points out that advertising educates the consuming public to better buying; it reveals new products to the public and points out among other things, new safety features. However, in an insidious way, advertising educates for "overconsumption" and advocates being "fat and lazy" with such come-ons as, "You owe it to yourself to...," and "Why not treat yourself to..."

American television is unique in that 100% of its production costs is underlaid by advertising; (in newspapers 70% is underwritten by advertising, and in magazines this percentage is reduced to 60). With the total cost of television being paid for by advertising, its control in programming has been steadily increasing since the advent of commercial television.

Professor Harper is currently writing a book entitled American Television: A Study in Private Enterprise. The book, intended for publication in 1968, is a description of American television, past and present, and is written to appeal to the general public.

Norway Asks U.S. to Halt Bombing of North Vietnam

(AP) — Norway, allied with the United States in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, Wednesday joined the list of countries calling in the U.N. General Assembly for an end to the U.S. bombing of North Vietnam.

Norwegian Foreign Minister John Lyng, in a policy speech in the assembly's general debate, urged the United States "to take the chance and to use this possibility to initiate negotiations" for peace in Vietnam.

Hungarian Foreign Minister James Peter told the 122-nation assembly, "Only an unconditional cessation of the bombing of North Vietnam can open the way to the negotiating table."

Austrian Foreign Minister Lujo Toncic-Sorinj appealed "to all parties concerned to take whatever initial step may appear likely to set in motion a process towards peace."

Sen. Attilio Piccioni, Italian minister without portfolio, later told assembly it should adopt "a resolution calling on all the parties concerned to initiate peace negotiations" in a new Geneva Conference.

He explained that the moral pressure on the belligerents "could help to overcome the remaining obstacles-albeit superficial—" to peace talks. He said similar action by the Security Council "would be an even more positive step."

Foreign Minister Thanat Khoman of Thailand, the site of bases for U.S. air raids on North Vietnam, told U.N. correspondents his government was not against stopping the bombing but would not want it to disadvantage the defense of South Vietnam.

He speculated that North Vietnam might simply stop fighting instead of entering into negotiations.

Calif. Housewife Jailed Because of Faulty Computer

LOS ANGELES (AP)—A suburban housewife is acused of going on a spending spree with a $19,000 check sent her because of a computer's error.

Authorities said a county computer which normally punched out her $15 a week child support check, sent Mrs. Jaynee Shearer, 37, a $19,065.15 check instead last Sept. 25.

Police said Mrs. Shearer, of Montebelle, used some of the money to purchase a new car and finance a Las Vegas trip for herself and her husband. Approximately $8,000 has been recovered, police said.

Arrested Tuesday, Mrs. Shearer was jailed on suspicion of grand theft.

Joseph Kennedy Faints During World Series Game

BOSTON (AP) — Former Ambassador Joseph P. Kennedy, father of the late Pres. John F. Kennedy, suffered a fainting spell Wednesday while attending the opening of the World Series.

His two sons Robert F. Kennedy of N.Y. and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy of Mass., were with him, and assisted him to a wheel chair.

Kennedy was wheeled to a ramp and oxygen was administered while he waited for an automobile to drive him away from the stadium.

The two sons returned for the remainder of the game.

UMass Receives Government Grant To Study 'Have' and 'Have-Nots'

Do the 'haves' demand fewer services from their community than the 'have-nots?' Dr. Irving Howards, director of the Bureau of Government Research at UM, thinks so and will administer a $36,000 study grant awarded to UM by the U.S. Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare in an attempt to prove it.

Dr. Howards' project entitled "Investigation of the Relationship Between Community Factors and the Provision of a Variety of Community Services," will involve collecting data on approximately 600 communities ranging in population from 5000-250,000 in the states of Illinois, New York, Texas and California.

The theory on which Dr. Howards is working is based on a pilot study conducted earlier in Illinois. He hopes to show that when certain community social and economic characteristics are combined with the percentage of total eligible residents voting in local elections, the number of services provided by the community can be predicted.

Prof. Howards will assume full responsibility for the execution of the project. He will be working in consultation with Henry P. Brehm, Chief, Behavioral Studies Sec. of the National Center for Chronic Diseases, Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare. The organizational base will be provided by the UM Bureau of Government Research.

A Safe View

The Southwest Complex beheld a tragedy last weekend—a tragedy that could have been prevented.

A disproportionate number of attempted sucides occur among the members of the under twenty-five age group. It is high places left unenclosed that attract many of these attempts.

Steps have been taken in various public buildings to prevent such unfortunate incidents. The Empire State Building for example has enmeshed balconies at high altitudes to reduce the danger of fatalities.

We urge the installation of protective screening on all tower balconies. We feel that this must be done in order to protect the unfortunates of society from themselves.

No Show

By PETE WARD

Last week, Van Meter residence held a freshman tea and invited several Administrative personnel to attend. The invitations were sent out one week in advance, yet despite this relatively short notice, almost every administrator invited considered the event important enough to warrant attendance. Present from the Administration were Dean Curtis, Dean and Mrs. Tunis, Dean Field, Dr. Noffsinger, John Messinger, and several residence officials from the area.

Also invited at the same time were 25 members of the faculty. Out of this number, only one, Dr. Arny of the Astronomy department, considered the event important enough to attend. Out of the rest, about 10 at least responded that they would not attend, 12 didn't even bother to pick up the phone and answer the invitation, and two agreed to come, and then just never showed up.

This is a regretful incident of students taking the initiative in student-faculty relations and receiving a disgraceful response from the faculty members who were invited. The faculty's primary responsibility is to the student, and when faculty show a lack of interest in contacts with students, how can the students be blamed for having little faith in their professors.

One often hears faculty members talking about student apathy at UMass, perhaps we also have a problem with Faculty apathy.

They're People

To the Editor: (concerning the article in the Collegian Thurs., Sept. 28, on Faculty Fellows)

Perhaps I misconstrued the meaning of the article on Faculty Fellows, but in the event that any faculty member has read this article and taken it in the same manner that I did, I would like to clarify our position on Faculty Fellows. I have been familiar with the Faculty Fellow Program since my Freshman year, and I have never taken this program to be an extension of the professor's office hours as extra help to the student.

The procedure we use in acquiring Fellows is to get the students interested in the program by having them invite any professor they find interesting and exciting in their classes to a Faculty Fellow Supper. From here it is up to the professor to decide whether or not he is interested.

The program as I see it is a meeting and merging of social and academic identities. The student experiences the professor's personal point of view, and the professor has the opportunity to see how the student leads his (or her) life outside of the classroom. A Fellow can do this by attending dorm dinners and other dorm activities. He can watch the dorm government in action by attending a house meeting, or he can enjoy the relaxed atmosphere of a folk sing or a party. The whole program is on an informal basis, and the only academics that are discussed are the ones that are brought up in the stimulating conversations that sometimes ensue as a result of these get-togethers. The professor's course is seldom referred to directly.

So to any prospective Faculty Fellow, or to any that are now Faculty Fellows and have read Thursday's article, please do not be frightened away. We too would like to see strict academics kept to the office hours and to meet you as people.

Oops!

We realize that the staff of the Collegian is overworked and underpaid. Because of this, we allow for mistakes such as misspelled names, etc. However, in Wednesday's (October 4) edition of the Daily Collegian there appeared an error which no Bean-towner can excuse.

The picture of Fenway Park which appeared on page 8 of the issue mentioned was printed upside-down! This is easily proven by noting that the floodlights are pointing downward rather than reaching up as most poles do.

We are sure that this was entirely unintentional, and not meant to be a "dump" on the team which won the American League pennant. This is not a letter to degrade the staff of such a praiseworthy newspaper. On the contrary, we hope to contribute as much as possible, and keep the Daily Collegian a first class paper.

The 18th Floor, Tower 6

Campus Chaos

Confusion predominated on much of this campus Saturday night. One particular incident should not be dismissed as just another part of the general disorder. It should not be so dismissed because this incident, which could easily be repeated, endangered the lives of a number of people.

Shortly before 10:00 p.m. a number of boys entered Coolidge Tower, a girls' dormitory, and proceeded up the stairs as far as the eighth floor, entering some of the rooms. At this time, a counselor pulled the fire alarm on the ground floor in order to end the raid and clear the boys out of the dormitory.

When there is a fire alarm in one of the towers, all occupants are supposed to walk down the stairs and leave the building. Sunday night, however, students reaching the ground floor were told that it was a false alarm and that they should return to their rooms. Certain individuals, among them some counselors, tried to prevent anyone from leaving the building. The towers are twenty-two stories high; the ground floor lobbies are not very large. Consequently, the lobby quickly filled and many people were stuck in the stairways, unable to move up or down. Fortunately, while there was some crowding, most residents believed it to be a false alarm and were not too concerned at remaining in the stairways. Relative calm prevailed.

There have been fires at which more people were trampled to death in a panicked crowd than were burnt to death. This sort of a situation arises when a bottleneck is formed and too many people compete to reach the exit. Just such a bottleneck situation so favorable to mob panic was created by the actions of those individuals who tried to prevent anyone from leaving the building. What could have happened is frightening.

Having made the decision to pull the fire alarm, the counselor who did so should have notified the house parents and counselors of the other dormitories within the tower so that they could help maintain order. Once the alarm was actually pulled, the situation should have been treated as if there were a real fire and the normal evacuation procedure followed.

All fire alarms should be treated as fires because that is the only way to ensure that panic will not develop, that evacuation can be safely accomplished.

Equestrian Club Forms New Membership Policy

By DOREEN LEPOER

Attempting to create a more active and better organization, the Equestrian Club officers formed a new policy concerning club membership. These new policies were introduced to Equestrian Club members at last Thursday's meeting.

The Equestrian Club officers, keeping club goals and purposes in mind, stated a new division of membership into Active Membership and Apprentice Membership. Active members must have previous experience in riding to an intermediate level or better. Permission to work with and around University horses, will be granted to those considered competent to do so, by the riding instructors and University Horsemen.

Apprentice membership will be given to those who are actively interested and "must be willing to work toward an active membership", stated club officers. This can be fulfilled by working under direction of an active member with and around horses.

Fulfillment of riding requirements can be obtained either through the University Physical Education Riding Program, or on an individual basis. With fulfillment of these requirements, the apprentice member can become an active member.

Those interested in the Equestrian Club may attend the next meeting, which will be held October 9th, in Stockbridge Hall.

Hotel Association Opens New Chapter

The University now has a junior chapter of the well known international Hotel Sales Management Association. The H.S.M.A., with national headquarters in New York City, has given a charter to the University's Hotel Administration Department.

The junior chapter will maintain the same objectives of the national H.S.M.A.—to accumulate and disseminate literature within the hotel industry concerning sales and marketing activities.

This should be of special interest to not only those sales minded hotel administration students but also any student who is concerned with marketing and promotional aspects within other fields.

The chapter at the University now has 12 active members who cooperate in planning trips to big city hotels and seminars here at the University.

The members encourage all other promotional minded students to attend the next meeting of the organization on Thursday, October 5 in 227 Chenoweth Laboratory at 8:00 P.M.

Peace Corps Veterans Recruit Umies

By JOHN NEWLAND

Eight Peace Corps veterans are running a busy recruiting center in the lobby of the Student Union. They are signing prospective volunteers for placement tests which will be held in Room 61 of Bartlett Hall on Wednesday and Thursday, October 4 and 5. The tests will be given hourly from 3:30 through 6:30 on Wednesday and 3:45 through 6:45 on Thursday. The group is on duty at UMass daily through Friday from 9 A.M. to 7 P.M.

Bewster Perkins, leader of the group, said "UMass has the quality of student that the Peace Corps is looking for. We've been overwhelmed by the number of people who have come to see us. The reason we're here for five days is that in the last two years at UMass we've run out of materials to hand out and there hasn't been enough time to accommodate the number of people who've inquired. We've had many requests to speak in classes. Mr. Morrissey, the director of placement and financial aid at UMass has been a great help to our effort."

The group is anxious to inform the UMass students of what is available in the Peace Corps. They are aiming at the Agricultural School of UMass because there is a strong need for agricultural work in undeveloped countries. An agricultural background is not required, however. Perkins, who holds a political science degree from Trinity College, Hartford, worked at poultry raising in India for two years.

The placement test is required

Outstanding Works Goal of Univ. Press

"The goal of the Press is to publish outstanding scholarly or artistic works which are addressed to the specialist, the student, and the interested layman."

This is a policy by which the University Press has been publishing since its establishment in 1964. The Press is a nonprofit organization, and as Ann Reinke of the promotion department puts it, "We like a book to sell well, but it is not the most important aspect in publishing."

The publishing schedule for the Press this year is a busy one. Already in print are two books which show the Press' strict adherence to its policy. The first of these is The Defense of Graccus Babeuf, edited by John Antony Scott. This book is the historic account of the trail of Graccus Babeuf before the High Court of Vendome during the French Revolution. It is not the story of the entire trial but rather the story of Babeuf's defense, which the Press calls "one of the most splendid testiments to the freedom of man's mind ever spoken."

The second work in print to be released Oct. 15, is Constance de Markievicz: In the Cause of Ireland by Jacqueline Van Voris. It is the story of a courageous young woman who, as the Kirkus Service says, has "a genuine commitment to the eventual freedom of her country from English rule . . .

"The most striking fact—that what is no doubt to be the definite Geography of this charismatic figure had to wait so long to be written."

Slated for later publishing by the Press are: Annotated Catalogue, Richard S. Robin, editor; Charles S. Pierce on Norms and Ideas, by Vincent G. Potter, S.J.; The Satirical Rogue on Poetry, by poet Robert Francis; Leonard Baskin's Dean Men; and Fredrick Law Olmstead, Landscape Architect, by Jules Fabos. The Press does its printing by bid with high quality firms.

Massachusetts Redistricting Bid Is Downed

A three-judge federal panel Tuesday turned down a bid to set aside the recently enacted law redrawing boundaries of Massachusetts' 12 congressional districts.

Bristol County Dist. Atty. Edmund Dinis had petitioned the panel to upset the law on the grounds that the state legislature itself was malapportioned and had no right to act on redistricting measures.

Dinis also said the law violated the one—man, one—vote principle laid down by the Supreme Court. The suit had been filed against Gov. John A. Volpe, Attorney General Elliot Richardson, and Secretary of State Kevin H. White.

Previous petitions by Dinis seeking the same thing also were rejected.

Teachers Strike Leader Convicted of Contempt

Albert Shanker, who led the recent New York City teachers strike, was convicted of contempt of court Wednesday, and sentenced to 15 days in jail. His union was fined $150,000 under a new state municipal labor law.

The sentencing judge called the strike, which affected 1.1 million school children, a "rebellion against the government."

The sentence by State Supreme Court Justice Emilo Nunez jolted the ranks of union labor in New York. A state AFL-CIO conventon was interrupted at word of the court decision and an audible gasp came from the 1,200 delegates.

The six-figure fine was not considered too burdensome for the union. It has a $1-million emergency fund or, should it chose to pro rate the fine, it would cost each individual union teacher about $3.

Shanker, 39, led his 50,000 UFT members in a walkout on the scheduled opening day of the school year, Sept. 11, in defiance of a State Supreme Court no-strike order.

Despite a subsequent back-to-work order from the court, the strike lasted 17 days.

The strike was the most massive in the history of American education.

The Nunez decision was seen as the first test of the new Taylor-law which prohibits strikes by unions of public employees.

Riotsville, USA Useful In Violence Prevention

The Army defeated 200 hippies and dissidents Wednesday in carefully orchestrated skirmishes showing off the government's latest riot control tactics and equipment.

The setting was Riotsville, U.S.A., (near Washington, D.C.) a realistic mockup of a typical city area which became the scene of simulated angry disorders.

The mob formed when a patrol car, siren wailing, wheeled over to question two men at 12th and Belvoir. The narrator said it was a racially tense area.

Here is the way the action goes:

The pair fights police.

Police haul away the men. A mop-haired Negro with a bull horn loudspeaker rides up in the rear of a pick-up truck, exhorting the crowd not to let the fuzz get away with this.

The window of Pete's liquor store is smashed. "Everybody drinks tonight," shouts the Negro.

Now we have an ugly mob.

Meanwhile, back at police headquarters, the commander of some Army troops ordered to the scene by the President is getting inside information from undercover agents in the crowd.

Enter the Army.

A soldier standing in a jeep orders the people to disperse. The boisterous mob, brandishing signs declaring that "the U.S. is going to pot," refuses to break up.

Bayonets are aimed at the rioters' threats, backing them down the street. The narrator stressees that the idea is to use only minimum force.

Finally the crowd refuses to retreat any further.

The troops break out tear gas —"unquestionably humane," says the narrator—and gas grenades and capsules are lobbed into and above the crowd. Some explode with a Roman candle effect.

Choking, the rioters momentarily fall back. The Army has to send in a helicopter spewing a bigger dose of gas.

This, the narrator says, pretty well does the job.

Arrested rioters are picked up by a 2½-ton truck with a protective covering of chicken wire and carrying a movie camera which gets pictures of mob leaders who will be identified and apprehended later.

THE SOUTHWEST PATRIOTS

'McHale's Navy'?

Smith, Parnell Produced Only Star Performances

By TOM FITZGERALD
Sports Editor

After their somewhat inept showing against Dartmouth, the Redmen now have an extra week to meditate on their faults.

They'll get their chance for redemption when they resume Yankee Conference action at Connecticut a week from Saturday. But it may take a line-up shuffle to straighten out the defensive woes. As expected, the young secondary made several mistakes, most notably on the 35-yard touchdown pass from Bill Koenig to Bob Milaker late in the first half, putting Dartmouth ahead to stay.

But the all-senior line, especially the left side, had more trouble stopping the Big Green backs than the police had containing the pennant celebration Sunday night.

Without linebacker Ernie Smith, the Redmen might have been the new TV season's answer to McHale's Navy. As Gene Rzyewicz said in the locker room, "We had a lot of trouble with him." Smith, virtually a one-man show, won the coaching staff's pick for the weekly Varsity "M" Club award on defense.

The winner on offense was Steve Parnell, the slick sophomore who returned four kick-offs for 39, 20, 21 and 33 yards and ran back four punts for 58 yards. His 40-yard punt return in the first quarter set up the only UMass touchdown.

ERNIE SMITH
One-man show.

Except for the '65 and '66 Maine games, Greg Landry probably hasn't had a worse day as UMass quarterback than Saturday. Eight of his 19 passes were caught, three of them by Dartmouth.

Ryzewicz, who stands 5'9 in his stocking feet, was one of the many people at the Stadium who were surprised that "the UMass offense didn't open up a little more. I've read that at times they throw 25 or 30 times in one game."

Observers were also asking, "Why did UMass punt on third down with Dartmouth ahead, 14-10, in the third quarter?" With the wind favoring UMass, Coach Vic Fusia apparently valued field position more than ball control at that point, but the Dartmouth offense was in high gear. After the punt, the visitors marched to an insurance touchdown.

"We made all the mistakes we would normally make in the first game," Fusia said. Perhaps the Redmen just ran out of gas after the 30-9 trouncing of Maine, the best UMass debut in Fusia's seven-year tenure.

"I wouldn't be surprised if UMass wins all the rest of its games," said jubilant Dartmouth coach Bob Blackman. One of the most successful coaches in the East, Blackman had moaned the week before the game, "We're young and inexperienced."

He lauded the play of Ernie Smith and added, "I have a lot of respect for Landry," but he glowed as he discussed his charges, who trailed early, 10-0. "We retained our poise when we were down."

Blackman's star pupil, Ryzewicz, was the last man out of the shower room. The All-Ivy Leaguer said, "We were confident going into this game because we knew we had an effective game plan.

"The defense did a terrific job. We found we were able to con-three plays." One of those plays was the third-down punt.
three plays." One of those plays was the tihrd-down punt."

Ryzewicz, former football, basketball and baseball star at Cathedral High School in Springfield, has concentrated on the gridiron and the diamond during his first years at Hanover. He said, however, he may try varsity basketball this time.

The ABC-TV "game-of-the-week" broadcast, carried by 10 New England stations ran smoothly, with three official time-outs called for commercials in each of the first three periods and two called in the last.

A commercial halted play in the first quarter immediately after UMass had taken possession at the Dartmouth 10 on a high center snap to the Dartmouth punter. In the press box, the ABC-NCAA press relations director, Carroll (Beano) Cooke, was incensed at the time-out, saying it ruined the Redmen's "momentum."

Producer Dick Kirchner directed the time-outs through a fifth official on the field. The commercials originated in New York.

Because of the television technicians strike, there was no video tape replay. And because the game ended so late, there was no post-game show either.

Announcers Jim McKay and Jackie Jensen left town shortly after the final gun. McKay pint-sized M.C. for "Wide World of Sports," was filling in for Keith Jackson, who refused to cross the picket lines and may therefore be taken to court by the network. Jensen headed for a plane to his home in Reno, Nev., before he could even comment on his former ball club, the Red Sox.

There were 38 policemen at the Stadium Saturday, five of them guarding the television equipment, according to campus chief Red Blasko. The extra precautions were taken as a result of an alleged sabotage incident during the telecast of the Penn State-Navy game the week before.

Blasko added that traffic at the Stadium was "really loused up" by the Dartmouth alumni tent located at the north end of the parking area behind the Stadium. He said at halftime that it would take 30 minutes instead of the usual 15 to 20 to clear the lot because the tent blocked one lane of the outgoing traffic.

Attendance was 18,100, second largest crowd in Alumni Stadium's three-year history. Last year's homecoming game against B.U. drew 18,700. Saturday's throng included 8,800 UMass students and 1,870 season ticket holders.

Naiads Slate Swim Symposium

A synchronized swimming symposium will be held in the Women's Physical Education Building Oct. 13-15 by the International Academy of Aquatic Art.

Naiads, UMass synchronized swim group, is host for symposium under the direction of Ellen Megill, student president of Naiads; Andrea Snell, chairman of housing for the conference, and Jane Hubbard, treasurer and chairman of registration.

On campus that weekend will be approximately 250 students and 45 faculty members of synchronized swimming clubs of high schools and colleges from the eastern United States and Canada.

The delegates will be housed in the women's residence halls Friday, Oct. 13, and Saturday, Oct. 14. Naiads hope to house all delegates in the women's quad near the Women's Physical Education Building. Some student delegates, however, may need to go to Orchard Hill and Southwest complexes.

A Naiad has been assigned to each dorm. Any woman planning to be away from campus those days and willing to offer quarters to a delegate should contact one of the following Naiads: Knowlton—Ann Wright, Hamlin—Jane Hubbard, Leach—Andrea Snell, Dwight—Pam Murphy, Johnson—Linda Pirog, Mary Lyon—Ellen Megill, Crabtree — Chris Konieczny, Emily Dickinson — Jane Valentine, Eugene Field — Lynn Russell, Southwest, Van Meter and Brooks—to be named later.

Schmitt Sits in Stands But Enjoys IM Post

By GLENN BRIERE
Staff Reporter

After more than two decades of one job, it's hard to get used to a new one. But Ted Schmitt, who after 25 years as a football coach was moved last year to UMass director of intramural athletics, is happy at his new desk.

Schmitt attended the University of Pittsburgh where he played football for the 1937 national champions. After his graduation in 1938, he played with the Philadelphia Eagles for three years and then embarked on his long coaching career.

He first spent five years as a high school coach and then, 20 years as a college coach at Pittsburgh, Harvard and UMass. Last year, he was named intramural director, succeeding the late Chet Gladchuk, who had moved up to assistant athletic director.

How does last year's Redmen line coach feel about being this year's intramural director? "At first," Schmitt said, "I wished I was back there at the practice field, but since then I haven't had much time to think about it. Actually, I got the same feeling sitting there in the stands last Saturday as I did while I was coaching."

Schmitt finds both jobs equally time-consuming. He says he meets more students now, as well as more people around campus, such as area coordinators and heads of residence.

What about the aims of the intramural program? "The most important," said Schmitt, "is to give those students who can't compete on a varsity basis, a chance to participate in athletic competition, as well as recreational activities that they can use later on in life.

"There are a great number of activities that students can participate in after they leave the unversity." Another purpose of the intramural program, said Schmitt, is to "add spirit, pride and tradition to each individual unit. This, in turn, adds overall spirit, pride and tradition to the whole university."

Schmitt sees a rosy future for UMass intramurals. Foremost in this future is physical growth, with new facilities covering 85 more acres of land adjacent to the present intramural field.

"We have excellent facilities here," said Schmitt. "We become a little more cramped for space, each year with the growing enrollment."

Schmitt is certain that the intramural program will grow as the university does. "We would like to make it the best intramural program in New England," he said, "and we're pretty close to that right now."

Redbirds Beat Red Sox In First Game, 2-1

Gibson Immense As Cards Take World Series Opener

BOSTON (AP) — "I had a good fastball and was mixing my pitches good," Bob Gibson said Wednesday after pitching St. Louis to victory in the first game of the 1967 World Series.

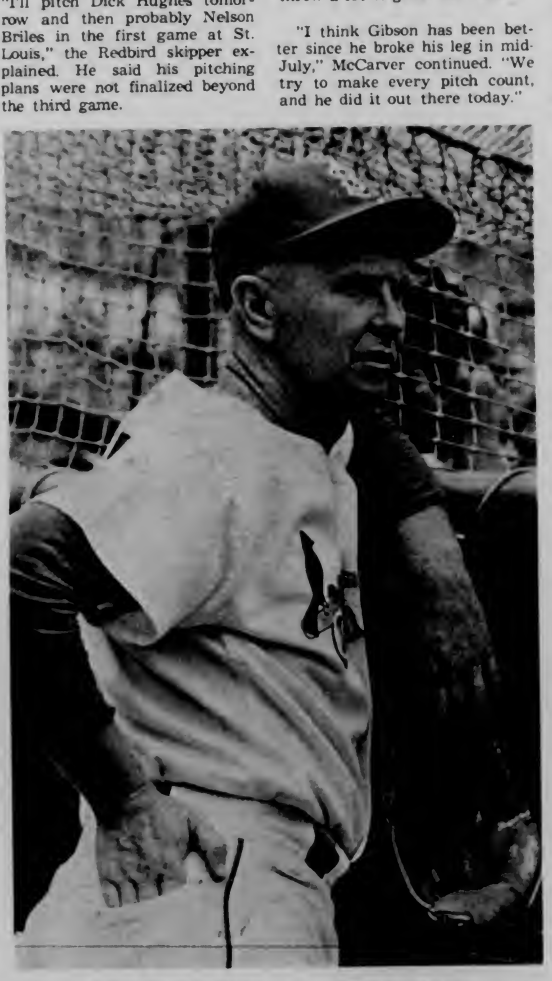
Manager Red Schoendienst agreed that Gibson was at his best form. "Gibson looked as good today as he did two weeks ago when we clinched the National League pennant in Philadelphia," Schoendienst said after his team's 2-1 win over Boston.

Gibson, who gave up six hits and struck out 10, said he tired toward the end of the game.

"But I was strong enough to finish." When asked how much rest he needed before pitching again, the big right-hander said, "I need just as much rest as the manager gives me."

And Schoendienst wasn't saying how much rest he planned for Gibson, who bounced back from a broken right leg in mid-season. "I'll pitch Dick Hughes tomorrow and then probably Nelson Briles in the first game at St. Louis," the Redbird skipper explained. He said his pitching plans were not finalized beyond the third game.

Schoendienst, relaxing after his first World Series victory as a manager, said, "they all played good games and did you see that catch Mike Shannon made at third?"



He referred to a stop Shannon made of a hard grounder down the line by Boston's Jerry Adair. Shannon grabbed the ball, turned and and threw off balance from behind third and got Adair by a step.

Gibson said he made a bad pitch on the ball Boston's starting pitcher, Jose Santiago, slammed over the high left field wall.

"I hung a curve ball on Santiago," Gibson said. "It was a bad pitch—I've made 'em before and I'll make them again."

Tim McCarver, the Cardinal catcher, said Gibson's curve ball "was jumping more than usual. He pitched a great game and threw a lot of good fast balls."

"I think Gibson has been better since he broke his leg in mid-July," McCarver continued. "We try to make every pitch count, and he did it out there today."

RED SCHOENDIENST—Cards' Winning Manager

Williams Glad For Tomorrows

BOSTON (AP)—Dick Williams, the rookie manager of the Boston Red Sox, managed a grin and looked ahead Wednesday after dropping the World Series opener 2-1 to the St. Louis Cardinals.

"We don't feel bad," Williams said. "We're just glad to have the chance to play them again tomorrow. This is only the first one."

Most of Boston's American League champions trooped silently into the clubhouse. The bleak atmosphere was broken by a shout from the end of the room: "Chins up everybody.

"I thought it would be a high-scoring series," Williams said in his crowded office. "I was wrong today, but I still think it will turn out to be. Of course, it might have been a high-scoring game today if it hadn't been for the double plays we pulled off in the first two innings."

Williams, like his players, gave all the credit in the world to right-hander Bob Gibson, who pitched a six-hitter, and speedy Lou Brock, who tied a World Series record with four straight singles, stole two bases and scored both St. Louis runs.

"Gibson pitched one helluva ball game," the Boston field boss said.

"As for Brock, I guess we had the wrong book on him," he added. "The book worked on Orlando Cepeda and we got him four straight times. But nothing worked against Brock.

"Brock's speed paid off. We thought we might have had him on his stolen base in the seventh. Rico Petrocelli beefed a little, but I couldn't really tell from my position. It was awfully close."

After stealing second, Brock moved to third on an infield grounder and scored as second baseman Jerry Adair had to dive to his left to grab Roger Maris' grounder.

"Jerry didn't have any play at the plate," Williams said. "If the ball had been hit straight at him, it would have been different. But give Brock credit. He's a great runner."

Williams' recalled that he batted "quite a bit" against Gibson during a barnstorming trip a few years ago. Asked how he fared, Williams cracked: "We survived."

Carl Yastrzemski, Boston's triple crown winner, enjoyed a tremendous day afield, throwing out a runner at the plate, and making a spectacular leaping catch of a line drive by Curt Flood.

However, Yaz was hitless in four appearances against Gibson —and spent time in the batting cage after the game.

Williams summed things up: "It's only the first one. They got a lot of base hits. We were lucky the score was only 2-1. Jose Santiago pitched the way he wanted; he just couldn't control the ball. He was high all day."

Watch for Metawampe's Grid Picks Friday

Jose— 'I Wanted To Win For Everyone But I Couldn't'

BOSTON (AP)—Jose Santiago, first Latin American ever to start the opening game of a World Series, was a man of mixed emotions Wednesday after the 2-1 victory of the St. Louis Cardinals over his Boston Red Sox.

"I wanted to win for everybody, but I couldn't.

"My homer was a thrill. It was a good breaking ball and I saw it all the way.

"I wasn't really sharp. True, I made good pitches when I had to but I made a couple of mistakes.

"I learned a lot today. Maybe it will be different when I go at them in St. Louis.

"Lou Brock was hot. I threw him everything in the book, and he hit everything."

The tall, articulate, handsome Puerto Rican seems to be jinxed as far as the Cardinals are concerned. Once he broke his ankle while pitching against them in spring training and another time when he was due to pitch he came down with appendicitis.

Santiago sat dejectedly in front of his cubby hole in the Red Sox' dressing room, and reviewed the game patiently for a circle of reporters. He only smiled when he revealed that he planned to have dinner Wednesday night with his long-time friend, Orlando Cepeda, also a Puerto Rican, and the star hitter of the rival Cardinals.

Although Santiago yielded 10 hits in the course of the seven innings that he pitched, he managed to shackle Cepeda completely in his four times at bat. He struck him out swinging in the seventh.

Santiago was in trouble every inning. "It seems like every time I looked up there was a man on first base," he said with a wince.

"My breaking ball was just not good. I had trouble getting the ball down.

"That guy Brock is just too fast," he said with a shake of the head. "But a good throw would have had him in the seventh on that stolen base that led to the winning run. He slid under it.

"I got Cepeda out three times with fast balls and struck him out with a slider. He couldn't believe it when I hit that home run."

Santiago held his head in a gesture of disbelief.

"In a way I was pleased with my pitching but I wanted to win. When I gave up that second run, I knew it would be tough.

"I was nervous of course, because it was the World Series. I went to three-two too many times on batters but then I reached back and gave them everything I had."

FROSH DEFENSE—A GOOD ONE

By PETE CARROLL
Staff Reporter

Frosh grid coach Dave Kelley has what looks to be a very strong defensive alignment.

The starters on the defense will be Tom Callaghan, 6'22-210, middle guard; Vince Interlande, 6'2"-200, and Jim Troland, 6'4"-235, tackles; Dave Walsh, 6'1"-205, and Russ Wood, 6'2"-205, ends; Bill Byron, 6'2"-210, and Bill Sroka, 6'2"-204, linebackers; Brian Cleary, 6'2"-175, right halfback; Jim Rendle, 6'2"-185, left halfback; and Mike Kostanski, 6'1"-190, the Chief.

One player to watch will be MG Callaghan, Coach Kelley is high on this boy. Tom is a deaf-mute who has really surprised everyone. He is a very hard worker, is smart, and has a fine attitude. The rest of the players have put out a little extra to help him with various signs and signals.

Pat Scavone figures to kick fieldgoals and PAT's. John Aylward will handle the kick-offs.

Kelley named a few other players who could make the frosh squad. In the offensive backfield, they are are Joe Lang, 6'-184, quarterback; Pierre Marchando, 6'1"-232, fullback; Mark Russell, 5'11-175, and Dick Heavey, 5'11"-187, halfbacks.

Other players likely to see action include Paul Maloney, 6'4"-202, defensive tackle; Tom Semino, 5'10"-165, offensive halfback; Bill Polopek, 5'9"-160, Chief; Don Shea, 5'11-185, safety; and George Zguaris, 5'10"-205, guard.

INTRAMURALS

Last night's intramural play was confined to all dormitory contests. Behind Rogers' quarterbacking, the Gorman Maples upset the Webster Rams, 28-13. Likewise the Colonials dumped the Bouncing "F", 19-13, with a valuable assist from Alberico. Wright, passing for 20 points, led the Dynamos past the Bismarks, 26-7.

The Fury to Holcomb combination carried the HiLo's over the Pines in a 38-0 contest. The Hoovers were guided by Santos over the Oaks, 19-12, in a very tough game.

First downs proved the difference as the Landscape Architects squeeked by the Tophids, 19-18. In a tight battle the Roman Numerals pulled away from the Redshirts in the second half with quarterback Emerson's finesse, 19-7. The Hemlocks squeezed the Limes, 16-7. In that game Borran hit on nine of 11 passes.

The Aces ran away from the Redwoods, 26-0. Higney accounted for 20 of their points. Alward to Bohlon proved to too much for the Eagles as the Maroons downed them, 44-19.

Red Sox Even World Series At One-One

Now Let's See — Manager "Red" Schoendienst of the Saint Louis Cardinals raises his cap and scratches his head as he watches his team work out at Fenway Park.

BOSTON (AP)— Jim Lonborg flirted with a perfect game and wound up with a one-hitter and Carl Yastrzemski slammed two electrifying homers Thursday to even the World Series with a 5-0 Boston victory over St. Louis in the rain-spattered second game.

A tense crowd of 35,188 thrilled to Lonborg's brilliant pitching that awoke memories of Don Larsen's perfect game for the New York Yankees in the 1956 series.

Not a man reached base and 19 Cardinals had been retired in order until Curt Flood finally walked on a 3-2 pitch with one out in the seventh.

The no-hitter still was alive into the eighth when a light shower and sudden dark clouds forced the lights to be turned on. By this time, the game had been locked up by Yastrzemski's second homer, a three-run 430-foot blast into the bleachers for a 5-0 lead.

Lonborg, ever aware of the no-hit possibilities was working with a blister on his right thumb, bothering his breaking ball.

A rousing cheer arose when Tim McCarver grounded out to second base. The noise mounted when Rico Petrocelli, a demon in the field all day, tossed out Mike Shannon.

The air went out of the no-hit boom when Julian Javier slashed a double into the left field corner. But Lonborg never missed a stride. He blew down pinch hitter Bob Tolan to complete the eighth and knocked off the Redbirds, one-two-three in the ninth.

This handsome, 24-year-old, razor-cut Stanford grad thus matched the three previous one hitters thrown in Series competition, Ed Reulbach had one for

Students and Foes of ROTC Appear At Counter-Rally and Demonstration

By JANE ROLAND
Staff Reporter

Both ROTC students and opponents of accreditation of ROTC courses met Thursday evening at an anti-ROTC rally sponsored by Students for Political Action.

The rally, called to demand an end to credit for Military Science courses, had been purposely scheduled to run at the same time as a controversial army reserve officers course held at Dickenson Hall.

Soon after the first speaker, Richard Shortt, chairman of SDA, began to talk, he was interrupted by repeated hissing and noises from several students gathered on the library terrace.

These students, along with another group, approached the rally and were invited by Shortt to remain if they would refrain from interrupting the speakers.

After this the rally proceded as scheduled, with Professor Robert Tucker of the English department reading one of his poems concerning his personal experiences with the Marines.

Also speaking was a former member of ROTC Steve Gaman, who came out strongly against the place of the group on campus, arguing that the leadership training ROTC was said to stress centered on teaching immediate obedience to orders.

He added that the ROTC manual included this point as well as the idea of trying to increase a desire to follow orders, both of which point up the anti-intellectual aspects of ROTC, according to Gaman.

Other speakers stressed different reasons for their support of the rally and the anti-accreditation petition which has been circulating on campus.

A philosophy transfer student, John Siegel, based his speech on the position of the University as an institution for the world.

"If the position of the University is to aim constantly for the betterment of man, as in the abolition of war, then it must argue not which tactics are better than others, but must question the entire framework of society," Siegel stated.

After Sociology student Bill Wilkinson argued for an abolition of credits for ROTC while seeing the need for the existence of the group on campus, the rally turned into a rally on whether ROTC is, in fact, less academic and less intellectual than other departments on campus.

One student in particular defended ROTC, calling military science training an education for a particular field just as any other subject would be training for that field.

Busiest Man on Campus is Responsible For All Dormitory Locks and Keys

By MEREDITH GOETTEL
Staff Reporter

Tucked away in a corner of the huge warehouse and maintenance building is the workroom of one of the busiest men on campus, Harold Bray.

Surrounded by books of numbers and codes, he is responsible for the key and lock to anything university-owned whether on or off campus.

"Anything that has a lock, regardless of whether or not it's on wheels," is the domain of Bray. This includes every building, vehicle, safe, or file cabinet. "I do work on vaults and safes, change locks and combinations and do any repairing necessary."

Due to expansion of the university, Bray's work load has increased accordingly. It's been a full-time job for seven or eight years now, where once keymaking was only a part of the carpentry shop," he explained.

At present there are over 100 buildings on campus, and the number is increasing annually. The new buildings require an increased number of staff. Bray must supply each janitor, nightwatchman, faculty member, student and policeman with the necessary keys.

Once a building is accepted the code or the set of actual keys for the building is turned over and Bray then makes duplicates. These act as a reserve so that if a request comes from Housing or another official source, the key is immediately available.

Bray has one assistant, Homer Germain, and he really needs him. "In a typical month, say October of 1966," Bray said as he drew out a stack of slips, "we made 425 keys for Housing, and that doesn't include the janitorial work."

An unnecessary amount of work orders are for replacing keys which students or faculty have lost or failed to turn in. A fee is now charged to obtain a duplicate.

Obviously experienced in his work, the intricate, tiny springs and pins not phasing him at all, Bray spoke of his training. "Experience is the best way to learn. I did it by watching and doing. A little I learned from books."

The work orders for 525 keys for the new Southwest low-rise dorms stared at him, and Bray went back to work, glad to be alone again in his corner of the campus. He had a lot of work to do!

Jet Planes Blast Near Red China

SAIGON (AP) — Intensified air strikes and a rising number of allied ground sweeps reflected Thursday the grinding pace of a war in which American casualties have now exceeded 100,000.

U.S. jet planes, blasting at times this week at previously exempt bridges within 10 miles of Red China's border, struck again at North Vietnam.

The North Vietnamese claimed they shot down six planes

A broadcast dispatch said three were felled over the port of Haiphong, hit repeatedly in recent raids. Implying that MIG's were were up to fight again, it said "the people's air force" knocked down two of the three at Haiphong.

There was no immediate comment from American authorities. Of 15 planes that Hanoi had reported destroyed in the previous two days, the U.S. Command in Saigon reported the loss of three.

Allied commanders mounted 53 major operations — considerably above the average—in the never-ending hunt for communist hideouts across South Vietnam. The action was officially described as "light and scattered." Combat casualties on both sides were higher last week than in previous reporting period, Sept. 17-23.

In addition, 2,705 Americans have died in Vietnam of illness, accidents and other causes officially classified as non-hostile. There were 23 such cases last week.

In Washington, the Pentagon listed 141 killed in action for the week. Its official figures often differ slightly from those reported in Saigon because it delays listing a death until paperwork is completed. Excluding those missing, the Pentagon thus reported a total of 100,269 killed and wounded through last Saturday.

Death Penalty To Be Studied

A bill to study the deterrent value of the death penalty was approved without debate in the Senate Tuesday.

The Senate extended the study to January, 1969, so that it could include a statewide referendum on abolition of capital punishment.

The new bill goes back to the House to consider the referendum amendment.

Operetta Guild Names Cast For 'Once Upon A Mattress'

Director Bob Buchanan has completed casting for the Fall production of the UM Operetta Guild, "Once Upon A Mattress".

"Mattress" is based on the famed fairy tale, "The Princess and the Pea", but the version we are familiar with does not cover all the facts. "Mattress" shows us the story as it really happened.

In the starring role of Winifred the Woebegone is a familiar face to the Guild, Karen Connolly, a junior art major. Many will remember her as Rosalie in "Carnival" and Ruth Sherwood in "Wonderful Town".

Playing opposite Karen as Prince Dauntless the Drab is John McAuliffe, a new Guild member, class of '71.

Queen Agravain, a marathon talker who tries her best to keep her son Dauntless single, will be played by Betty Scheinfeldt, a junior.

Rick Kaplan, a graduate student in speech thearapy, is cast as King Sextimus the Silent, who was struck dumb by a witch's curse, but needs no words, as his name implies.

Anne Umana, also a junior, will play the role of Lady Larken, lady-in-waiting to Winifred; Thomas Babson, a junior and still another new face, is cast as her handsome lover, Sir Harry.

Also playing prominent roles in "Mattress" are Tony Francis as the nimble-footed court jester, Bob LaCroix as the minstrel, narrator for the audience, and Tom DeFelice, as the wizard, cohort of the queen.

Assisting Mr. Buchanan on the production end of the show will be our choreographer Sandy Rispler, and our musical director, Bill Neighor.

"Once Upon a Mattress", while being a rollicking musical comedy, still retains its fairy tale charm. The show opens at Bowker Auditorium on November third, and continues on the fourth, tenth, eleventh, and twelfth.

Nomination papers are now available for the filling of the following seats in the Student Senate. They must be returned by October 13th. The election will be held on October 19th.

Rock & Roll Band Leader Recounts His Career in Entertainment World

Before the Soul Sound concert at UM last weekend Jimmy Helmes told the "Union" about his career and himself.

The twenty-four-year old rhythm and blues singer was born in Columbus, Ohio. In 1962 he moved to Boston with a group called "Carl Salley and the Madisons."

The seven-man rock and roll band, according to the singer, played in night spots in downtown Boston for a while. Helmes said, "I was glad to get out of that place. Like everything else it was a step to something else."

When the group broke up, he started performing in nightclubs. He quickly developed the versatile song collection necessary to become a nightclub performer.

"Up to this point I've tried to do enough of everything to please as many people as possible," Helmes added.

However, he thinks rhythm and blues singing has the greatest future. "I think rhythm and blues will taper off to a very listenable but very active sound."

This sound is not something new as far as Helmes is concerned, "It has taken the best of other types of music. Rhythm and Blues will be around for sometime and it can only get better.

Unlike many R&B performers who started playing on guitars or harmonicas, Helmes plays the trumpet. "It was the first musical thing I ever did."

However, he said his solo days are over. The Boston-based performer now has a three-man group, "The Swingmen" as his accompanists.

Helmes pointed out that accompanists are very important to a performer. For this reason, he works with the Swingmen to get the unity needed for a good performance.

Some of the young performer's material is adapted from previous hits. However, Helmes also writes his own material.

This week Helmes' first single recording, "Always," was released on the DATE label of Columbia Records. If his single is a success then he hopes to issue an album with some of his own songs.

The singer plans to stay on the East Coast. Helmes said, "it is the best market for rhythm and blues performers."

Helmes can quickly get to any audience, and if success comes from ability and person, Jimmy Helmes is a sure bet.

President Johnson Orders Freeze On Millions of Federal Spending

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Johnson administration ordered a freeze on $350 million worth of federal spending Thursday and the House Appropriations Committee reported a modest start in its effort to recapture some of the money Congress has poured out.

President Johnson argued meantime that it is neither necessary nor wise for Congress to postpone action on his request for an income tax surcharge until federal spending levels are decided upon.

With many members of the House demanding a spending reduction of at least $5 billion, there has been a debate whether the reductions should be pinpointed by Congress or whether the final decisions should be left to the President.

Johnson, at a news conference called solely to discuss the taxes —spending issue, said the entire nation would pay a burden — some inflation tax "if it fails to face up to its responsibilities" in handling tax and appropriation legislation.

Lutheran Church Presents Second Lecture in Series

As the second in its series of lectures and events commemorating the 450th anniversary of the Reformation, Immanuel Lutheran Church of Amherst, Massachusetts, will present Dr. John Ratté, assistant professor of history, Amherst College, on Sunday, October 8. Dr. Ratté, a prominent Roman Catholic layman who has been active in the ecumenical movement, will speak on the topic, "A Roman Catholic Views The Reformation." His talk will be given in the church, 867 N. Pleasant St., Amherst, at 7:00 P.M.

The Reformation is the name given to developments which followed Martin Luther's protest against abuses in the sale of indulgences within the Roman Catholic Church. October 31, 1517, the day Luther posted his theses for debate on the topic of indulgences at Wittenberg, Germany, has become the traditional date for the beginning of the Reformation.

The Lutheran Church, which emerged from the Reformation, is the largest of the western, non-Roman Catholic churches, numbering nearly 80,000,000 souls. Lutheran churches throughout the world are observing the Reformation anniversary this year.

The public is invited to the lecture. There is no charge.

Rhythm and Blues Singer Talks About His Entertainment Career

By BOB GORMAN

"The only time I feel bad is when there's not a crowd, said rhythm and blues singer Wilson Pickett before his performance at the Soul Sound Concert at UM Saturday night.

Therefore, Pickett must have felt very happy when he finally left the stage after the capacity audience moved foreward, dancing in the aisles and on the chairs.

The 26 year old singer was born in Praitville, Ala. In a Springfield Union interview he said he started his career singing spirituals. Since spirituals never seem to increase in popularity, Pickett said that he joined The Falcons in 1959 where he was lead singer.

The Falcons became popular with You're So Fine and I Found The Love, the latter written by Pickett.

They broke up in 1963, partially because Pickett wanted to go on his own.

In 1965 Pickett had his first hit by himself with Midnight Hour which he wrote. Since then the singer said that he has had over ten big hits and has released five albums. "I prefer to write my own songs," said Pickett. His latest hit, Funky Broadway, is an original as are many of his other hits.

Just as he likes to write his own material, he also likes to choose his accompanists. According to Pickett "The band is definitely important in a performance. First they have to work with each other. It takes a long time to get the right unity."

Pickett now has an eight man band that travels with him. They always warm up the audience before Pickett comes on stage.

However, he is not particular about who his audience is. "I have no favorite audience...just anyone who digs my style of singing." Therefore, the rhythm and blues singer travels anywhere to perform, usually for only a night.

Pickett does have a favorite region where he performs. Canada is a very good market. They are very receptive whenever I go up there." On the other hand he considers the West Coast to have the least receptive audience.

Pickett thinks that rhythm and blues is in. "It has a solid future," according to him and it "will grow steadily in popularity."

Before he left to prepare for the concert he said he planned to stay with rhythm and blues singing.

"It's the life I choose, so I have to like it...It's not the sort of business to be nervous in," Pickett added.

He probably tells this to himself whenever he is being wisked off stage after the audience begins to move towards him.

Pan-Hellenic Council Establishes Plans To Bring Together All Sorority Houses

By JANET CALDWELL

The University's Pan-Hellenic Council has projects involving everyone.

With the unity of the Greek system and community service as their main objectives, the Council has set up inter-sorority and community projects to promote more integration and better communication among the houses themselves.

Conducted last Tuesday was a mass exchange: each sorority sent two girls to every other sorority on campus to meet and talk informally. Because of its success, mass exchanges will be continued monthly.

Other events to be sponsored by the Pan-Hellenic Council include:

Oct. 10—Panel discussions in every dormitory at 7 p.m. Pan-Hel representatives, keeping their individual houses anonymous, will seek to explain objectively the purposes and ambitions of the Greek system and answer all questions. All women students are invited.

Oct. 18—Scholarship tea with the scholarship chairman and president of each house. Announcement will be made of the campus sorority with the highest cumulative average for last semester, and there will be presentation of a plaque.

Nov. 5 — Round-Robins for freshmen will start at 1 p.m. from the Student Union. Pan-Hellenic representatives will divide the girls into groups and take each group for a tour of every house on campus.

Nov. 12, Nov. 19, Dec. 3 and Dec. 17—Open houses will take place from 2:30 to 4 p.m. on each of these Sunday afternoons. Girls may visit houses of their choice.

Community activities are another major part of Council plans this year.

Already started is a tutoring program. Each Pan-Hel house sends 10 girls to Springfield to tutor children in five underprivileged areas. The program is being directed by the Northern Educational System.

The sale of 1,300 chrysanthemum corsages is the goal for Pan-Hellenic representatives at Homecoming. Part of these profits will go to charity. Corsages will be on sale Oct. 21 from 9 a.m. to noon at the Student Union; at the Homecoming game and at the alumni picnic.

University Naiads to Serve As Hostesses for Symposium

Henry and Beulah Gundling, two of the founders of International Academy of Aquatic Art, will be guests at UMass on Oct. 13 and 14 for IAAA's Eastern symposium.

Mr. Gundling, president of IAAA, is also a member of the USA Olympic Games Committee for synchronized swimming. Mrs. Gundling has won the Pan-American Games solo synchronized swimming championship, the USA Senior AAU solo championship for 5 consecutive years, and was selected on the first All-American synchronized swimming team.

The University Naiads will be hostesses for the weekend. The club president is Miss Ellen Megill '68, and the faculty advisor is Miss Esther Wallace. Also assisting in the proceedings are Miss Beverly Reed, and Miss Georgia Reid. Due to limited seating, the public may not attend the symposium events.

STUDENT SENATORS

A reception and orientation for new student senators will be held in the Colonial Lounge, Monday at 7:00. All new senators are expected to attend.

Astronaut Killed In Plane Crash

One of America's astronauts, Marine Maj. C. C. Williams Jr., was killed Thursday in a fiery plane crash near the Florida-Georgia border.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration confirmed the death two and a half hours after the T38 jet plane plunged to earth and disintegrated.

The Eastern Aerospace Rescue and Recovery Center at Robins Air Force Base Ga., said two men were aboard the craft.

The space agency would not confirm this and said the flight plan filed at Cape Kennedy listed only Williams. But a spokesman said passengers sometimes are not listed on the flight plans.

Getting Things Done

National Newspaper Week, being celebrated October 8 to 14th, is dedicated to greater public recognition of the important functions of newspapers in the everyday lives of Americans.

The theme for the week is "Newspapers Get Things Done," providing an opportunity for editors to point to accomplishments for people, communities, and the nation.

Newspapers inform, entertain, educate, and act as the public's "proxies" wherever public business is transacted. They are a constructive force for the growth and development of their communities. They stimulate progressive action; they encourage good citizenship; they back efforts for better schools, better teachers, and quality education; they act as a watchdog in keeping government in line.

The college newspaper has the functions of not only keeping the student body informed and acting as a medium to express opinon but as a training ground for future journalists.

Today's newspapers help with health and safety education and in raising funds for worthwhile purposes. In addition, they give generous support to their communities' spiritual and cultural needs and activities, and help stimulate the economy by moving merchandise for stores and services and ideas.

These are only a few of the many facets of public service. Yes, it is true that newspapers get things done.

Population Limitation

Historical and contemporary analysis allow us to come to the conclusion that the quintessence of the American ideal as manifested is the consideration of the average human being as an individual with potential, as opposed to the totalitarian-collective concept of him as a thoughtless mass.

Our goal must not only be the perpetuation of our liberty but the preservation and extension to all peoples of their legitimate heritage. Inextricably involved in this question is the controversy over birth control.

It is plainly the most portentous issue of our time, for its inevitable corollary is society's indifference to the individual. Th , is caused by the increase in centralization and the resultant depersonalization of everyone, which in turn is caused by the rapid technological changes in our mass-production economy producing profound socio-economic disturbances.

To deal with this confusion, governmental control is being steadily increased. We, as college students, should be especially cognizant of this problem, for no other generation has felt so alone, so alienated, so apathetic as a direct result of the indifference of society than our own.

We should realize that the root cause for all of the socio-economic disturbances is the large amount of excess population which cannot properly be assimilated and which takes up more and more of the minimum space a man needs for physical as well as psychological reasons.

It is no wonder that the crime rate is so much higher in the cities than it is in the country. In the cities, natural man must try to live in an unnatural environment—crowded, constricted, bound in. We know the effect environment can exercise on personality. We have seen the logical outcome of the operation of human nature under irrational conditions in the summer of discontent which has so recently scarred our cities.

Man must control circumstances and must not be controlled by them. He must have convictions and not synthetic opinions forced upon him by hypnoid mass suggestion. The writer realizes that it is the vogue today to deal in abstruse complexities. But he departs from this view in the belief that problems big or small should be dealt with in terms of basics.

And so it is with this problem. For, in the largest sense, it has now become a crisis wherein the very possibilities of self-definition and self-realization are at stake.

In the main, the problem is that the long-term interests of humanity are being obscured by excessive preoccupation with moral-religious barriers, barriers, which when they finally fill, will end the anomaly in large part by themselves. The solution, a long-term and gradual one, is deceptively simple.

It would involve a statutory limit of two children per family, coupled with a world-wide government-sponsored program of free dissemination of birth control information and contraceptive devices to all who request them. To all who might object, we can only refer them to the sorry state of India, where every gain in the GNP is more than absorbed by the annual population increase, resulting in further stagnation of an already choked and teeming subcontinent—not to mention more infanticides and abortions which often result in the death of the mother additionally.

Before the situation there grew so acute, they too allowed relics of the past to guide them in their actions; but when they saw how ephemeral objections were in contrast to the gravity of the shocking social consequences of their reality, drastic measures had to be taken. A law providing for mandatory sterilization of men with three or more children is about to go into effect.

Regular birth control information and contraceptive devices were found to be too slow-acting to save a patient nation. But in our country and in other parts of the world, such drastic measures are not yet necessary. Limitation of families to two children and freely available birth control information and contraceptives would really amount more to a reorientation from the anachronisms and impediments of the past than to a present social revolution.

Finally, the highest purpose of population limitation should not be regarded as essentially negative, but as basically constructive, for there must be an orderly society before man can possess the justification as well as the instigation to create the truly good society.

We would do well to remember that the aforementioned objective is inherent in real freedom. In the final analysis, being not freedom from, but freedom for and that freedom is just as indispensable for security as order through law is a necessary condition for freedom. This is simply not possible when the government has been forced to grow to such scope and authority that it must diminish political and economic freedom for the sake of maintaining stability among an increasingly large and unruly population.

Signing Out . . .

To the Editor:

At our recent Counselor Meeting, we were informed of the new system of sign-out cards for freshmen women. This system obligates the freshman woman to state her specific destination after 7 p.m. for each night in the week in addition to stating her time of return and giving her full signature. Each woman is given a separate card at the beginning of each work. At the end of the week, the housemother must file the cards and retain them for a period of three months.

Besides being a complicated and inconvenient system, we feel that this procedure completely invalidates the work of the University Reform Committee during the Spring of 1966. The lifting of the curfew regulation and the sign-out procedure signified that the University finally recognized that its students were able to accept adult responsibilities. Curfews were imposed only upon freshmen women during the 1966-67 school year. During that time, it was required that the women sign in when they returned to the dorm. This year's policy for freshmen women returns us to the archaic rules which were supposedly abolished by the University Reform Committee.

We would like to know how this policy became fact without the approval of the students. We would also like to know why this policy was not publicized prior to its becoming an established procedure. We would also like to know how this policy became established despite the apparent opposition of the housemothers in the women's dormitories and of the respective area coordinators and their assistants.

Who is responsible for this action? We received notification of this new policy from the Chairman of Women's Affairs, but the exact bureaucratic functionings behind the enactment of the policy are a mystery to us.

We are avid readers and admirers of the Daily Collegian, but nothing has been reported about this new sign-out policy.

Please comment.

Political History: Vietnam

To the Editor:

Mr. Guzowski's letter, (Vietnam Elections, 9-22-67) contains the following passage:

"The holy Geneva Agreement has provided four things in Southeast Asia: 1. a base for Communism, 2. Soviet and Red Chinese supplied Viet Cong. 3. North Vietnamese troops in South Vietnam, Cambodia, and Laos, and 4. increasing terrorism in Thailand."

The Agreements mentioned above were the result of a conference in 1954, whose major accomplishment was the formulation of a compromise which ended the French-Indochinese war.

If the Geneva Agreement provided a base for Communism in Southeast Asia, it was because the Vietnamese nationalist movement for independence was Communist led.

Mr. Guzowski makes the assertion that the Geneva Agreement provided for "Soviet and Red Chinese Viet Cong." It is just as reasonable to say that the Agreements provided for American supplied Viet Cong.

That North Vietnamese troops are in South Vietnam is well known, but it was not provided for by the Agreements.

The Geneva Agreements did not provide for terror in Thailand any more than it provided for American airbases or nearly 40,000 American servicemen in Thailand. All this happened in spite of the Agreements. The rebellion has resulted from weaknesses of the Government.

To the Editor:

It started with Jimmy Helmes, who was not bad for a newcomer. He might even be pretty good in time. But he was trying, perhaps too hard. He had a decent choice of songs, a good rhythm section and a complete selection of Lou Rawlsisms. He closed with a rocking version of Bobby Hebb's "Sunny," which was pretty good except that he couldn't quite figure out how to end it.

At any rate, he was "doing his thing," which is more than I can say for the four pseudo-hippies next to me who saw fit to boo and hiss the man (who couldn't offer them a hip "name") in a most unloving, intolerant and unflowery way.

Next, we UMies were treated to what was probab' the most moving hour Metawampe , seen in many a moon. Stevie Wonder got up and unleashed a torrent of emotion, intellect and physical energy that came from what seemed to be an endless reservior of soul, heart, blood, guts and sweat.

He sang like it ached from every pore. He blew the harmonica with a lyric imaginativeness that made you weak. And he played the drums with such power that you wished John Coltrane could have been there to swing with him.

After this implosion, we, the audience, probably could not have slept with our apathetic selves, were it not for the programmed release that followed.

Wilson Pickett's goose-stepping, electronic, computerized rhythm machine entered. It was loud beyond belief and hypnotic in its endless beat, beat, BEAT, BEAT, *B*E*A*T*. In between the proper soul clichés, there was a moment or two of hope a la the Grateful Dead, but it led to nowhere.

Eventually the boss came on. He screamed at the right times, even though it was impossible to hear him. The audience flowed around him, and after twenty minutes he left with his shirt torn along the dotted line.

And that was it. Oh, where is Stevie Wonder?

Air Force Sargeant Studying For Doctorate in Sociology

WESTOVER, A.F.B.—At forty-three Al Clarke is embarking on a formidable career, one which might deter many a younger man of lesser stature. He is working toward a Doctorate Degree in Sociology at the University of Massachusetts located in the center of the higher education belt in Western Massachusetts.

Master Sargeant ALFRED A. CLARKE, JR.

For former Senior Master Sergeant Alfred A. Clarke, Jr., retired from the U.S. Air Force on September 30, 1967, the road ahead may be tough, but it certainly won't be new.

During 20 years of service, chiefly as a management superintendent, he has garnered two degrees. From the University of Omaha, he earned a Bachelor of General Education in 1965 and was an honor graduate. In June of this year, he earned his Master of Education at Westfield State College in Massachusetts specializing in psychology.

About half of his service was performed overseas, principally in Europe. Add to his accomplishments in the field of education the fact that he is active in the Toastmasters' International, civic music clubs, creative writing groups and a hard-core collector of books (over 800), coins, stamps and original works of art, and there emerges a picture of a man who will trod the paths of Amherst for the next four years knowing full well where they will lead him.

With his wife Helen, and son Timothy, Clarke lives at 188 Pine Street, Amherst while he pursues his Doctorate Degree.

On his study wall will hang memberships in Alpha Kappa Delta and Phi Sigma Omega, The National Honor Society and the American Sociological Association. They're reminders of the tough road that threaded its way through his past 20 years.

Production Assistant Named By Animal Science Dept.

Henry G. Waidlich of Montague has been named assistant superintendent of production testing in the University of Massachusetts department of veterinary and animal sciences, according to Dr. T. W. Fox, head of the department.

Mr. Waidlich will work under the extension dairyman in charge of production testing and will be primarily concerned with the operational aspects of the production testing programs.

A native of Franklin County, he has had life-long experience as a dairy farmer. Prior to assuming his new position, he operated a 50-cow, producer-dealer dairy farm in partnership with his father and brother.

Mr. Waidlich was an honor graduate of the Stockbridge School of Agriculture at UMass., where he majored in animal husbandry. He has also completed courses at Syracuse University and Greenfield Community College.

He is presently chairman of the Board of Selectmen in Montague, and a member of the Boards of Directors of the Franklin County Farm Bureau, Greenfield Farmers Co-op Exchange and Franklin County Hospital.

Great Britain Quits Backing US in Vietnam

SCARBOROUGH, England (AP) Britain's Labor party pressed Prime Minister Harold Wilson's Government Wednesday to quit backing the United States in Vietnam and to work for a quick and permanent halt to bombing of the North.

In another vote defying their leaders, the Laborites' annual convention demanded explusion of Greece from the North Atlantic Treaty Organization as part of an international drive to oust Athens' military leadership.

Where Wilson succeeded in asserting his authority over the 6,000 delegates, many of them predisposed to be skeptical, Foreign Secretary George Brown failed to transmit an impression of credibility.

Brown had the job of explaining why the convention should endorse governmental policy of Vietnam, Greece and other international issues. He was not in top form and brought hoots of laughter when he spoke of his "impartiality" on Vietnam as allowing him "to go to New York, to Washington, to send messages to Hanoi."

In themselves the convention decision cannot bind the Wilson government. It is responsible only to Parliament and the whole electorate.

Volunteers to Aid In Belchertown

Volunteers at the Belchertown State School for the Mentally Retarded are acquiring valuable experience while helping less fortunate people get more out of life. The student volunteers provide tutoring, arts and crafts and sports activities for the youngsters on Saturday afternoons.

To participate in the program volunteers need no other qualifications than sincere enthusiasm and desire to help others.

If you are interested, be at either the North Commons Parking Lot at 1:00 p.m. or at the Newman Center at 1:10 any Saturday to become a participant in this mutually worthwhile experience.

Annual Benefit Circus to be Held At Smith's Clark Science Center

Sophia's Circus will be held on Wednesday, October 11 from 3:30 until 6:15 p.m. on the lawn in front of the Clark Science Center, Smith College.

This year the circus will take its theme from Lewis Carroll's "Alice in Wonderland." It will be held in Scott Gymnasium in case of rain. There will be a 50¢ admission charge to the circus which is open to the public.

Named for Sophia Smith, founder of the college, Sophia's Circus is an annual benefit run by the junior class from which the proceeds go to SOS (Service Organization of Smith). SOS contributes a variety of services and money to the Northampton community. This year the committee of juniors running the project is headed by Sandra Fascell of Miami, Fla. and Ellen Mott of Chicago, Ill.

Entering through the rabbit hole on the Clark Science Center lawn, circus visitors will find Alice's Wonderland consisting of a variety of booths created and decorated by the juniors in each of the 32 campus dormitories. This year there will be a paper flower booth, a Wonderful croquet game and a Mad Hatter's Tea Party booth selling food provided by Smith students and faculty wives.

At 1:00 p.m. there will be a parade of freshmen dressed as their favorite non-Alice characters from Lewis Carroll's book. The winner of the parade will be announced during the circus.

At 4:45 p.m. there will be a circus auction at which Smith students will bid for such prizes as faculty singing waiters and waitresses, President Mendenhall as Santa Claus, and touch football games and singing performances by groups from various men's colleges. Bernard M. Boyle and Richard J. Judson of the Smith art department will serve as auctioneers.

Frosh Gridmen Wage First Battle Against Army Plebes at Stadium

Army's undefeated Plebes open the University of Massachusetts freshman football season Saturday at 1:30 p.m. at Alumni Stadium. There is no admission charge for the game.

The highly-regarded Plebes have defeated the Buffalo State and Villanova frosh teams by scores of 34-20 and 28-0. The Plebes play a nine-game schedule but this is the only away game with the eight others being played at West Point. The Little Redmen have met the Plebes twice in the past. Last fall Army won 13-8 and UMass took a 13-3 decision in 1964.

UMass frosh coach Dave Kelley has had a 68-man team working out in preparation for the six-game schedule. The complete schedule: Oct. 7 Army Plebes, home; Oct. 12 at Boston U. frosh; Oct. 27 Rhode Island frosh, home; Nov. 3 Boston College frosh, home; Nov. 10 at Connecticut frosh; Nov. 17 New Hampshire frosh, home.

Baseballs Fly as Autumn Leaves Fall at UMass

By PAUL LONGO
Staff Reporter

In UMass circles, autumn is synonymous with football, and Greg Landry, but Coach Dick Bergquist's Yankee Conference baseball champs hold rigorous practice sessions five days a week.

To defend the title the team won in his rookie effort last spring, Dick wants to work with his players as much as he can on the diamond.

In March, when spring workouts begin, the outdoor playing areas are usually in poor condition. Practice is held in the Cage, where the coaches find it difficult to judge ability.

"You can see much more in a week of outdoor practice than a month of indoor ball," says the UMass coach, whose first club came within one game of a trip to the college World Series in Omaha.

Former Coach Earl Lorden began the fall program several years ago on a three-day-a-week basis. It initially served to satisfy only the players who desired the work and experience. This year, however, the program has increased greatly in size and organization. Besides the returning members of last year's squad, sophomore hopefuls and promising transfers report a minimum three days a week.

DICK BERGQUIST
'We have a shot'

Assisting Coach Bergquist is Al Barber, who will begin his second year as freshman coach. Practice is not all, however, as the team has already scrimmaged Vermont and Springfield and has games remaining with New Haven State and the University of New York at Albany.

In addition to the fall varsity program, a separate program was begun this fall by the physical education department called "Advanced Baseball". Coach Bergquist supervises this course, entirely comprised of freshmen.

The turnout was overwhelming and its success is giving the coaches a "sneak preview" of next spring's frosh candidates. As for this coming spring, Dick feels he has a team that "should be in every game."

"I can't exactly say how far we'll go. Last year we won a lot of one-run games. We had a good club and we had our share of breaks. As for this year, I'll just say we have a shot at the conference."

Harriers Open Slate at Maine

UMass cross-country coach Ken O'Brien is optimistic of his team's prospects in the new season, which opens tomorrow as the Redmen take on Maine at Orono.

"Several times in the past we haven't been considered near the top, but through this winning tradition and enthusiasm that our kids usually have, they always seem to run their best when the chips are down.

"We have to hope the same thing happens when we run at Orono."

Lonborg Confident

'I'll Get That No-hitter Someday'

BOSTON (AP) — Jim Lonborg Boston's top candidate for the Cy Young Award, was overjoyed and disappointed at the same time Thursday after a one-hit masterpiece in a 5-0 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals in the second game of the World Series.

"I'm always happy when I pitch well and we win, but I'm disappointed that I didn't get the no-hitter. It's the one goal that has eluded me during this fabulous season," he said. "I pitched in the All-Star game, I won 20 games actually 22 and I pitched in the World Series. I'll get that no-hitter some day."

Lonborg hurled perfect ball for 6 1-3 innings, retiring 19 batters in order before Curt Flood walked on a 3-2 count with one out in the seventh.

JULIAN JAVIER
Gets lone hit.

Then Julian Javier, a .281 hitter during the regular season, broke up Lonborg's bid by hitting a sinking liner into the left field corner for a double with two out in the eighth.

"I didn't care about the walk," Lonberg said, "I'm not after any perfect game yet. The no-hitter is what I wanted. Javier hit a hanging slider. As soon as I threw it, I wanted it back. It was the only bad pitch I made all day."

Lonborg, a well-spoken gentleman with a degree from Stanford University, went directly to slugger Carl Yastrzemski as he entered the crowded clubhouse after squaring the World Series at at a game apiece.

"This guy is just fabulous," Lonborg said in praising Yastrzemski, who drove in four runs with a pair of homers.

"He's the greatest hitter I've ever seen."

the Chicago Cubs in 1906, and Claude Passeau for the Cubs in 1945. But Floyd Bevens, of the Yanks had lost his one-hitter in 1947 when Cookie Lavagetto doubled off the right field wall for a 3-2 Brooklyn victory with two out in the ninth.

Yastrzemski skipped batting practice and took a 45-minute nap in the clubhouse after hitting for 20 minutes in a special drill after Wednesday's game in which he went hitless. It paid off with two homers and a single and four runs batted in.

The man who carried the Red Sox on his back to the pennant and everybody's choice for Most Valuable Player honors, slammed a 360-foot homer into the sixth row of the right field stands in the fourth. The blow broke up a scoreless battle between Lonborg and Dick Hughes.

With Lonborg pitching the best game of his career in which his last start and 22nd victory had been Sunday's clinching win over Minnesota, that first run was all he needed.

Coming up in the seventh inning after Jose Tartabull walked and Dalton Jones singled, Yastrzemski slammed a pitch by left-handed Joe Hoerner into the center field bleachers. It was a tape measure job, landing about six or seven rows up among the frantic Red Sox fans about 430 feet from the plate.

The drama piled up as Lonborg whirled through the Cardinal batting order, once, twice and into the third time before he finally walked Flood on a low, outside pitch on 3-2.

Time after time the Red Sox infield had given him a helping hand. Jerry Adair at second base made a marvelous play on a ball hit by Lou Brock in the fourth with a back-handed stop and perfect throw.

Rice Petrocelli fumbled Flood's shot for an instant in the same fourth inning and then gunned him down. It was Petrocelli, the dandy little shortstop, who did it again in the sixth on Dal Maxvill's hopper behind second base and it was Rice to the rescue again for a fine play on Orlando Cepeda's smash behind second for a force play on Flood to end the seventh.

Extra police had been ordered to the dugout area to avoid any repetition of the wild mob scene that followed Lonborg's Sunday effort. There was no trouble this time although a knot of fans appeared around the 22-game winner when he bowed out of the dugout for a moment.

Yaz and Lonborg simply took matters into their own hands this day. The Sox added another run off Hughes in the sixth when he was driven to cover on two walks and an error by Shannon on Jerry Adair's smash off his chest. Ron Willis replaced Hughes and was pitching when Petrocelli drove in George Scott with a long sacrifice fly to Flood in deep center. The run, of course, was charged to Hughes, the 16-6 performer in regular season.

In the seventh Willis ran into a wild streak. Jose Tartabull walked and Jones singled past Shanon to left. With the rain coming down quite hard, Red Schoendienst went to his bullpen and brought in a southpaw pitcher Joe Hoerner to face the left-handed batting Yaz.

It didn't work. Yaz went to two-two and then drove the ball deep into the center field bleachers, driving in Tartabull and Jones ahead of him.

First word from the clubhouse was that Lonborg had a little blister on his right thumb that developed in the seventh inning. Dick Williams, the manager, said the blister bothered his breaking ball but never reached the point where he was thinking of taking him out.

"Pressure?," said Williams in answer to a question. "No, this was fun. You should have been here the last half of the season to see what pressure is." Williams said he will pitch Gary Bell Saturday in St. Louis against the Cards' Nelson Briles after Friday's off day for travel.

"It will be Jose Santiago (Wednesday's loser) in the Sunday game," said Williams. "And then Lonborg will wrap it up Monday."

The rain never stopped play but Lonborg had some long innings sitting in the dugout, while the Cards changed pitchers and the Red Sox scored runs. It took about 17 minutes to play the sixth inning and 24 minutes to complete the seventh with Lonborg still hanging onto a possible no-hitter.

Yaz Dozes, Then Explodes To Send Cards to Dreamland with H.R. Bat

BOSTON (AP)—Carl Yastrzemski awoke from a 45-minute clubhouse nap Thursday and turned the second game of the World Series into a nightmare for the St. Louis Cardinals.

The brilliant Boston slugger, held hitless in four at-bats by Bob Gibson in the first game Wednesday exploded with all the fire and fury that made him the American League's triple-crown winner.

He hit two home runs, added a single and drove in four runs in Boston's 5-0 victory that evened the series at one game each.

And he did it after substituting a nap on the trainer's table for batting practice.

"I took batting practice for about 20 minutes after yesterday's game, and I felt real sharp afterward," Yastrzemski said, straddling two wooden folding chairs in the mobbed Red Sox clubhouse.

"I didn't take any batting practice before today's game because there wasn't any need for it. I felt good, real sharp. When I take batting practice after one game, I don't like to take it before the next. It takes a lot out of me.

"So instead, I took a nap on the trainer's table. I do that sometimes. I slept for about 45 minutes, and the trainer woke me up at about a quarter to 12. I felt great when I woke up."

Then Yaz, Boston's left fielder, went out and took infield practice.

Infield practice?

"When I don't take batting practice," he explained, "I go out to third base and take infield practice. I do it just to loosen up, look at the ball and get the feel of it."

That warm-up out of the way, Yaz went out and got his first hit of the series—a 380-foot bases-empty homer off Dick Hughes for Boston's first run in the fourth inning, a 430-blast with two aboard off Joe Hoerner in the seventh and a single in the eighth.

"I was going for home runs all day," the 28-year-old lefthanded slugger said, sweat dripping on to listener's notebooks.

"Against Gibson, I didn't go for homers because I didn't feel real sharp. I just wanted to lay the bat on the ball.

"But when you feel good, you naturally go for home runs, and I felt exceptionally good.

"I didn't feel good in the first game. The two days off hurt me. I don't like to take days off."

Someone reminded Yastrzemski about something he said Wednesday after his 20-minute post-game session in the batting cage.

"Yes, I said I'd get three hits and two homers, but I was only kidding," Yaz protested. "I only said I'd probably do it because I felt so good. I wasn't predicting anything. It was all in jest."

St. Louis Sings the Blues After Blinding One Hit Gem

BOSTON (AP)—"He was throwing them right in there," Manager Red Schoendienst said after Boston's Jim Lonborg and the Red Sox beat St. Louis 5-0 in Thursday's second game of the World Series.

Julian Javier, the brilliant-fielding St. Louis second baseman, spoiled Lonborg's bid for a no hitter with a sharp double to the left-field corner in the eighth inning.

"I hit a good pitch," Javier said. "He threw me some good pitches all day." He added that he felt the ball was in there when it left the bat.

Schoendienst said there was little discussion on the Cardinal bench about Lonborg pitching a no-hitter. "We were more concerned about winning the game," Schoendienst continued, "But, of course, you've got to get some hits to win."

Mike Shannon, the St. Louis third baseman said, "Lonborg pitched a heckuva game out there."

Schoendienst said Lonborg threw about what his team expected, a lot of sliders and sinkers. "That control of his was the big thing," he added.

Coach Briggs in 35th Year

Veteran Booters Open at Maine

While the football team takes the day off, soccer team opens its season tomorrow by traveling to play Yankee Conference rival Maine at Orono.

Coach Larry Briggs, starting his 35th year as leader of the Redmen, feels he has a team that can challenge for the Conference title. The Redmen finished in a three-way for the title in 1965 and were edged by Vermont last fall.

Briggs has a probable starting lineup of at least seven lettermen led by Co-Captains Dick Hale and Gerry Cellilli. He is still undecided about his starting goalie. All-Conference selection Larry Martin has graduated and his understudy last year, Carl Gustafson, has decided not to play this year. Briggs must choose between senior Elliott Klein and junior Stephen Kramer.

The complete Massachusetts 1967 varsity soccer schedule: Oct. 7 at Maine; Oct 14 at Connecticut; Oct. 18 at Trinity; Oct. 21 Rhode Island, home; Oct. 25 at W.P.I.; Oct. 28 Tufts, home; Nov. 1 Amherst, home; Nov. 4, Vermont, home; Nov. 11 Coast Guard, home; Nov. 18 at New Hampshire.

Sam Sparks Speaks Out

'That's Right, Ken, The Wind Is Blowing'

The 1967 Red Sox have soared from ninth place to a dramatic pennant in one year. Their pitching has improved, their catching has changed, their defense has been strengthened and their manager is new.

Only one aspect of the Boston Red Sox is consistent. We Red Sox fans know that no matter how the Red Sox may fluctuate in the standings, their announcing team will remain consistent throughout the years. If Ken Coleman and Mel Parnell were broadcasting the World Series together, we could be certain of the professional treatment it would get from the Red Sox announcers.

Let's listen in on a hypothetical broadcast of the World Series by the team of Coleman and Parnell, while Ned Martin is taking a turn on television.

Ken: Mel, it certainly is a beautiful day here at Fenway Park.

Mel: Yes, Ken, it certainly is a beautiful day here at Fenway Park.

Ken: With the Series tied, 3-3, this final game becomes pretty much of a must game for both teams.

Mel: That's right, Ken. This game certainly is a must game for the Sox and the Cardinals.

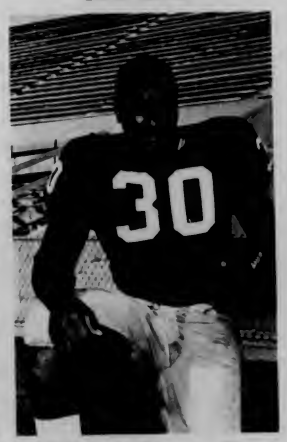
Ken: The Red Sox have taken the field. Jim Lonborg is ready to pitch against Lou Brock. Mel, being a former pitcher, give us the inside scoop on Lonborg.

Mel: Lonnie throws the curve, the slider and has that good fastball which becomes very difficult to hit when thrown at a batter's head.

Ken: That's right, Mel. And did you notice that the wind is blowing out today. Do you think the wind will be a factor?

Mel: The wind is blowing out today and I would say that the wind might definitely be a factor.

Ken: While we were talking, Brock just flied out.



Mel: That's right, Ken. And if Lonborg gets the next 26 men out without a hit, he'll have a no-hitter. And that reminds me of the time in '56 when I pitched a no-hitter against the White Sox.

Ken: Mel, I'd ask you to tell us about it since the listening audience hasn't heard you talk about your no-hitter for 10 minutes now, but Curt Flood just hit a homerun to ruin Lonborg's no-hitter.

Mel: That's right, Ken. And the wind was blowing out and that very possibly could have been a factor.

Ken: How would you say giving up the home run ball affects the pitcher, being a former pitcher yourself.

Mel: Well, Ken, giving up the home run ball can very often hurt a pitcher.

METAWAMPE'S GRID PICKS

Yes, he's back. Metawampe had promised to jump off the Tallahatchie Bridge if the Redmen lost but one game this year.

And as he headed for his deadly destination under the grim cover of darkness last Saturday night, he bitterly reflected on his life's many failures.

There was his childhood sweetheart, who became the squaw of his best friend, Wedawampe. Later there was the time he tried to register his horse on campus.

Finally, he sadly mulled over his shortcomings as a football forecaster. Like the time last year when he announced to the world that Notre Dame would either beat or bow to Michigan State. Or the time he picked Holy Cross to win the National League pennant.

He soberly considered his 36-19 record on last week's predictions, the worst showing of his career.

But as he approached the gloomy overpass, he saw a tall, dark-haired girl throwing something off the bridge.

He greeted her, "How!" But she said, "You mean 'why', don't you?"

Metawampe meditated on that for 15 minutes, then turned homeward, realizing that nothing ever comes to no good up on Chocktaw Ridge.

As he walked, his heart beat quickened as he asked the Muse of verse for inspiration. An artist thrives on suffering, he thought, as he composed the following pigskin predictions.

PRESIDENT JOHN W. LEDERLE

University College Is Planned As Innovation for Education

By JAMES FOUDY
Staff Reporter

A bold innovation in the field of higher education has been proposed for the University of Massachusetts in the form of University College.

Housing 5,000 students, University College, as presently conceived, will be the attainment of the residential college concept pioneered in the Orchard Hill complex. Its features will include:

- a separate faculty with its own dean reporting directly to the Provost and the President.
- a unique curriculum based on a four course per semester program with the development of more full year as opposed to half-year courses.
- a stress on independent study with a reduction in the number of exams and changes in core curriculum requirements.
- closer student-faculty relationships since classrooms, faculty and student living quarters, dining and recreation areas will all be located within the same complex.

The plans for the complex were released in a 100 page report this week by Professor William C. Havard, chairman of the University College Committee and head of the Department of Government.

Expected to be completed in 1973, the complex will serve both as a decentralizing factor for the growing university as well as a means of expansion toward the anticipated enrollment of 28,000 within the next decade.

According to the report, University College will be a "college within the University of Massachusetts which is in most respects a microcosm of the University itself." Admission will be open to any underclassman and it is expected that the majority of students will concentrate in the areas traditionally covered by Arts and Sciences.

Chapter One of the report outlines the problems that a rapidly growing university faces the depersonalization and alienation that results from sheer size; a rigid academic program with its systematized education; and the loss of close knit student-teacher relationships. Therefore, the report states that one of the goals of University College will be an attempt to restore university life to a human scale".

Chapter One also deals with various types of solutions to these problems pointing out that shortcomings in the present residential college set ups on campus are a result of trying to impose a flexible living-study condition on inflexible building arrangements.

The report stresses that the University College building program should be based on the academic program with allowances for future development.

In the area of academics, the committee has recommended a basic core curriculum of six introductory year-long courses. These are: English, Philosophy or History or Fine Arts, Biological or Physical Science, Logic or Mathematics, Social Science and Modern Foreign Language.

In explaining its recommendation for a core curriculum the Committee wrote: "we have concluded that the individual disciplines as traditonally organized furnish the best foundation for a core curriculum." These courses should serve both majors and non-majors in that field, the report states and carefully outlines the reasons for the selection.

Concerning it the committee feels that advanced study should be organized into two programs, general degree and concentrated program.

Under the general degree program a student would choose six one semester courses (or three full year courses) in his major, and four one semester courses from two other departments. This would be equivalent to thirty-two hours of credit in a major (including the relevant core course)

President Lederle is Selected To Serve on N.Y. Advisory Board

University of Massachusetts President John W. Lederle is one of three prominent educators named to serve on the Advisory Board of the New York State Legislative Institute, it was announced recently by Dr. Lewis P. Welch, acting dean of the Graduate School of Public Affairs of State University of New York at Albany.

The Institute was established last spring by the New York State Legislature to study the legislative process. Centered at the State University of New York at Albany, it will conduct academic and research programs, establish a library in legislative systems, publish books and periodicals, assist in the orientation of new legislators and, at the request of the legislature, provide assistance in improving legislative management and operations. Four academic chairs on the legislative process will be established and the Institute will serve as a national center for research, training and information on legislatures.

The first meeting of the seven member Advisory Board will be held next week in Albany. After investigation and study, board members will prepare plans and submit recommendations to the Chancellor and Board of Trustees of State University of New York and to the Legislature for the control, organization, operation and activities of the Institute. The New York Legislature has appropriated $25,000 to plan, establish and develop the Institute.

Educators joining Pres. Lederle on the Advisory Board will be Dr. Ernest S. Griffith, dean of the School of International Service at American Univ., and Dr. Malcolm E. Jewell, Prof. of political science at Univ. of Ky.

Remaining appointments to the Advisory Board were made by Speaker Anthony Travia of the N. Y. State Assembly and Sen. Earl Brydges, temporary president of the N. Y. State Senate. Speaker Travia named Assemblywoman Gail Hellenbrand and Assemblyman Victor Waryas and Sen. Brydges appointed Sen. D. Clinton Dominick and John Marchi.

Pres. Lederle has had broad experience as a lawyer, public administrator and educator. Former Controller of the State of Michigan, he has also served as director of the Institute of Public Administration at the Univ. of Mich. He has been a legislative consultant for several Congressional committees and was chairman of the Conference of Directors of Bureaus of Government Research. At one time he was general counsel for the Michigan Municipal League. Pres. Lederle currently serves as co-chairman of the joint committee on education and government service of the U.S. Dept. of Agriculture and the Nat. Assoc. of State Universities and Land Grant Colleges.

There will be an important meeting of all News Make-Up personnel Monday, October 9 at 7 p.m. in the Collegian office.

Red Sox Drop Second In a Row to St. Louis

ST. LOUIS (AP)—Big Bob Gibson pitched the favored St. Louis Cardinals within one win of the world championship Sunday with a five hitter while his mates blasted the Boston Red Sox pitching staff for nine hits in a 6-0 victory in the fourth game.

Nine Cardinals went to bat in a four-run first inning that routed Jose Santiago and left the American League champs on the brink of elimination.

Only three clubs in the long history of Series competition have come back from 3-1 deficits and one of them was the 1903 Red Sox in the days when a Series was best-of-nine games. The others were the 1925 Pittsburgh Pirates against Washington and the 1958 New York Yankees against Milwaukee.

Gibson, easing along to his second Series triumph and his fourth in a row dating back to 1964, was in complete charge of the faltering Red Sox.

Boston never got a man as far as second base until Carl Yastrzemski opened the ninth with a double.

Another sellout crowd of 54,575 watched their favorites roll to an easy victory on a chill, damp afternoon with the thermometer reading only 55 degrees at game time and lights turned on all the way.

A light rain fell in the eighth inning, and the fans began to file out of Busch Memorial Stadium. The more hardy souls sprouted raincoats and umbrellas and stayed for the kill.

Lou Brock, who had four hits in the opening game, boosted his Series average to .500 with a double and single in four trips. The Cards' speedy bullet also stole another base, his third, all on the first pitch.

Every Cardinal, except Mike Shannon and Gibson, had at least one hit in the rout. Shannon walked once and scored a run. Gibson also walked once.

Jim Lonborg, the Red Sox's 22-game winning ace who threw a one-hitter against the Cards Thursday for Boston's only win, will try to keep the American Leaguers alive Monday afternoon and two minor programs in other departments.

Under the Concentrated program for students meeting set scholastic standards, a student would take seven to eight full year courses in his major with two or three units open to free election.

The Committee also considered the possibility of including undergraduate professional work such as Chemistry, Teacher Education and Engineering into University College. Chapter Four of the report illustrates how these programs could be incorporated.

Chapter Five of the report deals with the structuring of the academic program. Highlights of the recommendations in this section include:

- use of the terms units and half-units to signify year-long and semester-long courses and the requirement of 16 units or 32 half units for graduations.
- maintaining the present cumulative average system with a change from semi annual to annual grade report.
- development of year long courses.
- evaluation of student performance in ways other than exams alone.

The report suggests the possibility of a two hour exam at Christmas and a three hour exam in May. Time ordinarily used to prepare for our hour exams could be devoted to independent research.

- re-evaluation of grading so that it represents achievement in the comprehension of subject matter and not just the rote memorization of the material.
- possibility of making up a failure by being re-examined on the course material in August.
- advanced placement with credit by achievement on placement exams. This could be applied to any course in University College.
- possibility of taking one core course and one elective under a pass-fail option.

The report also deals extensively with student life and recommends that an Associate Dean for student life in University College report directly to the Dean of the College.

The Committee stressed the importance of including all segments of the University College in the operation of the complex and said that "it expected that teaching faculty will be the 'prime movers' in the workings of student life, helping to create a stimulating living-learning environment."

The report also develops ideas on the subjects of staffing, recruitment of faculty and the phasing of the program with a recommendation that the first incoming class of University College students in 1971 be housed temporarily in one of the old dormitory complexes. Three classes of University College would be moved when new quarters are completed in 1973.

Students Throng to Attend Lectures Of the 'Pied Piper' of Botany Dept.

by Ken Bates
Staff Reporter

You come early so you can find a seat. As you enter the auditorium for the first time you notice something different. There are no lights on, the only illumination emanates from slides projected on the screen, and there's music playing. It's Bob Dylan.

You find a seat. You look around at the faces. They aren't the faces you see in other classes. They are faces filled with a happy anticipation. They're looking forward to 50 minutes of sugar coated cranium cramming.

He arrives. All activity stops, all eyes are on him, all ears await his soft soothing voice. Almost imperceptively the music changes to something smooth and groovey—Herbie Mann, Ahmad Jahmal, Segovia, Beethoven, someone new each class.

He speaks of many things, of places, people and plants. And these things become inextricably interwoven. Plants and people —warp and woof become interwoven into one beautiful fabric. You begin to feel at one with nature and life. A real living and breathing part of it. You're getting turned on.

And he continues. The slides change. You just saw a Goya painting, now you're looking at a chloroplast. You have just imperceptively slid into the lecture. You're high now, your mind has been cleansed of all tension and distractions. Your perception is clear, you are prepared to ingest and digest all that is to follow.

The class ends, all too soon, students flock about him asking him to lecture at their dorms, they ask him philosophical questions, how to synthesize L S D. Some are cynical and try to embroil him in metaphysical arguments—impossible! He's not interested in philosophising life, he wants to live it and feel it in it's most natural aspects.

But the cynics are few and they soon realize they have nothing to attack. Most want to learn something from him, some want to become like him or at least feel things and perceive things as he does, some want to learn more about this fascinating man, maybe even dig into his very essence, his soul.

And what do they find. They find he is sincere as a person can be, that he really isn't a hippie, that he doesn't believe in smoking, drinking, or narcotics. His pleasures come from life itself. He is tuned into the forces and mysteries of life. He has no fanatical philosophies and he's not an anarchist, he's just another human being with deep insights into many things. He likes to savor every moment of existence—"to live for the moment, the second."

He is Rousseau's natural man in an environment whose laws have become disparate from the laws of nature. Some of the things he teaches are worth far more than the three credits you get from the course. He is a pleasant and profound interlude in our college life. He's turning us on.

Chicago Wins Competition For Democratic Convention

WASHINGTON (AP) — Chicago won the competition for the 1968 Democratic Presidential Nominating Convention Sunday night.

National Chairman John M. Bailey announced at a news conference that Chicago was chosen unanimously by the convention site committee at a two hour meeting.

It won out over bids from Houston, Texas, and Miami Beach Fla.

There was no immediate announcement of a time for the convention, although it was expected to follow by at least 30 days the Aug. 5 convening of the Republican Nominating Convention in Miami Beach.

United Auto Workers Vote Increase In Emergency Dues for Strike Fund

DETROIT (AP) — A United Auto Workers convention Sunday approved a hefty emergency dues increase to bolster the union's strike fund, and Walter P. Reuther, UAW president, then predicted his union's strike against Ford Motor Co. could be the longest in history.

Reuther said that unless there is some improvement by Ford at the bargaining table within the next week to 10 days, "I think we might be in a strike equal to or exceeding the one we had at GM."

The Union struck General Motors for a record 119 days in 1945-46 over wages.

The 60 year old union chief made his comments at a news conference after a special union convention overwhelmingly agreed to take $20 million more a month in dues from union members.

The 2,400 delegates approved the emergency dues to replenish the union's strike fund, now being drained of $5.2 million a week to support 160,000 UAW members on strike at Ford across the country.

"If there is no significant change in the company's attitude in the next week or 10 days," Reuther said, "Ford Motor Co. has made a policy decision to force a long and costly strike,"

The Ford strike enters its 34th day Monday. The workers walked off their jobs Sept. 7 over new contract demands, which include, among other things, a substantial wage increase.

Guest Editorial

Help

To the editor:

Your editorial suggesting screening the tower balconies "to protect the unfortunates of society from themselves" is a thoughtful expression of concern for the lives and safety of fellow students. It is this capacity for concern, for tenderness, for caring about the welfare of others which is one of the most precious ingredients of life. It is an ingredient which, in large measure, is responsible for transforming human existence from being a mere animal struggle for survival to being an experience which is, or can be, both exciting and satisfying. I endorse your concern heartily, but at the same time I wonder if the means you suggest is the most effectual way of expressing it.

The person who has decided that the struggle of life is intolerable almost invariably has had a long and bitter experience with frustration, loss of dignity, defeat. Failure in reaching goals of independence and maturity has been compounded by failure in developing enduring and satisfying relationships with other people (peers, professors, or parents). Life has deteriorated to being an endless and lonely struggle against hopeless odds. Most victims of this lonely frustration call for help from their fellows in one way or another: by clinging to acquaintances in abject fear, by suddenly and unnaturally burying themselves in work, by self-destructive drinking—or driving—and in a myriad other ways. Some make overt frantic but ineffectual gestures of self mutilation or destruction; a few will, quietly and without disturbance, proceed deliberately to end the struggle once and for all.

Ideally, our main efforts should be directed to removing the causes of this frustration. Just as the intolerable indignities, frustration, and inhumanity of the ghettos are the basic cause of racial riots (the riots in their self-defeating nature are in some ways similar to suicide attempts), so we should hope to eliminate the dehumanizing and humiliating factors which deny the development of real personal relationships in family, school, community, and working situations. By the time students have reached college, however, it is too late for us to eliminate those factors which already have influenced their lives; we can only recognize and modify them.

If we are to meet the needs of these "unfortunates", and they are truly unfortunate—often tormented beyond our understanding—we must try to be sensitive to their calls for help. It is through the concern of roommates, counselors, heads of residence, faculty, clergymen, health professionals, and many other members of the University community that we can be most effectual in expressing our concern for other members of the community. The Mental Health Service at the infirmary is only one of many sources for help where any member of the student body can turn for help at any hour of the day or night with the assurance of receiving thoughtful attention in complete confidence.

Concerning the proposed screens, I doubt they will serve the purpose intended. To be consistent, we should screen all windows, balconies, etc., above the third floor. This would be both a tremendous and, I suspect, a self-defeating project. We are determined to treat students as mature individuals who are able to make thoughtful decisions concerning their lives. By many students the installation of screens would be seen as an ever-present reminder of our lack of confidence in their ability to make these thoughtful decisions. Instead of improving the situation we might, therefore, find more students reacting to this indignity with either greater rebellion or earlier defeat. (Incidentally, it is my impression that the screens in many high buildings are installed primarily to protect the innocent pedestrians below from being the victims of thoughtless acts of those in the buildings above.)

It is true that suicide is relatively more frequent among college students than among some other groups of the population. Actually, our experience among students at the University has been unusually fortunate during the past few years, in having a far lower incidence of suicide than would be expected. We should like to think that in some measure this is a reflection of the thought, care, and attention which has been invested in developing a residence hall climate and a variety of advising or counseling systems which encourage the development of maturity in students, while at the same time providing a response to the many calls for help which are made from time to time. It is my conviction that we shall make far more progress in meeting the needs of students if we invest our efforts in strengthening the network of helping resources available than by erecting a few physical barriers, which always can be eluded by someone who is convinced that no help is available.

A White Rat

To the Editor:

Recently, I walked into my Botany 101 class at 3:35—anxious to hear another of Dr. Drum's interesting and stimulating lectures. I sat in my usual seat waiting for something unusual.

As the lights faded and Bob Dylan chanted "The Times They are a Changing," Dr. Drum threw flowers into the audience, instructing us to feel the flowers; noting the texture, and so forth.

He proceeded to rip his plant apart, stamp on it, and proclaim that we students didn't "feel any thing" for his flower. "What does make you feel?"

Then he picked up a white rat and killed it with a sharp instrument. We felt, or at least I did; but did he?

I think I realize the point he was trying to make (relating to our text An Essay on Morals). But the taking of a life, no matter how low a form it is, should have a very specific and important purpose.

Semi-Poetry Eleven

To the editor:

twelve o'clock by the north side bridge,
climbing up, over the side,
somebody cried,
somebody died,
but no one wept.

voices in the wet night proclaim,
"musta been insane," but the uninterested rain,
after relinquishing its claim,
flows silently into the gutter.

Law Breaking?

To the editor:

The editorial ("Our Laws You're Breaking", Sept. 28) is disturbing in that it reflects the kind of thinking which afflicts a large segment of American society today.

The writer appears to believe that it is possible to persuade President Johnson to change his policy in Southeast Asia—and that this can be accomplished by traditional political means. Moreover, the writer feels it is very dangerous for Americans to become involved in acts of civil disobedience.

In terms of the war in Vietnam, the fact is that a significantly large group in Congress have voiced their strong disapproval of the war—to no avail.

Recent public opinion polls and countless antiwar groups and influential international figures have appealed to the President to press more vigorously for negotiations—to no avail.

The political reality is that the foreign policy of the US in the nuclear age is largely controlled by the President, and he is the only man who can stop the bombing and initiate negotiations.

The fundamental question which necessarily arises in the face of this threat is: how much longer can Americans wait for the Administration to come to its senses?

It seems to me that, rather than performing a disservice to the nation, those who do actively resist this war are serving far more wisely than those who can only counsel patience.

RESIST organizers are quite accurate in assuming that, since "peaceful and patient protests have been getting nowhere", the only alternative is massive civil disobedience.

Academic Credit For ROTC . . . Pros and Cons

By DAVID BASKIN
Editorial Staff

Students for Political Action are demanding the abolition of academic credit for ROTC and AFROTC and the use of University facilities for National Guard and Reserve Officer Training. Their reasoning is extremely unrealistic.

The SPA wishes abolition of the above two existing conditions because non-students and veteran Reserve Officers are now using ROTC facilities for training. If these facilities are the best available in the area, why shouldn't they be used by the men who train to keep our country safe? It is certainly triviality to take issue with such a situation.

The second reason the SPA gives for demanding abolition is that ROTC and AFROTC are anti-intellectual due to the authoritarian nature of the military establishment. SPA feels that training for combat duty does not deserve academic credit. Certainly military establishments must be authoritarian, since they are the means by which a nation's security is kept safe. Survival of a nation depends on the execution of commands in time of danger by the military. Why shouldn't credit be given for ROTC since the skills learned there are as important as skills in art, English or historical research. For the U.S. to keep its position in the world, our military strength must be effective. Shouldn't those who keep us secure be given credit?

SPA says ROTC encourages blind obedience to government policy on the part of students and encourages military solutions to world problems. Some ROTC members have denied this statement, saying they feel no such pressure. However, if these are in part true isn't it better that it be students who participate in ROTC since they are also being exposed to high values in their other academic studies and can bring to ROTC a sense of moral responsibility and intelligent use of the military in solutions to world tensions.

A nation's influence depends in part on its military power—altruism is of no use against bayonets. Civilian authority must control the military mind, but if intelligent men participate in ROTC the military will not be quite so un-intellectual or single-minded.

Therefore, I feel that the SPA's protest is liberalism carried to the point of ridiculousness. It is a case of being unable to recognize the benefits of ROTC to the nation because of the few necessary restrictions it imposes on the individual.

Boston Uni...sity is working on a policy of no graduation credits for ROTC courses. Northeastern University has started the same campaign; interested students at UMass are similarly working toward this end.

The main objections raised against accreditation of ROTC at these three schools and at others across the country is that this military group remains contrary to the goals of the University, and therefore credit is not deserved by those in the course.

The function of the University is to educate. The main goal of education is to open people's minds to critical thinking. If a student graduates with four years of rote facts, but without the incentive for further learning and the need for constant questioning, he has not yet received a true education.

..ROTC courses do not encourage critical thinking. They do not encourage questioning of basic principles of society or different aspects of culture. They remain classes of training—and training of specifics is not true education.

ROTC is a military establishment. If the military must exist—as most people do agree—it should then exist as a government organ. If the military, in the position of ROTC, is to exist as a group in a college campus, it should then remain an extra-curricular group for those interested in it—but not an official academic department able to give students credit for graduation and easy A's for average-raising.

The Daily Collegian, the campus political groups, APO and the Outing Club—plus fraternities and sororities—are more educational that ROTC, in teaching thought and stressing leadership through experience, not uniform. None of these groups can give credits—yet they remain active because of the educational experience gained. They do not even offer the added advantages of a future career without worry of being drafted as a private; or the extra bonus of a small monetary stipend—as does the Reserve Officers Training Corps.

Because it is a military group and has no relationship to the critical thinking education to be gained at the University, graduation credits for ROTC should be abolished.

Senate Sponsors Orientation For Newly Elected Senators

Monday at 7 in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union, the officers and committee chairmen of the Student Senate will conduct an orientation session for all newly elected Senators.

The meeting will begin with a brief talk by Vice President Boronski on the responsibilities of the Senator within the Senate structure. Following the Vice President's talk, the President of the Senate, James Collins, will address the new Senators on the goals of the Senate and the overall responsibilities of the individual senators.

At 7:30, refreshments will be served and the meeting will take on an informal nature to allow the Senators the chance to discuss their questions and opinions with each other, the committee chairmen, and the Senate officers.

All Senators elected for the first time last Tuesday are expected to attend. It is also requested that all Senators from the Southwest Area be present.

New Faculty Peace Group Meets To Discuss Plans for Semester

By PETE WARD
Staff Reporter

Last week, twenty members of the Faculty Group on Peace and War gathered in Memorial Hall to discuss program suggestions for the coming semester. Also attending the meeting were several members of the campus New Left student organization, the Students for Political Action.

Both the Faculty Group and the S.P.A. are known on campus primarily for their firm opposition to the Vietnam war, and their association with the ideals and programs of the New Left. The two organizations cooperated last year in opposing the Vietnamese war on campus, organizing the massive anti-war demonstration that was held in New York, and participating in other related projects.

During the meeting, Dr. Gerald Braunthol of the Government Department lead the Faculty Group in discussing a series of proposals for action during the coming semester. Soon after the meeting was underway, Dr. Braunthol invited the S.P.A. represenatitives to brief the Faculty on their plans, and agreed to a mutual effort by both groups to keep informed of each others plans and activities.

The S.P.A. also discussed the current campus opposition to certain facets of R.O.T.C. presence on campus. It was decided that since the Faculty Senate recently established a Committee on Military Affairs at the University, the Faculty Group on Peace and War will channel its actions concerning R.O.T.C. through this body and the Faculty Senate.

The activities of the Valley Peace Center were outlined to the members, and it was announced that the Center is already hiring busses for the October 21 Confront The Warmakers Demonstration in Washington. As the Valley Peace Centre seeks to coordinate peace activities in the five college area, it was agreed by the Faculty Group and the S.P.A. that plans for the trip would be made through the Peace Center. Also mentioned were the Center's plans to offer draft counseling to students in the area.

Among the proposals for the Faculty Group's program for this year were a film and drama series, and efforts to encourage an increased dialogue between faculty and students on Vietnam and other topics.

Also discussed were preliminary plans for a Draft Symposium in November and a Vietnam Symposium in December. It was aparent that one of the major goals of the Faculty Group on Peace and War this year will be the education of the university community to the anti-war position in relation to the Vietnamese conflict.

"The Family Way" Comments On Problems of Newlyweds

By JOHN McNALLY
Staff Reporter

The Family Way is a seemingly rare, but actually real happening in the lives of two young people about to share their lives together. Hywel Bennett, a newcomer to the movies, gives an exceptional performance in the role of Arthur, a disturbed spouse. Hayley Mills plays the female lead and turns in a moderately good performance as Jennie ("she's twenty and still a virgin, which makes her a rare bird.")

Jennie and Arthur get married, which is normal; but then nothing was normal. Art is bothered by a block against his father, played by John Mills. He is certain that his father hates him. Due to a practical joke, Art does not spend his wedding night in bed with Jennie.

Events proceed in this problematic vein, and as a result, Arthur and Jennie do not consummate their marriage. This basically is the main problem in the movie. But as things go on, the plot takes on a strange multiplicity.

It seems that the honeymoons in both families went bad. Arthur's dad brought his best friend on their honeymoon. Jennie's parents are rivals from the beginning. Thus it is that the plot and not the acting becomes the central force holding the movie together.

This movie holds something for everyone. As Arthur's dad says to his younger brother, "It's life son, at your age it'll make you laugh, but one day it'll make you cry."

President Johnson Challenges World Educators To Use Modern Communications for Learning

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. (AP) — President Johnson threw out a challenge to the world's educators to try to make use of modern communications to extend learning and to get world leaders "to convert man's tragic will to destroy into a determination to build."

The President pointed to the "shocking facts" that in the 20th century, the richest age of history, four adults in 10 cannot read and write and "most people end their lives unable to write 'cat' or 'dog'." Speaking to an International Conference on the World Crisis in Education before some 200 delegates from 54 countries at this restored colonial capital of Virginia, the President said tnese are facts that cry out "shame on this world! Shame on its leaders."

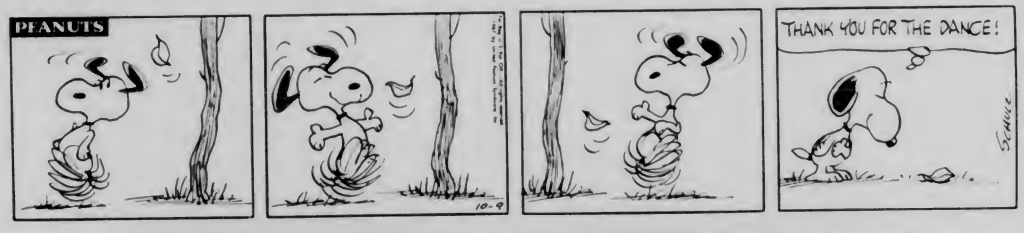
The President's remarks were made in a prepared text. Johnson said, as he has said before, that he hopes future historians will call this period in America "the age of education" for what the U. S. government has done to increase its aid to learning.

But, he said, when it comes to education "every nation, including this one, is still a developing country."

The President placed three challenges before the conference which he initiated in a speech at the East-West Center of Cultural and Technological Exchange in Honolulu last October.

—How to use educational television to accelerate basic education for our children, make the best teachers available to a maximum number of students.

—How to make the best scholars and teachers in the world available to all universities — wherever they may be—through satellite communication.



—And how we can use the latest methods of microfilming and communication to provide those doing scholarship and research everywhere the best library facilities that there are anywhere.

Dean of Education School To Speak At Teacher Preparation Association

Dr. Dwight W. Allen, newly appointed dean of the University of Massachusetts School of Education, will be the keynote speaker at the 48th annual conference of the New England Teacher Preparation Association (NETPA) on Saturday, Oct. 14 in Boston.

Dr. Allen, currently associate professor of education at Stanford University, will discuss new approaches to teacher education. He will assume his new position at UMass on January 1, 1968, replacing Dean Albert W. Purvis, who retired in June.

Dr. Robert C. Jones, coordinator of student teaching at UMass and president-elect of NETPA, is the conference program coordinator. According to Dr. Jones, NETPA is an organization of students and faculty from educational institutions in New England having teacher education programs. They meet annually to discuss new programs and educational techniques in teacher education.

The students participate in the planning and operation of all the association's activities, Dr. Jones said.

Dr. Richard Clark, coordinator of internships at Stanford University, will address the group on the theme of this year's conference, "Microteaching in Teacher Preparation."

In addition to general conference sessions, the conference will include demonstrations and exhibits of new teaching methods.

Cards Hope Carlton Can End It All

(14-9) Southpaw Birds Choice In Fifth and Final (?) Contest

ST. LOUIS (AP)—The St. Louis Cardinals took a 3-1 lead in the 1967 World Series Sunday, but the National League champions weren't making any predictions that they would wrap it up in St. Louis Monday. "We don't know whether we'll go back to Boston or not," Manager Red Schoendienst said after the 6-0 victory over the American League champion Boston Red Sox.

"That Steve Carlton who will pitch Monday for the Cardinals is capable of pitching a shutout just like Bob Gibson did today," the St. Louis skipper said. Gibson, a hard-throwing Cardinal right-hander, was the only Redbird talking about a quick finish of the 1967 Series. "I'd like to end it Monday and go home," he said.

Lou Brock said he didn't care whether the Series ended just as long as the Cardinals win it.

The speedy St. Louis leftfielder, who had a single and double in four trips Sunday, said that in the first inning he faked a steal of second and it pulled Boston's shortstop, Rico Petrocelli, out of position. Curt Flood then smashed a single to left through the hole, Flood going to third.

After that, Roger Maris hit a fast ball for a two-run double in the left field corner. Maris has five runs batted in for the four games.

Asked if Brock's base stealing threat can upset the defense, Schoendienst said, "Any time you get a runner on first like Brock, it's going to make the pitcher and catcher think a little. He's liable to steal any time."

Schoendienst said if Carlton fails to end the best-of-seven series Monday, he'll have Dick Hughes ready for the first game in Boston Wednesday, and, if necessary, Gibson would be ready to come back again in a seventh game.

Sox Face Elimination . . .

at Busch Stadium.

Steve Carlton, the rangy 22-year-old lefty who had a 14-9 record for the Cards in regular season play, will try to snuff out the Red Sox in his Series debut.

If Boston wins Monday, they will take a day off for travel and resume in Boston Wednesday afternoon. The weather forecast for Monday was clear and cool.

Gibson, a 31-year-old former Harlem Globetrotter who suffered a broken leg July 15 and was out of action until Sept. 6, was simply superb. Bearing down when he needed to, the hard-throwing right-hander struck out six and walked only one.

After Yaz opened the ninth with a double and moved to third on George Scott's outfield fly, Gibson struck out Reggie Smith and made Jerry Adair ground out. Yaz also singled in the first, Scott in the fourth and Jose Tartabull in the sixth and eighth.

Brock opened the big first with a single on a close play at first, beating Jones' throw to the bag. Curt Flood lined a single to left and Roger Maris, the ex-Yankee, came through with a two-run double to the left field corner. Maris scooted to third on Orlando Cepeda's outfield fly and scored when Tim McCarver ripped a single to right.

Santiago got Shannon on a foul pop to Rico Petrocelli but Julian Javier beat out a single off Petrocelli's glove. Dal Maxvill's single to left scored McCarver from second, beating Yastrzemski's throw to the plate.

By this time Manager Dick Williams had seen enough of Santiago, the 27-year-old Puerto Rican who had been moved out of the bullpen to a starting role in late season. Gary Bell, routed Saturday, came on to put out the blaze.

The Cards tore into Jerry Stephenson, third Boston pitcher for two more runs in the third. Cepeda's second hit of the Series was a double down the left field line. He took third on a wild pitch and scored on McCarver's sacrifice fly to Smith in center.

A walk to Shannon and a double by Javier to the left field corner drove in Shannon with the sixth run. That was all and more than enough.

When newsmen asked Manager Red Schoendienst if he thought Willams went too long with Santiago, he replied, "I've got enough trouble running my own club without bothering with them."

Gibson said he thought he was better in Boston because he had more rest. This time he had three days off and presumably would be ready to work the seventh game, if it goes that far with three more days rest.

Schoendienst said Dick Hughes, loser in the second game, would oppose Gary Waslewski in Boston if the Series returns to Boston for a sixth game.

"I'd like to have it end tomorrow," said Red. "But if it goes back to Boston, we'll be there."

Asked to compare the 1967 Cardinals with the old Yankee teams, Maris said, "We used to have a little more power and go for the big innings. This team gets 'em where they can."

One more win and the Cardinals will be able to pocket about $8,900 as the winning share of the player pool. The losing shares will be worth about $5,606, according to an unofficial reckoning. The official shares will be announced after the Series by Commissioner William Eckert.

Williams Won't Quit 'We're Not Giving Up'

ST. LOUIS (AP)—"We have our backs to the wall."

That was the opening statement of Manager Dick Williams Sunday after his Boston Red Sox dropped a 6-0 decision to the St. Louis Cardinals and fell behind 3-1 in the World Series.

"We're not giving up, though," Williams added quickly. "We've come back all season long, so let's see what happens.

"I know we've looked bad the past couple of days, but we looked bad at times during the season. Nobody quit then and nobody will now. We've rebounded all along the way.

"Now it's do or die. We'll go with pitcher Jim Lonborg tomorrow to keep us in there."

Williams laughed when asked if he thought the Red Sox could duplicate the feat of the 1903 club, which came back after trailing 3-1 in games to beat Pittsburgh 5-3 in a best-of-nine World Series, the first official fall classic.

"That's something I didn't know—I wasn't around in 1903," Williams said. "But I'll tell you one thing. We'll give it everything we've got."

Lonborg, a 22-game winner during the regular season and a one-hit victor over the Cardinals in the second game of the series, said he is looking forward to his big assignment Monday.

"I'm ready and will give it everything," the big right-hander said. "I just have to come through. Otherwise, there'll be no tomorrow for us."

Lonborg kept a paper horseshoe, given him by teammate Darrell Brandon, in his hip pocket during his sparkling victory over the Cardinals last Thursday. However, he's going to depend on his sturdy arm to carry him through.

"I threw the horseshoe away in Boston," he said. "We're past the dreaming stage now."

Williams, Carl Yastrzemski and other members of the club praised St. Louis right-hander Bob Gibson who has allowed only one run and 11 hits in two victories over the Red Sox.

Busy Week For Redmen Foes

While UMass took the weekend off, its opponents, with the exception of Boston College, were busy on the gridiron Saturday.

In Yankee Conference contests, Rhode Island remained undefeated by topping the upstart New Hampshire Wildcats 13-6 and Vermont stopped Maine 18-7.

Rhody pushed across two first half touchdowns, then held on as the Wildcats threatened several times in the last period, but could only muster two field goals.

Vermont's Little - American halfback Bob Mitchell gained 125 yards and scored all 18 of the Catamounts points in their victory over winless Maine.

Dartmouth remained at the top of the New England team ratings by rolling over Holy Cross 24-8 at Hanover. Quarterback Gene Ryzewicz was again the star as he hit on 11 of 17 passes for 156 yards and ran for two touchdowns.

Connecticut gave Yale quite a scare before falling 14-6. The Huskies led 6-0 going into the fourth quarter, but the Eli's offense finally broke through for two scores.

Three interceptions by Tom Wynne sparked Harvard as they handed the highly-touted Boston University Terriers their second consecutive loss. End Carter Lord also had a big day in the Crimson's 29-14 win, grabbing eight passes for 128 yards.

Redmen-Harriers Bow to Huskies

Northeastern, behind superior depth, defeated UMass and the University of Maine at Boston on Saturday. The Huskies scored 28 points, UMass 40 and Maine was last with 62.

Redman Charles Lang won the race with a time of 23:28 over the cold and damp Franklin Park Course. Paul Hoss finished fourth with a time of 23:49.

Despite these fine performances, Northeastern's superior depth in winning the second, third, sixth, seventh, and tenth positions was enough to overhaul Coach Ken O'Brien forces. Other UMass runners who placed were Senior Co-Captain Bowman, ninth, Genlinian, eleventh, and Berry, fifteenth.

In the Freshman meet UMass was edged out 28-29 again by Northeastern. Leo Duart of UMass won the meet with the times 16:08, only 38 seconds off the course record. Ron Wayne also of UMass finished second. Guy Derderian finished. Again it was a question of the Huskies' superior depth taking its toll. Northeastern won third fourth, sixth, seventh, eighth, and ninth positions.

Booters Win 3-1 at Orono

The Redman Soccer team got off to a fine start Saturday by defeating the University of Maine 3-1 at Orono. Goals were scored by Gary Gibson, David Jekanoski and Rick Rosoff. The UMass defense was instrumental in defeating the Black Bears as several scoring chances were repeatedly thwarted by the Redmen.

Off this fine performance, Coach Brigg's forces are given a fine chance to win the Yankee Conference Crown.

Downed 22-21 in Debut

Frosh Lose Heartbreaker To Plebes

By MIKE CURRAN
Staff Reporter

A 60-yard pass play from quarterback Bob Mohn to halfback Bill Hunter with two minutes left in the game gave the undefeated Army Plebes a 22-21 win over the UMass freshmen at Alumni Stadium Saturday.

The triumph gave the West Pointers a 3-0 chart for the season and spoiled Redmen Coach Dave Kelly's coaching debut.

UMass dominated the first half action. After Army received the opening kickoff, they were quickly held in check and forced to punt. The Redmen took possession of the ball near midfield and proceeded to march down the field under the direction of quarterback Rick Dyer. Highlight of the drive was a 20-yard run by halfback Pat Scavone which was just a promise of things to come. Scavone's jaunt from eight yards out and Ed Sapieza's conversion put UMass in front 7-0.

Army, after missing a field goal in the first quarter, came back to knock the score 7-7 in the second period behind the passing of Rich Lewis. On the ensuing kickoff Scavone caught the ball at the Redmen 15 yd. line, started up the middle moved to the left side, and scampered 85 yards for a touchdown, breaking several tackles in the process.

REACH FOR THE SKY — Frosh Defensive back Brian Cleary (24) breaks up a Plebe pass in action on Saturday. Army won the game 22 - 21 at the Alumni Field.

Sapienza's boot made the score 14-7 which it remained through out the rest of the second period despite two more field goal attempts by Army.

UMass increased their lead after halftime, Neil Herring ran an Army punt back from the Redmen 45 to the Army 34 to set up the score. From there, UMass' two fine fullback prospects, Bob Toole, and Pierre Marchando alternated at powering through the Plebe's line with Marchando going the final six yards.

Army's offense began to show signs of life in the third quarter, but fumble recoveries by Tom Callahan and Ed Flaim held them back.

The Redmen began the fourth period with a 21-7 lead and a first and ten on the Army 35. The West Pointers threw up the solid defensive wall they are noted for, however, and it was the first down of the game for UMass.

Army employed a devestating combination of aerial and ground warfare for their second score. Hunter blasted over from the two-yard to cap the 79-yard drive. A two-point conversion pass from Lewis to Hunter set up the winning margin making the score at that time 21-15.

The Plebes tried to pull off an onside kick, but only succeded in giving UMass good field position. The Redmen were forced to punt, got the ball back on Brian Cleary's interception, but couldn't move it again. Hering's booming punt put Army 80 yards away from a score, but a 20 yard pass from Mohn to end Mike Emery, and then the 60 yard crusher quickly evaporated that distance. Arden Jensen's extra point gave the Plebes their winning margin.

The steady work of linebacker Bill Byron, who was hurt twice in the first half, and the punting of Hering were two of the defence highlights for UMass.

Metawampe In Stirring Rally 38-10

Patriots Tied on Coast

SAN DIEGO, Calif. (AP)—Quarterback John Hall's two fourth-quarter touchdown passes earned the San Diego Chargers a come-from-behind 31-31 tie against the Boston Patriots in an American Football League game Sunday.

Hadl hit Willie Frazier on a four-yard touchdown pass and Lance Alworth on a 24-yard strike to help the Charges remain the only unbeaten team in the AFL.

Hadl's performance offset Boston quarterback Babe Parilli's passing for two touchdowns, and the running of Jim Nance, who scored two TDs.

The Chargers struck first in the first quarter when Hadl hit fullback Brad Hubbert on a 20-yard touchdown pass set up by Charger Joe Beauchamp's interception.

On the next series, Parilli found halfback Larry Garron alone on the sideline for a 64-yard scoring strike.

San Diego again took the lead early in the second period on Hadl's one-yard TD run but the Patriots quickly tied it on Nance's one-yard plunge, capping a 61-yard drive.

Nance gave the Patriots a 21-17 halftime advantage when he scored on an 18-yard run following Charger Dick Van Raaphorst's 32-yard field goal.

The Patriots extended their lead to 31-17 in the third period on Parilli's eight-yard touchdown pass to end Art Graham and a 41-yard field goal by Gino Cappelletti.

'Gentleman Jim' Brings It All On Home To Hub

ST. LOUIS (AP)—Gentleman Jim Lonborg rescued the staggering Boston Red Sox with his second straight victory over the St. Louis Cardinals Monday, 3-1, and sent the World Series back to Boston for at least a sixth game Wednesday.

Lonborg shut out the Cards until Roger Maris homered with two out in the ninth.

The handsome 24-year-old right-hander, who blanked the National League champions with one hit Thursday, cut the Cards' edge in games to 3-2 with a three-hitter in the fifth game before a dazed crowd of 54,575 fans at Busch Stadium.

In 18 innings, the Cardinals have managed only four hits off the 22-game winner, who also clinched the pennant for the Red Sox on the final day of the regular season.

It was the lowest hit total ever by a pitcher in two consecutive was fired by Kansas City's Series games.

Ken Harrelson, the fellow who Charley Finley only to sign with Boston for $75,000, drove in the first run of the game with a single in the third inning. It was an unearned run off 22-year-old Steve Carlton, the Cards' lefty starter, as Harrelson's hit followed a single by Joe Foy and an error by Mike Shannon on Mike Andrews' sacrifice bunt.

A Red Sox two-run rally in the ninth seemed to be only frosting on Lonborg's cake at the time but it meant the ball game after Maris hit his sixth Series Homer in the last of the ninth.

Ron Willis, the third Card pitcher, loaded the bases in the ninth with a walk to George Scott, a double by Reggie Smith and an intentional pass to Rico Petrocelli.

After Willis threw one ball to Elston Howard, Jack Lamabe came on to face the veteran catcher. Howard singled to right, scoring Scott, and Smith also came home when Maris' throw to the plate was high. Both runs were charged to Willis.

The Cards were lucky to get out of the inning on a double play involving a complicated run-down play at the plate.

AP Opinion...

AMHERST, Mass. (AP) — "When you went to a fraternity party at the University of Massachusetts last year they offered you a drink," recalled a student. "This year they offer you pot."

A former student who is still in Amherst and said he is a "pusher" supplying marijuana said no one has proven "that it is as anywhere near harmful as liquor or cigarettes."

The Associated Press questioned students at the University of Massachusetts and three western Massachusetts colleges —Smith, Mount Holyoke and Amherst — on the use of Marijuana at their schools.

Estimates by the students of the number of smokers and the frequency of its use varied widely. Some said that there was little of it around but one or two students at UMass said they believed that a third of the students have tried it.

However, a spokesman for U-Mass questioned the accuracy of the students' accounts. He said some students residing in off-campus housing were taken into custody on marijuana charges but never in fraterniay houses. "The last place you'd find marijuana is in a fraternity house," the college spokesman said.

"Nobody associated with a fraternity has ever been picked up here on a marijuana charge. There is nobody more conservative than a fraternity kid." He added that he thought reports of marijuana at fraternity parties were "misleading".

William F. Field, dean of students at the University of Massachusetts, said about 10 per cent of the university's 15,000 students have used the drug. "This estimate includes those who have tried it once and don't smoke it regularly," he said.

Field added, however: "Our concern now is that the use of drugs is going to increase because more and more entering students will have had some experience in high school with drugs and drug users."

Students at the women colleges of Smith and Mount Holyoke said marijuana smoking is fairly common but "very discreet."

"They don't usually smoke it on campus," said a Mount Holyoke student. "They go into the woods or wait for the weekend at one boys' school."

Mount Holyoke Dean Ruth Warfe said, "I don't think many have been involved and I don't know of any specific instances. We have tracked down rumors but they've all amounted to nothing."

A student at the men's college, Amherst, said, "I'm sure half the campus has tried it at one time or another. But no where near the number smoke it regularly or would even think about smoking it regularly."

A co-ed at the University of Massachusetts said: "I definitely know at least for students who are selling it."

UMass Dean of Students William F. Field today denied statements reported in an Associated Press story about drug usage in the four-college area.

Dean Field said that quotations attributed to him in the story were pulled out of context. He feels that the entire article does not reflect a true image of any marijuana usage at the University.

Field estimates that the number of students who regularly use any sort of illegal drugs is as low as 1% of the 15,000 students on campus.

"There are a lot fewer cases than the number talked about," Field said. He estimates that the tried the drug once but do not smoke it regularly, according to the Dean.

Field said that the Associated Press story ignored many of the statements he made and mis-represented others.

He stressed that the University encourages students with any drug problems to consult with the mental health services at the Infirmary. "This does not open the door for discipline action for any student who seeks medical attention," he said.

The dean also said that he "could not believe" the statements made about the use of marijuana in the fraternities and thought that it was completely number of people on campus who have had any contact with marijuana does not exceed 10%. This would include students who have inaccurate.

Frank Guidara, president of the Inter-Fraternity Council, said that the whole idea of anyone using pot in a fraternity was "incredible".

Guidara said that the word pot is never heard in his house. He said that marijuana "is a complete unknown" as far as the fraternities are concerned.

William Swartzbaugh, Dean of Students at Amherst College, said that the figure given for the number of Amherst students who have had experience with marijuana is "inaccurate". The AP story quotes an Amherst student as saying that half of the campus has tried it.

Swartzbaugh said that researchers have found that students are prone to give very high estimates when asked a question about usage on a campus.

Professor Gibson Stresses Tensionless Classes

By JOHN C. HEALY

"I want my students to fight me back," said Professor Walker Gibson, the new director of freshman English.

"Most students," he told the Daily Collegian, "believe the University to be a 'fountain of knowledge' from which they are to drink. I want Freshman English to be a water fight."

The need for meaningful dialogue in the classroom is the foundation of Professor Gibson's phiosophy. He believes the teaching process should be as Socratic as possible in order to stimulate immediate feedback. "I expect," he said, "to learn as much from my students as they learn from me.

"Too many students, however, come to college reluctant to participate in class discussion. After years of chastisement by vindictive teachers, many freshmen have been discouraged. I enjoy working with young people," he said, "and respect their ideas. I hope to encourage them to express their views."

Teaching at UMass is something of a homecoming for Professor Gibson. With degrees from Yale and the University of Iowa, Professor Gibson taught at Amherst for 11 years, and more recently he left Washington Square College of New York University, where he was also director of freshman English.

Besides having articles published in such magazines as Harpers', The New Yorker and the Saturday Review, he has written books which include The Reckless Spenders and Come as You Like (verse) and was co-author of the Macmillan Handbook of English. In the academic years, 1962-63 and 1966-67, Professor Gibson lectured on Sunrise Semester (CBS).

One of his stratagems for easing tension in the classroom is a lessening of the importance of grades. "Grades are a nuisance to the educational process," he said, "and any nuisance we can remove is to the advantage of the student. However I am not against grades; they are necessary. But I think it is a mistake to hound the student and grade him every time he turns around."

The varied backgrounds of the incoming students are another problem with which Professor Gibson must contend. Some students come from weak high schools; others come from good ones and do poorly on entrance examinations. "It is difficult to say where the fault lies," he said. "We don't know if problems stem from the schools, cultural backgrounds or the students themselves."

"As a Land-Grant institution it is our responsibility to help the student with any verbal deficiencies. I don't know where else this can be done except in Freshman English."

For students who come to the University particularly weak in English, yet believed by the Administration to be qualified for college, the English Department for the last 12 years has maintained a remedial program. Participating students attend a third class a week during which selected seniors in the department work with the students on special problems.

"Yet it would be a great disservice to the student," he said, "if we should find ourselves concerned only with making up deficiencies. What we desire is to teach English as a discipline of language and style and to create an awareness in the choices of language that face every mature adult."

To carry out his task, Professor Gibson has a staff of more than 70 instructors, many of whom are graduate assistants. "Unlike most schools," he said. "we do not look upon graduate assistant teaching as cheap labor, but an important part of graduate education."

"Too many of the teaching assistants, however, come to us with less preparation than we would prefer," he said. "Students take sophisticated courses, yet have no training in rhetoric and writing at the graduate level." To remedy this problem, Professor Gibson hopes to formulate a graduate course which will stress the philosophy of teaching. He also hopes to reduce the graduate teaching load. These measures, he believes, will help assistants to become confident and skillful teachers.

Other changes are under study by a curriculum committee which will make a report within a month. Said Mr. Gibson: "There may be an increase in the amount of class time for students who come to us poorly prepared.

"What we want to do is to change the attitude of students toward writing. We hope to make English fun rather than a chore, a stimulating experience for both students and teachers."

Professor Gibson also feels that television has a promising future in education. He said: "Teaching machines can provide a good supplement for mechanical problems such as grammar and punctuation, but I don't believe they can effectively replace classroom instruction. They can't engage in a water fight."

Where Do You Stand Draft-wise?

Like the famous insurance company, The Valley Peace Center is an umbrella organization.

Draft counseling is one of the main purposes of The Peace Center. Any person who wants to know exactly where he stands, or sits, draft-wise, can go to the center and be in, and listen, and ask, and know. Crack counselors, who know all the facts about the draft, and most about the war, are ready to give their information to anyone who will ask and listen.

The counselors are there to inform what the law is and to suggest alternatives. They don't tell you to file for CO status. They don't tell you to bolt the country. They do tell you roads that can be taken concerning the draft and the war, from Enlistment Expressway to Desolation Row. The choice belongs to you.

Not limited to draft counseling, The Valley Peace Center is the intelligence core for all area groups. Their library includes books, pamphlets, films, and phonograph records, on issues of war and peace, the draft, and related domestic problems. The library does not exclude "any political or ideological viewpoint." An up-to-date mailing list of people who have shown interest in the organization will be made available to any group oriented to peace.

We spoke with Mr. John C. Weston, a member of the Executive Committee, who said that the Center's overall concern is with "the growing power of the military industrial complex as detrimental to internal policy, and with general problems of peace and happiness in the world and in this country."

Mr. Weston said that the center is now training more draft counselors and organizing workshops about the draft and draft resistance. The center is also securing buses for area groups for the upcoming March on Washington.

The coordinator for The Valley Peace is Michael Idoine. Joyce Shortt is the executive secrtary. The Executive Committee, a seven-man overseeing group, consists of Dean Allen, Rita Kropf, Michael Rice, Ronald Rubel, Mike Schaeffer, John C. Weston, and Jean Williams. The four colleges are represented, and any of the above people may be contacted for more detailed information.

The Peace Center will officially open on Sunday, October 15th, from 1-3 P.M., with an open house in the Old Rectory of the Grace Episcopal Church on the Common in Amherst.

Leaders of area peace groups will announce their plans for the future. Refreshments will be served. Since the open house will be held immediately after the weekly vigil, also on the Common, it will be easy for most people to attend. The Center is looking for a centrally located place for operations.

We urge support of The Valley Peace Center. As an umbrella organization in these times, it is not radical, but incorporates the spectrum of ideologies and practical knowledge and planning needed when a country is in a state of war.

It can be a strong umbrella, protecting the people in this section of the country from the monsoons of war for now, and leading to a larger goal, unity against war, which can stop war. Its premiums are low, toward the insurance of peace, which has asked the price of war, but which should be free.

Dr. Drum A-Go-Go

With the frequency and intensity of our local exposure to the man now beginning to rival that accorded only the Beatles not so very long ago, it seems time for even those of us in the rear of the second balcony to sit up and take notice.

The Collegian has devoted quite some space to the course and methods of Dr. Ryan Drum and now Record Week has drowned its front page with his picture and words.

Despite this, I cannot but find myself still asking what, if anything, is really going on in Mahar Auditorium? I have been, seen the colored lights, heard the music, and heard the (at best) rather thin lecture covering this, that, and several other things that didn't belong there either.

I was not on hand to see the rat lose its head; although I gather I didn't miss much, so thorough has been the fill-in that I and a great many other people on campus can scarcely escape receiving after so many of his sessions.

But there are other rather more basic questions which I wish to raise.

To judge from the statements of his which appear in the current Record Week, (from which all of the following quotes are taken), Dr. Drum's aim, in organizing and conducting his course as he does, is to facilitate the educational process—to enable students ". . . to learn and enjoy without fear of punishment for not learning and enjoying."

Does learning necessarily entail enjoyment, I ask? Can learning take place only in situations of enjoyments? Enjoyment is not necessarily a universal concomitant of thorough learning.

There seems to be one factor missing from Dr. Drum's appraisal of educational practice, a factor which I have yet to hear him mention—that is motivation.

I would be quite willing to wager that a large percentage of the enrollment in Botany 101 is there to satisfy an Arts and Sciences requirement—the serious botanists are in another introductory course.

Recognizing, perhaps, that he is confronting a less-than-wholly-enthusiastic audience, Dr. Drum may have been moved to include this additional factor of entertainment in his presentation.

Enjoyment may very possibly enhance learning; but I wonder whether this kick with enjoyment hasn't been carried to the point of distraction.

"It almost doesn't matter what's being taught, so long as something is being learned," he suggests. To a very definite extent, it most certainly does matter what's being taught—the University is going to award 3 graduation credits for this lark.

A prominent educator has said that he considers all students as intelligent as he—it's just that they know less about his subject than he; and he is there to show them what it is about—to assist them in learning it themselves.

Can we honestly say this of Dr. Drum's attitude towards students? I would suggest not.

"The whole point of learning is to be able to do something with it." This too is fine—the only question here is what is being learned in this course that can be used?

I suggest one thing: namely, that some serious and searching evaluation be done by the many students currently in Botany 101—is what is currently being passed off to them as a university-level course all that its mystique alleges?

The amount of serious research that has gone on in the area of educational psychology and learning is a factor to be reckoned with. I would really like to know just how much of music and lights it includes.

"You remember the things you enjoy the most," so he tries to make his classes as enjoyable as possible.

Is what students are going to remember the course itself, or will they remember whatever botany might be included among the threads of irrelevancies?

As a student working at my own college education, and having been at it for what is now my seventh year, I have grave doubts about Dr. Drum's content and methodology. I would suggest that this course is a matter that needs investigation by students, faculty, and the administration.

A True Fan

To the editor:

It must have been enjoyable watching youngsters Dave Morehead and Ken Brett pitch so well in their first World Series game. It was not very thrilling hearing their performances on the radio.

Those loyal Red Sox fans, the enthusiasts who set off the bonfires and ecstatically screamed "We're number one!" seemingly were more interested in viewing the Giants-Saints football game than the fourth game of the World Series.

"It's 6-0, hang it up," cried one ardent Boston supporter. "Wait a few minutes, It'll be 10-0," voiced another. The majority barked, "Put on the Giants," and a brave soul in the front row fearlessly turned the channel as the very folks who made the trip to a SW John so traumatic last week made merry of the sad Red Sox plight.

And who could really blame them? After all, a 6-0 lead is indeed insurmountable, especially against the likes of Bob Gibson. 6-0 insurmountable? 7-0? 8-0? Wait, this latter score rings a bell. Was there not a game this year in which the Boston team trailed by such an insurmountable 8-0 score against the Angels?

Unless I'm dreaming, I believe the Boston team redefined the word "insurmountable" one August evening. Jerry Adair, you remember how much you loved him, hit a homer that day to win 9-8 for the Sox.

No, it sure wasn't Mr. Gibson who pitched for California, but who would have thought that Jim McGlothlin, one of the hottest hurlers in the AL at the time, could conceivably be victimized by a nine run Boston rally?

And do you remember Yaz's 3-run double off Minnie Rojas which brought us victory after the Sox trailed by 3 in the seventh? You blew your horn with gusto when "your boys" came from behind twice in the 9th inning at Detroit, but did you switch to American Bandstand that memorable afternoon when Rich Reese saved the Twins by catching Yaz's deflected pop after the Sox had struck for 4 runs with two outs in the ninth?

Did you really want to watch your beloved Giants in their crucial encounter with the Saints, or were you afraid to associate yourself with an apparent losing effort by the Red Sox? It's tough to watch your team lose a big game. Much less damaging to the ego is a turn of the channel and the pretention that Homer Jones is more important to you than Dalton.

It's really a shame that you missed that 9-run surge against the Angels which gave the Sox pennant drive such a big lift. It was an unforgetable experience, if you had the guts to keep your radio on.

Supreme Court Examines Controversial Cases

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court stepped squarely Monday into one aspect of the national debate over Vietnam by agreeing to decide whether jailing draft-card burners violates their constitutional freedom.

Also amid a stack of orders was one opening the way for the prompt jailing of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. under a contempt-of-court sentence.

The justices agreed at their first business session since June to decide whether:

- Chronic alcoholics should be punished for public drunkenness.
- The federal right to a jury trial in criminal cases should be made binding on the states.
- Federal courts have the power to bar Southern states from prosecuting civil rights demonstrators under state anti-picketing laws.

These and other controversial cases were among hundreds of appeals submitted while the court was in summer recess.

Most appeals were rejected, including that of Dr. King who was seeking to avoid serving a five-day jail sentence for demonstrating in Birmingham in 1963 in violation of an Alabama court order.

Rejected also—"For want of a substantial federal question" — was a challenge to a Pennsylvania law that requires transportation in public school busses of pupils attending non-profit parochial and private schools.

The Court's action, a bitter pill for those who believe in an impenetrable wall between church and state, is certain to give support to similar busing programs in other states.

Only Justice William O. Douglas would have had the court listen to the appeal by a group of Pennsylvania taxpayers. His colleagues saw no serious constitutional problem raised by the Pennsylvania law.

And James R. Hoffa, imprisoned Teamsters Union president, lost a bid for a new trial for the jury tampering conviction under which he is now serving.

The draft-card-burning case was pressed on the court by both the Justice Department and the American Civil Liberties Union.

In a 1965 amendment to the Selective Service Law, Congress gave the government authority to jail persons destroying their draft cards.

It had withstood challenges in the court until the U.S. Circuit Court in Boston ruled unanimously last April that it unconstitutionally abridges free speech.

However, that same court said draft-card burners could be sent to jail legally for not having their cards in their possession. Hence the double-headed appeal by Justice and the ACLU.

The Court's agreement to look into chronic alcoholism came as a bit of a surprise.

Behind the case is the feeling, accepted in the U.S. Appeals Court here and in Richmond, Va., that chronic alcoholism is a disease and that public drunkenness, therefore, should not be punished as a criminal act.

Five years ago the Court took this approach in narcotics addiction, declaring punishment of addicts was barred by the constitutional prohibition against cruel and unusual punishment.

The SHAKE-A PUDD'N Revolution:

WHAT IS ITS SIGNIFICANCE?

Beverly Basick, Dept. of Anthropology

Archetypical.

The ritual of the Midnight Pudding Snack is well established in primitive societies. Since Shake-A Pudd'n does not require refrigeration, it lends itself to use in dormitories (surely one of the most primitive societies), thereby fulfilling this basic, instinctual human drive at the precise moment it arises.

Harry Holesome, Dept. of Health Education

The American Dream come true.

Shake-A Pudd'n combines healthful nutrition, bracing exercise and, above all, Good Clean Fun. An essential part of the Physical Fitness Program.

Sylvia Cimbill, Dept. of Psychology

Truly Freudian.

Powder and water are mixed in a cup, an obviously mammalian formation, seen on a deeper level as Mother. One shakes the cup, in a desperate but futile attempt to shake off the inhibiting Superego and free the primitive Id.

Michael Media, Dept. of Sociology

A true product of the Electric Age.

Shake-A Pudd'n has transformed a fragmented, time-consuming, mechanical task into an almost instantaneous, totally involving experience. Definitely "cool." Although equally good at room temperature.

Francine Factor, Dept. of History

Of tremendous historical significance.

Had Shake-A Pudd'n been discovered in the 18th Century, the French Revolution would probably never have taken place when it did. Marie Antoinette's famous remark, "Let 'em eat cake," would no doubt have been transformed to "Let 'em eat pudd'n," thereby appeasing the masses for at least another century.

Shake-A Pudd'n™, the new instant dessert mix from Royal.

Just put water and powder in the cup, snap the lid, shake for 30 seconds and let it set. In Chocolate, Vanilla, Butterscotch or Banana. Each package complete with four puddings, spoons, lids, and throwaway shakers.

Class of '69 Stages A New York Happening

Five busses, carrying a total of 210 members of the Class of 1p69, left UMass Friday afternoon for New York City. At New York, the '69ers staged a Happening . . . with parties, shopping, nightclubbing, and having a good time.

The weekend began Friday night, when the Class Officers hosted a party at the Hotel New Yorker, where UMass spread over two floors.

Shopping and sightseeing were the primary items on Saturday's agenda. In the evening, 35 members of the group went to the Latin Quarter, where Sid Caesar is currently starring.

Sunday morning, everyone attended a brunch in the New Yorker's Terrace Room before heading for home.

Thomas revealed that he had received a telephone call from the hotel management Saturday morning, commending the group . . . and that he had received no notification of any trouble.

To add to the fun, NBC interviewed several girls in a hotel lobby, in connection with a report it is doing about young people's attitudes toward New York City.

Linda Stefano who was interviewed said that they were just standing in the lobby, when an NBC representative approached them, and explained this purpose. They filled out questionnaires and had their pictures taken.

The girls will be notified if their responses will be used for the show, which is expected to be aired around Thanksgiving.

The group was accompanied by several invited guests, including Ernest Beals, class advisor; Gerald Scanlon, asst. co-ordinator of student activities; Jim West of the campus vending service; Mrs. Carol Robinson, former Executive council member; and Mr. and Mrs. Robert Frey. Mrs. Frey is the University program director.

Thomas asserted that they accomplished their mission-first to have a good time, and second, to get '69ers to know each other. The group was not dominated by any particular faction; it ran from hippies to Greeks, with a lot of those in-between.

Kathy Kane Representing United Airlines on Campus

"A girl ought to do something different before settling down. Besides, it's not confining like an ordinary nine to five job," answered Kathy Kane when asked why she had wanted to be the campus stewardess representative for United Airlines.

Kathy, a senior home economics education major at UMass, will spend her last undergraduate year as a student stewardess traveling throughout New England soliciting stewardess applicants for United.

"This student stewardess program is very beneficial for United. There are twenty-five campus representatives. Besides giving coffee hours on our own campuses for those who want to find out about the challenges and opportunities for an airline stewardess, we will be on various campuses this year attempting to recruit new girls."

Kathy herself applied for the student airline hostess career in her sophomore year after reading flyers advertising this opportunity.

"After two interviews from which I was chosen as one of five finalists, I was sent for a third interview to New York. This last interview, after passing a physical examination, resulted in my receiving the job from United. So, that summer I spent in Chicago in a five and one-half week stewardess training program. Besides familiarizing myself with the interiors of United's airplanes, I also took courses in emergency preparations, first aid, and speech."

After this training period, Kathy was then allowed to bid for her domicile (home base) of which there are ten in the United States. She obtained her first choice—Kennedy Airforce Base in New York.

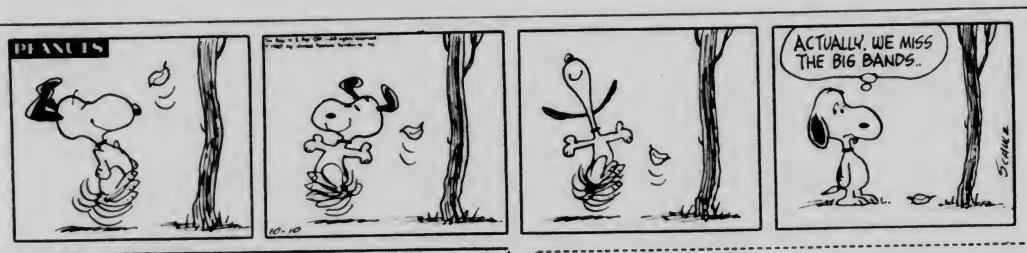
Upon graduation, Kathy plans a full time flying career as a United Stewardess. She anxiously awaits her future travel experiences not only in the United States but also abroad.

Northampton Volunteers Offer A Learning Experience

The Northampton Volunteers will commence their weekly trips to the Northampton State Mental Hospital on Wednesday evening. The purpose of THE GROUP IS TO PROVIDE an opportunity for the patients at the hospital to interact with persons from outside the hospital confines. There is no special skill which a volunteer must possess. All that is needed is a cheery smile and the desire to help someone.

The amount of time spent at the hospital is optional. It may vary from weekly two hour visits, which is what most volunteers engage in, to more involved case aid work, in which the volunteer is given some case history and allowed to follow a more involved program of consultation.

The main point is involvement. College students with freshness and enthusiasm can have a striking effect on the conditions of a mental hospital. They definately aid in creating a therapeutic community in the hospital. Volunteer service also has a learning experience for the students which includes personal growth and useful knoweldge.



ALL STUDENTS INTERESTED ARE URGED TO ATTEND THE ORIENTATION MEETING. A BUS WILL LEAVE FROM THE STUDENT UNION AT 6:30 P.M., WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 11, TO TAKE YOU TO THE HOSPITAL. IF THERE ARE ANY QUESTIONS PLEASE CONTACT MALCOLM O'SULLIVAN, 6-7028 or ELLEN LEVY, 6-8258.

Maris Ruins Shutout Bid With Home Run in 9th

Lonborg, who admitted he had the sniffles, was superb all through the cool sunny afternoon. He said he felt he was home free after the Red Sox got the two runs in the top of the ninth.

The Boston ace, who retired the first 19 men he faced in beating Dick Hughes in the second game at Boston, blew down 12 in a row from the fourth until the eighth until Julian Javier reached first on Rico Petrocelli's error.

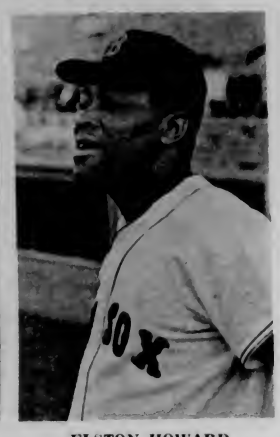
Lonborg said he didn't feel any pressure in this game. "As soon as I walk over that white line," he said, "I forget everything but the game."

After Tuesday's off day for travel, the Red Sox will send Gary Waslewski, 2-2, against Hughes, loser of the second game. Lonborg will try for the triple Thursday with only two days' rest if the Red Sox can take the Series to a seventh game.

"I thought I had good stuff today," said Lonborg in one of the understatements of the season.

Lonborg said he had worked with only two days rest twice during the regular season, winning one and losing another.



The Cards never really applied strong pressure to Lonborg. Manager Dick Williams, who said before the game, "they still have to drive 27 nails," went out to talk to his pitcher in the eighth when Cards Manager Red Schoendienst sent up Phil Gagliano as a pinch hitter with Javier on second base and two out.

Williams confirmed in the clubhouse that he had talked to his team before the game. He said he told them they should be proud of going this far if they lost.

"However, we have our best guy going if we win this," he said. "I just reminded them we would be in the same situation if we won this, as we were late in the season when we had to win the last two. I think we'll have the same meeting Wednesday. We've taped it."

PMD, LCA Still Tied

Leaders in the frat, dorm and independent leagues remained undefeated after last night's intramural action.

In the Spartan division of the frat league, PMD and LCA remained tied for the lead. Lead by Rigney's four touchdown passes, PMD swept by AEP, 34-6. LCA also stayed undefeated beating TKE, 34-0, as Woodcock threw three TD passes.

ASP rode six touchdowns by Canata to beat DC, 41-0, and strengthen its second place standing.

Sanborn passed five touchdown passes, four of them caught by Abberuzze, as QTV clung to the lead in the Trojan division with a 3-0 record, defeating PSK, 31-6.

In the South Dorm division, the Terrors scored in the second half to beat the Bulldozers, 7-0. The undefeated Terrors are all alone in first place, while second place is occupied by both the Huskies and the Crushers. Both teams posted wins, the Huskies winning by forfeit and the Crushers defeated the Monuments, 14-0.

The Flaming A's held first place in the National Division of the Independent League, by blanking the Toads, 30-0, on Brown's four touchdown passes. In the same league, the Accounting Association defeated the Rotten Roster, 8-0 and the Knights squeeked by the Dell Vikings, 13-7.

In the dorm tug-o-wars, the Spartans, Maroons and Trojans all won by forfeit to advance closer to the championship heats.

Jim Fulfills 'Mission Impossible,' Hopes To Have Chance For Rerun

ST. LOUIS (AP)—Jim Lonborg watched Mission Impossible on television and then went out and performed a mission that many thought was impossible—he kept the Boston Red Sox in the World Series.

He did it by pitching a three-hitter and leading Boston to a 3-1 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals.

The victory shaved the Cardinals' lead to three games to two and sent the Series back to Boston for a sixth and maybe a seventh game.

Telling how he spent the night before the crucial game—the 24-year-old right-hander said:

"I had dinner with friends, visited my family at the hotel, then watched Mission Impossible and went to bed. I'd had a cold ever since we got in here from Boston, and Buddy LeRoux, our trainer, gave me some pills.

"I took one of them last night, and it made me woozy so I went right to sleep. I slept for about 10 hours. When I got up, I felt great, and I thought it was an excellent day to pitch."

There was no doubt that Lonborg, 22-9 during the season, was excellent for the third time in nine days—he pitched the pennant-clinching game against Minnesota Oct. 1 and threw a one-hitter for Boston's only previous victory in the Series last Thursday.

In this fifth game, Lonborg gave up an infield single to Dal Maxvill in the third inning, a single to Roger Maris in the fourth and a home run to Maris with two out in the ninth.

"I never think winning is impossible," Lonborg said, his right arm in a pan of ice water and an ice bag resting on his shoulder. "I thought when I came into the game, I was psychologically ready, and I thought I could beat them.

"I didn't feel any pressure. As soon as I walk across the white line, it's just another game. Then once the game started I had a lot of confidence that I could get them out because my pitches were working.

"I went more to the fast ball today. I was hitting spots, the outside corners. When they started getting a good rip at the pitch away, then I went to the breaking ball."

Mitchell, Yazman, Crisp Cited In Yan-Con Picks

Vermont halfback Bob Mitchell, Rhode Island linebacker Ken Kuzman and Connecticut flanker John Crisp have been chosen as the top offensive, defensive and sophomore players in the Yankee Conference for their performances last Saturday.

Mitchell returned to his Little All American form of last year as he slashed his way to three touchdowns and 174 yards rushing in 45 carries to lead Vermont to its first win, 18-7, over Maine.

Kuzman, who was also selected last week, was a standout as Rhode Island beat New Hampshire, 13-6. In addition to intercepting a crucial pass the Rhody junior helped limit the Wildcats to 96 yards rushing as the Rams won their third straight game and their first Homecoming Game in 12 years.

Crisp, a 6'4 sophomore who didn't play freshmen football, caught six passes for 81 yards as UConn lost a 14-6 battle to Yale. The agile flanker was a big factor in UConn taking a 6-0 lead into the final period.

Other nominations were — offense—halfback George Platter (Maine), halfback Jim DeWitt (Connecticut), halfback Bill Phillips (New Hampshire) and fullback Bill Bjerke (Rhode Island); defense—end Don Loranger (Maine), linebacker Mark Malek (Connecticut), tackle Al Witteman (New Hampshire) and Bill Wolfe (Vermont); sophomores — linebacker Allen Lee (Maine), defensive back Reno Regis (New Hampshire), and end John Wojciechowski (Vermont). Massachusetts did not play last Saturday.

'Better Than In Boston'

Decked Cards Laud Master Dealer

ST. LOUIS (AP) — "Well, it's back to Boston."

That brief comment by pitcher Nelson Briles as he entered the St. Louis dressing room Monday summed up the determined but grim feeling of the National League champions after their 3-1 loss to Boston.

The defeat sent the 1967 World Series back to Boston with St. Louis holding a 3-2 lead in the best-of-7 playoff.

The Cardinals had high praise for Jim Lonborg, the hard-throwing Boston right-hander who won his second game from St. Louis.

"I think he pitched a little better than in Boston," Manager Red Schoendienst said. "But we were still swinging at a lot of bad balls. He's a good pitcher."

Roger Maris, whose ninth inning homer over the right field wall prevented a second Lonborg shutout, said when asked what kind of pitch he hit, "I really don't know. I couldn't really tell."

Schoendienst said he would pitch Dick Hughes, the 29-year-old rookie right-hander, in Wednesday's sixth game in Boston. Hughes lost to Lonborg in the second game at Boston last Thursday.

Mike Shannon, who was charged with an error on a sacrifice in the third inning, said the bunt "just went past my glove." Both Steve Carlton, the starting Redbird pitcher, and Shannon went for the bunt on the third base side of the infield. "I thought it was my ball," Shannon said.

As for Lonborg, Shannon said, "I think I could see the ball today . . . but he still kept us boxed in. I'd much rather hit off him in Busch Stadium than in Boston."

Schoendienst said that he took Carlton out for a pinch hitter in the sixth inning although the young left-hander allowed the Red Sox only three hits and one run. "We had to get some runs," the St. Louis manager explained.

"We won the 1967 pennant on the road," Schoendienst continued, "and I guess we'll have to win the Series on the road too."

Vietnam War Debate Continues on All Sides

David Schoenbrun-DVP

by JOHN WAJNAS

Monday evening the Distinguished Visitors Program of the University of Massachusetts presented the award-winning foreign news analyst and journalist, David Schoenbrun.

With a polished humor and factual historical data, Mr. Schoenbrun brought to light the absurdity of the United States' involvement in Vietnam. His topic was based on twenty-one years of close participation and observation from the summer of 1946 in Paris to 1967 in Hanoi.

He began the story with the fall of Japan in 1945 at which time, Ho Chi Minh decided to strike for independence in Vietnam. He came to power through the acclaimation of the people with a constitution based on the American concept, "We hold these truths to be self evident...". France agreed with her fingers crossed behind her back.

McNamara Defends

by EDWIN B. HAAKINSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sec. of Defense Robert S. McNamara's insistence that bombing or mining Haiphong, main supply port of North Vietnam, will not shorten the war or cut off enemy supplies was underlined in testimony made public Tuesday.

He made it clear he plans to continue restricted bombing of North Vietnam.

McNamara testified Aug. 25 before the Senate preparedness subcommittee and publication of his testimony follows that of several uniformed military chiefs urging the mining or bombing of Haiphong.

The subcommittee earlier made public excerpts of McNamara's testimony playing down the importance of Haiphong, saying supplies could be brought in over the beach if it were knocked out. Both he and Pres. Johnson insist that the differences between the military and civilian chiefs on the question are slight.

In the testimony made public Tuesday, McNamara, in heated exchanges with members of the subcommittee, made a string of denials to senators' questions and suggestions:

— That heavier or earlier bombing attacks on the North would have reduced U.S. casualties in the sporadic but bitter ground war in the South.

— That there has been any change in the basic bombing pattern, even though numerous targets have been authorized for first strikes recently.

— That he is following a "no-win policy" or that U.S. forces might as well "throw up our hands" and get out.

McNamara agreed with Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., that if supplies from Soviet Russia and Communist China could be cut off, North Vietnam would be forced to end the war. But the Pentagon chief said he knows of no way to do

Giap Attacks

by WILLIAM L. RYAN

Pronouncements from North Vietnam and its Viet Cong allies in the South suggest that the Communists, eying developments in the U.S., are in a mood to reject any negotiation to end the Vietnam war except on their own all-or-nothing terms.

The Liberation Front for South Vietnam, political arm of the Viet Cong, has announced it is willing to negotiate, but not with the present Saigon regime and not until "the U.S. imperialists" are defeated. Gen. Vo Nguyen Giap, Hanoi's top military strategist, contends that "the U.S. imperialists have been defeated strategically" after failing in two years to achieve expected results.

These pronouncements are being made against a background of repeated U.S. expressions of readiness to talk, and vague signs that at least some elements of the Communist side were listening.

American analysts are studying a series of four articles by Giap, broadcast by Hanoi, dissecting the U.S. position. Giap tried to promote the idea that Americans were up against a hopeless proposition.

"The U.S. imperialists are confronted with a tragic war situation," Giap write. "On the military front, the U. S. imperialists' strategy has shown that it is ineffective and failing."

Giap contended that the Americans had to scatter strategic forces and thus, in effect, turned larger forces into smaller ones.

"It is an extremely dangerous thing for any aggressive army to have dispersed forces, and to remain on the defensive is even more dangerous," Giap wrote. He said 70% of American troops in Vietnam are needed for defending bases, cities and communications lines. This, he said, deprived Americans of the opportunity for the initiative or for an offensive, and 'compelled them to fight in VALLEGRANDE, Bolivia (AP)— Bolivian army officers displayed a body to newsmen Tuesday and claimed it was fully identified as that of Ernesto Che Guevara, reputed architect of Latin-American revolution.

The officers said Guevara, former top aide of Fidel Castro whose whereabouts have been a mystery since he vanished from Cuba in 1965, was mortally wounded in a clash between guerrillas and army units Sunday and that he confirmed his identity before he died.

"I'm the Che and I've failed," Gen. Alfredo Ovande Candia, commander in chief of the armed forces, quoted the slain guerrilla as saying before he died.

It remained to be seen, however, whether the Bolivian claim that Guevara was among those slain will be accepted elsewhere.

SENATE INQUIRY INTO WINDOW SIGNS AND COMMON LINES

A statement to the University community from the Student Senate Public Relations Committee

This Thursday at 8:00 in Patterson Lounge, the Student Senate will hold an inquiry into the campus problems of signs in dormitory windows and of long waits in dining commons lines. The Forum is open to the University Community and is being held so that concerned students may present their views to the Senate. The Senate will then use the ideas from its constituents to formulate legislation to cope with the two problems.

It must be made clear to all concerned that these are problems that affect the welfare of the entire student population and therefore must be dealt with by all students. It is the responsibility of the Student Senate, in its capacity of representing all students, to seek a solution to these problems that will be in the best interests of the students.

Thus the Senate seeks to gather the views of all concerned. It is the responsibility of the student to demand that its government take such action, and therefore make the Senate aware of individual student ideas. It is for this reason the Senate is holding a public inquiry.

Although the present focus of the lines and signs problems is in the Southwest Area, the Student Senate urges students and other members of the University Community from all regions of the campus to attend the meeting.

The Students have the right to expect their government to be legitimate and responsive in working for the student welfare. However, the student must also be willing to demand civic responsibility of himself.

Window Signs To Be Discussed By Newly Elected Senate Body

The Student Senate will hold its first meeting with the newly elected senate body this Wednesday, October 11. Under old business will be a move to accept the Student Activities Act, 1967.

There will also be the consideration of two bills concerning the disbursement of complimentary tickets by the Homecoming Committee. If passed, these bills would require the committee chairman to submit a written report to the Ways and Means Committee, which will in turn work toward recommending a policy on such tickets.

Under new bills up for consideration will be those concerning (1) a recommendation to the Academic Matters Committee of the Faculty Senate that undergraduate and graduate exams not be placed together in courses for the purpose of establishing a grading scale; (2) a recommendation to all house governments concerning window displays; (If adopted the bill would call for the removal of all present window displays and the subjecting of drafts of all future displays to the approval of the house council.) (3) a recommendation to the Board of Trustees and the President that residents in the southwest area be allowed the same meal ticket exemptions as the rest of the campus.

U.S. Jets Bomb Military Compound

Bomb-set fires were reported raging Tuesday at a military compound where Soviet missiles and helicopters shipped into Haiphong had long been uncrated and assembled without interference from the American air offensive.

The U.S. Command announced the first strikes of the war against the compound, an array of 70 barracks and other buildings situated between Haiphong and the MIG base of Cat Bi, four miles southeast of the port.

Navy A6 Intruder jets staged the first attack before dawn Monday. They followed up with another raid before dawn Tuesday, blasting at both the compound and the MIG base, which had been hit for the first time Sunday. Pilots said the flames could be seen 20 miles away.

Soviet Union Announces Huge Defense Budget

The Soviet Union announced Tuesday one of the biggest increases in defense spending in its history to bolster North Vietnam and to aid Arab nations.

Finance Minister Vasily F. Garbuzov told Parliament a 15 per cent increase was necessary because "international tension demands increased attention to our defenses."

Then he noted that the Soviet Union firmly supports "the Vietnamese people in their struggle against the criminal aggression of American imperialism" and "the just struggle of the people of Arab countries against aggressive actions of Israel, against its imperialist patrons."

The defense increase, largest announced since the Berlin crisis of 1961, will bring publicly disclosed defense spending to $18.6 billion, 13.5 per cent of the 1968 budget.

About half of actual Soviet military spending is believed by Western analysts to be hidden under other budgetary headings. The published defense budget is primarily a reflection of political trends, these analysts say.

The United States spent $67 billion for defense this fiscal year and President Johnson has asked for $72.3 billion for 1967-68.

Western observers suggested the Soviet increase for 1968 might be primarily intended to emphasize Soviet support for North Vietnam and for Arab losers in the Middle East war last June.

In the past, Soviet foreign military aid was not mentioned in budget reports and was believed hidden in the budget. Now, the observers suggested, it might be coming into the public figures for political reasons.

Central Area Strives To Regain Recognition

By PETE WARD
Staff Reporter

The Central Area of campus stretches from Butterfield to Hills residence halls and includes over 2,500 students in 12 dorms. It is one of the older segments of the University campus, having residence halls dating back to 1947 and no halls completed later than 1962.

At one time, the Central Area and the Quad formed the major part of University Housing. Today, due to the massive building programs of recent years, the Central Area is in danger of becoming a forgotten segment of the University. In terms of financial support and physical plant, the Central Area is far below the level of the Southwest Area and the Orchard Hill halls. In fact, at present the Central Area is not even listed on the roadside maps of the University placed around the campus.

In an attempt to change this trend, a meeting of the Social Chairmen from the residence halls in the Central Area was held last week to discuss the possibilities of regional cooperation in the area. Also present at the meeting in the lounge of Baker residence hall were John Messinger, assistant Area Coordinator, Ray Bender, head of Baker Residence and a reporter from the Daily Collegian. With the assistance of these parties, a substantial start was made in forming a Central Association that would function as a distinct social and political entity on campus.

After discussing tentative ideas for joint action, including a theatre-in-the-round, a car rally and a regional newspaper, the Chairmen formed committees to present proposals to the next general meeting scheduled for tonight at 10:00 in Baker lounge.

UMass May Add Two New Schools

By PATRICIA WATSON

UMass may add two new schools if bills now before committee are enacted into law.

Bills to create a School of Law and a School of Social Work at the University of Massachusetts have been filed by State Representative Allan McGuane, D-Greenfield.

Establishment of a law school will cost about $300,000 as compared to $100,000,000 for the Medical School being planned at Worcester, Recording to McGuane. The bill is now under consideration of the House Ways and Means Committee.

Although the bill to creat the Law School has been filed annually for several years, it has never come to a vote. Rep. McGuane feels, however, that support for the bill is growing steadily.

The School of Social Work will also be relatively inexpensive to run, according to Rep. McGuane. He feels that there is a great demand for a school of this type. "As far as I know," he said, "only Boston College has a program of this sort while the new welfare bill and federal programs want trained people."

Although Rep. McGuane is optimistic about the eventual passage of the two bills, he believes that they will need much publicity and lobbying in their favor.

Suicide Aftermath

Security Chief Marchant Expresses Views

By WAYNE SOINI

(Editor's Note: Colonel John Chesley Marchant (USAF-Ret.), L.L.B., L.L.M., M.P.L., as "Staff Assistant to the Treasurer", has been assigned responsibility for campus security. Formerly professor and head of Air Force ROTC at UMass, he serves presently as chief of security, Civil Defense officer and staff assistant to the treasurer. Col. Marchant's domain encompasses campus security, traffic control, Civil Defense, police work, supervision of night watchmen, building security, and fire protection and prevention. The following interview took place Oct. 5.)

Q. Colonel Marchant, recently there was a widely-publicized suicide. Have there been other suicide attempts made on campus this semester?

A. Not to my knowledge, although such information would not necessarily come to my attention. You might ask Mental Health director Dr. Janowitz.

Q. It has been said that, for about a half hour prior to jumping from the J.F.K. Tower, Bruce Batease was watched by several people in the 19th floor lounge. Is this true to your knowledge?

A. I understand that there was a couple on the balcony itself; how long, exactly when chronologically, I do not know. There may have been other people in the lounge. What they were doing, whether they were watching or not, I do not know. The police have the names of witnesses . . . Sitting on a railing does not always mean, to you or me, that a suicide is about to occur.

Q. The scene following the suicide has been described as one of chaos among spectators, counselors and even police. Although the possibility of a jump attempt has long been recognized, is there in fact no plan of procedures following an attempt?

A. There is a plan. In this instance specifically the police on duty in the station heard cries coming from the vicinity of the J.F.K. Tower. Sergeant Cavanaugh went over immediately, moved people away from the body and initiated the telephoning of the medical examiner, Dr. Sheldon Clapp, other police, the dean of men, and others. Under the law, the body must remain undisturbed until the medical examiner arrives. The medical examiner is in full control until he completes his examination and tells police to remove the body.

Q. Have your investigations led to conclusions as to the feasibility of such things as safety railings, screened balconies or other mechanical measures?

A. I believe these things were probably considered by the architects and possibly the Board of Trustees, which body approves all building plans, prior to the setting of one stone upon another. I feel that such things will not stop a determined disturbed person. If he cannot jump off of one high place, he will find another.

Q. If a student finds a suicide about to take place should he himself step in or should he go for someone in authority?

A. See the psychologists on that. I'll tell you what I think he ought to do, which is also probably what Dr. Janowitz would tell you: talk to him. Calm him down, get him talking about the source of his disturbance and get his thinking away from it. Try to judge a time when you can call the police.

Q. So they should call the police?

A. Yes, the Police Department and/or Mental Health. (The numbers are 545-2121 for police, 545-2337 for Mental Health officials.) The police, on call 24 hours a day, are probably best . . . These are the people to call if your room-mate starts acting morose, giving away his worldly possession, acts unnaturally and contrary to his usual self, and is in a depressed state.

Q. Are police specially trained in this line?

A. Yes. Workshops in handling disturbed persons are periodically conducted for our personnel by representatives of Mental Health.

Q. Summing up the situation, then, you foresee no changes in policies governing suicide situations and feel that, while no system can be suicide-proof, all that can feasibly be done is being done?

A. Yes, sir.

Cadet Gerald W. Stadniki, a sophomore from 1st Platoon, B Company, has been chosen this week as the outstanding cadet in the Army ROTC Brigade.

In a competition involving nearly one hundred other sophomores, Cadet Stadniki finished number one. The criteria for his selection were his military appearance and his knowledge and understanding of drill.

SCHOENBRUN . . .

Determined to prevent nationalism, Churchill and Roosevelt gave China the right to manage Vietnam. Both President Ho and the French wanted the Chinese out of the country and following a trip to France by Ho Chi Minh, a representative of the French government formed his own autonomous puppet state in South Vietnam.

The result of all this was that France was offering Vietnam a self-governing land not sovereignty. This led to war as Ho Chi Minh predicted. The end did not come until 1954 with the Geneva Convention.

Shoenbrun stressed how the United States has twisted the first provision of the document from the creation of a "temporary, military demarcation line between two zones" to the creation of a "permanent, political frontier between two countries."

In June of 1955, the United States installed Diem in South Vietnam. He violated another provision of the 1954 Geneva convention, namely, that "consultations be held one year in advance of elections."

Schoenbrun following with the involvment of three United States administrations in that tired and batle-worn country. To the 850 men stationed in Vietnam under Eisenhower as stated in the 1954 agreement, John F. Kennedy decided to escalate our military involvement to approximately 15,000 men. The reason for this: Diem would not fight. He lost the support of his people and instituted a brutal police force in that country.

As a side light, Schoenbrun mentioned that at this time, the Vice-President of the U. S., Lyndon Johnson, referred to Diem as the "Winston Churchill of Southeast Asia." Thus Kennedy began an "administrative commitment" for which there is no provision in the Constitution.

Schoenbrun emphatically stated that "the road back was retraceable until LBJ . . . he went right over the brink!" From an optimistic note in 1964 of "no bombing, no defoliation, no escalation" we have gone deeper and deeper into regrettable involvement.

Schoenbrun told of his recent experiences in both North and South Vietnam this year where he met a "tired and old" Ho Chi Minh and the National Liberation Front. He also viewed the South Vietnamese elections which he said were as "fair and square as the elections in Mississippi."

Schoenbrun offered no easy, sure-way solution to the ever-growing problem but rather a grim picture of the road ahead unless Washington wakes up. His feelings, and the feelings of a receptive audience, were revealed as he concluded; "Our country may she always be right, but if she is not, let us put her right!"

Washington Refuses Permit for Anti-Viet Rally: SPA Continues Plans to Attend

NEW YORK (AP)—Planners of a mass rally and march in opposition to the war in Vietnam said Monday they would go ahead with the demonstration in Washington on Oct. 21 despite government refusal, up to now, to issue permits for the gathering.

The leaders of the National Mobilization Committee to End the War in Vietnam said they estimated that 40,000 persons would be involved in the rally. The committee is a coalition of anti-Vietnam war groups, pacifists, civil rights groups, hippies and others.

It announced that Henry Van Cleve of the General Services Administration told the committee Friday that permits would be denied unless it publicly renounced plans for a sit-in at the Pentagon.

In Washington, however a GSA spokesman said the government was still discussing the demonstration with the coalition and had neither denied nor granted the permit.

on campus

Despite plans to curb the October 21 demonstration the march will continue, according the Students for Political Action. Participants wil be informed of the possible consequences of marching without a permit. The SPA will continue to organize as before, but will keep participants involved of the situation. The Valley Peace Center, coordinators for the Amherst-Northampton area, will be placing advertisements in local papers and distributing leaflets noting the change in affairs.

Hallucinogens Pose Threat To Future Generations

Tests show that LSD and two other newly popular hallucination-inducing drugs cause birth defects in animals, a medical researcher said Tuesday.

One of these drugs Mescaline-bears a close chemical relationship to STP, the newest hippie-land drug, reported Dr. William F. Geber, Jr., associate professor of pharmacology at the Medical College of Georgia.

Geber said laboratory experiments in which pregnant hamsters were given injections of LSD, mescaline and BOL, bromlysergic acid resulted in fetuses with malformations of the brain, spinal cord, liver and other organs.

The drugs caused stillbirths, runting and other defects, he said in a paper prepared for Science the publication of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

"One of the dangers in taking the hallucinogenic drugs is that you've damaged your future children," he said.

U.S. sources lend some substance to Giap's claims. The Americans have been obliged to move more troops into northern provinces to meet threats below the demilitarized zone.

But, the U. S. sources note, Communist units obtain local numerical superiority in any area they choose. Marines in the northernmost provinces are often tied to fixed positions. Giap saw this as creating a U.S. dilemma, when the Communists choose the battlefields.

What did you do when Joe (Boxcar) Brkczpmluj was kicked off the football team just because he flunked six out of four of his majors? What did you do, Wallace Middendorp?

And when the school newspaper's editors resigned in protest because The Chancellor wouldn't allow the publication of certain salacious portions of "Night In a Girl's Dormitory" you just sat, didn't you?

A Social Purpose

The nominating and electing procedures for freshman class officer elections are now underway. By Friday, all the nomination papers should have been returned.

What all of this means in one sense, and a sense which no one has lately protested, is the perpetuation of a tradition of "class government" at UMass.

In addition to maintaining a tradition of identification among the body of students who enter college at the same time, UMass class governments also spend a considerable amount of money in the interests of providing social events for the University.

According to the by-laws of the Student Government Association, "The class officers shall be responsible for the proper conduct of all business which affects their respective classes and for running certain traditional events."

We urge the most recently-entered class to look upon its class elections and government as a means to extend class activity. Class government in itself at UMass is not applauded: It is a tradition. Its activities are appreciated. So there lies the challenge.

D.V.P. Lectures

By BILL SACHEREK
Editorial Staff

The Distinguished Visitors Program is a series of lectures by notable speakers on current topics of interest. The lectures are student-sponsored and open to the public without charge.

David Schoenbrun, a distinguished news correspondent who must be considered one of America's most informed persons on Vietnamese affairs, delivered a lecture entitled "The United States in Vietnam." The lecture was a summary of his one year course which he presents at the Graduate School of International Affairs at Columbia University. It also included reflections on his recent trip throughout Southeast Asia which included conferences with the leadership in Hanoi. For Schoenbrun it was the renewing of some friendships which have spanned over twenty years. It was back in 1946 that Schoenbrun, an eager young reporter, interviewed President Ho Chi Minh of the Democratic Republic of Vietnam.

His talk was an inside look at history in the making and provided some very interesting facts that were provocative to everyone.

The lecture was superb in its presentation and I'm sure that future D.V.P. lectures will be better attended. I think it would be to the benefit of the University community if a greater effort would be made in the future on the part of the students and faculty to inform one another in regards to the subject of upcoming lectures. The various departments of the University should inform their immediate faculty and it wouldn't hurt if an instructor would remind his class about a D.V.P. lecture even if it isn't relevant to the subject at hand.

Down This Way

Words

Words are as permanent as thoughts are fleeting. The introduction and acceptance of words into the language is a fascinating business. Because some imaginative persons created brand names, the acceptance is now mostly related to foods and household products. For instance, it would be as ludicrous to order a dish of gelatin dessert as it would be to write "facial tissue" on our shopping list.

Without using the Oxford English Dictionary, it is interesting to speculate on the origin of such words as "jello" and "kleenex," and to climb into the creative minds and crawl around for answers. The words "jell" and "jelly" and "gelatin" have a shimmering quality about them—the word as expression of the quality on the page, forever—and we make in our mouth the sound of what is happening when a square of the product is placed on the plate. The sound "ell" is unstable and shivers. We can't keep our tongue in place. The person who thought "jello" probably had been reading some Scottish verse or had been trying to think of an ending for "jell" by repeating "Jell . . . uh . . . jell . . . ummm . . . jell . . . OH!" Oh, oh.

Kleenex obviously came from "clean," because it cleans up something. The man must have thought "Kleenose" would sound too ridiculous, although clean necks sounds as absurd. The hard "k" sound has a commanding tone about it, and the "ex," anticlimactic, defines the way one feels when one blows one's nose.

We doubt the validity of "Split!" meaning "Get out of here!" as part of today's usage. But we are ready to accept, as practical and real, any man who says "I'm gonna go home" or "I'm hung up on this." And we are on the lookout for the ad man who comes up with the word-saving brand name for toilet paper.

Those in High Places . . .

To the Editor:

As residents of Coolidge Upper, we feel that your stand concerning the tower balconies in Thursday's Collegian was without real basis. You proposed that the balconies be screened in to protect that small minority of persons who might desire to commit suicide by jumping from these unenclosed high places.

What would be accomplished by having these balconies enclosed? First of all, the beautiful view from them would be spoiled. Secondly, the towers would look as if designed for use by a group of elementary-school students, not mature young people of college age.

As they stand, these balconies are not unsafe—they have fairly high railings to prevent accidents. True, the railings can be climbed over by anyone who wished to jump, but remember that screening can be cut by a desperate person.

You seem to feel that enclosing the balconies would prevent further tragedies. As we see it, even with these areas enclosed, anyone who wanted to jump from a high place could easily break a 22nd-floor window. Further, we have noticed how easy it is to get to the roof—it only takes the turn of a doorknob.

Therefore, we feel that your idea of enmeshing the balconies has little or no merit and is not worthy of consideration by the administration.

The Bitter End?

To the Editor:

There is at least one person on the campus who knows exactly how you felt when the Sox won the pennant: me. Being from Boston, I would skip school in September to sneak down into the box seats in the third inning as a crowd of 672 people watched and suffered as my heroes lost another.

Baseball greats such as Ted Lepcio, Dave Sisler, Edie Kasko and Billy Muffett live with a true fan to eternity. Men such as Chet Nichols, Dick Gernert, Tommy Hurd, George Susce and Jim Busby never really leave your heart. Who could ever forget Tracy Stallard giving Maris his 61st? Or Dennis Bennett's calcium?, or Pumpsie Green and Gene Conley in Israel?, or Dave Philley and his old-age pension at the plate?, or Stuart, Mantilla, Bressoud, and Malzone — our speedy, slick-fielding infield of youth and vitality?

And lastly, but far from least in all our hearts, the immortal Don Buddin and his seeming affinity to ground balls? How could anyone ever forget? Thank you for bringing back a lot of fond memories. And you will always be able to count on me to be there every Sept. 30th., rain or shine, first place or last, to the bitter end.

Int'l Students Adapt to UMass

By ROBERT NICHOLAS

Adapting to another culture can be quite difficult, but UMass foreign students seem to adapt to ours without too much difficulty, according to Mrs. Evelyn Russell, adviser to foreign students.

Mrs. Russell said that at latest count there were approximately 390 foreign students on campus this year. This is an increase of about 65 over last year.

The greatest number of the students are from the Republic of China on Taiwan. Mrs. Russell went on to list India as second followed by Korea, Canada and the Philippines. She explained that this list may change when more figures come into her office.

Most of the students are studying chemistry, physics, engineering, or food science and technology, said Mrs. Russell. She added that the majority are financing themselves and that about 60% of the graduate students are receiving money from teaching fellowships and other programs associated with the graduate school.

Mrs. Russell stated that the average age of foreign students is above that of American students attending the University, and that well over 75% of the foreign students are men.

According to Mrs. Russell's latest statistics, only about half of the undergraduate foreign students live on campus.

The main club to which the students belong, said Mrs. Russell, is the International Club. The club is open to anyone, including American students.

Head of House-Family

Gurwitz Active in Student Affairs

By ELIZABETH MACKAY

In one of the dorms on the top of Van Meter Hill is one of the campus' most active leaders and the head of a "house-family". This notable is Lewis Gurwitz in Van Meter South. His wife is the actual Head of Residence and his two month-old son Adam provides the only constant male companionship in the dorm of 200 girls.

Lew is proud of being an English major because he is "exposed to the greatest thoughts and ideas of the different times." He loves poetry and is "trying to persuade one of the English faculty members to head a seminar on modern Irish literature."

But Lew is no mere English major. He is also in pre-law and plans to go on to law school after graduation in June.

Lew is one of the most energetic men on campus. His formidable list of activities includes Adelphia, DVP, SWAP, the Student Senate and the Pre-Law Club. Instrumental in drawing up the constitution for the Student Communications Board, he has been active on that board since it was founded. One of his main interests now is housing facilities on campus for married undergrads, in particular as "house-families" in the dorms.

As proved by the lengthy number of activities, when Lew sees a job to be done he just pitches in and helps. However, not everyone on campus gets involved in these organizations. "Those students who are apathetic or disinterested can be overcome on an individual basis if the cause merits it", he feels.

Those on the campus "are no more apathetic than the rest of the population" in the country. Lew pointed out that only about 60-70% of the people vote in a governmental election. "In a democracy we can 'fight city hall' if we are willing to try." But, he realizes, "it is hard to get the campus motivated in any one direction with the 300 RSO groups."

Lew would like to see the campus united to end the wanton destruction in the dorms. "If they (the students) want to improve their situation, they should work from within — with the house governing board, the Student Senate, the honor societies, and the administration. It is our University and we have a lot to say in the way that it is run. This destruction defeats the purpose of the Senate which works hard on these problems."

He joined the Senate to "have an opportunity to say what his environment is . . . It is a central organization to the campus and should be open to as many groups as possible".

Because of these and other services he has performed for the campus community, he was selected for the senior men's honor society, Adelphia. His activities have enabled him to work with interesting and interested students and members of the faculty and the administration.

By belonging to each of these organizations Lew feels that he gains an education beyond the classroom experiences which will help him in the future.

To Lew Gurwitz the personal rewards are worth the time and effort he puts into each activity.

"Walk in" Sponsored by Student Congress To Take Place In Residence Halls At Boston

By J. GUIDO GRAIFF
Exchange Editor

Ed. Note: The Exchange Editor will report regularly in the Daily Collegian on relevant happenings on college campuses across the country.

BOSTON UNIVERSITY: A "walk in" sponsored and directed by Student Congress and a committee of dormitory officers will tentatively take place at the three major men's residence halls on Sunday, Nov. 5, in defiance of the University's denial of parietal privileges.

During the walk in, male dormitory residents will escort women into rooms at Myles Standish Hall, "C" tower of 700 Commonwealth Avenue, and West Campus I and III, in direct violation of the Administration's dormitory policy.

MIDDLEBURY COLLEGE: Freshman girls, during orientation, received an "undocumented paper" on contraception. The paper was unsigned and was unauthorized by the college administration.

TRINITY COLLEGE: Living space has been cut in three dorms to meet the specifications of the Hartford fire codes. The installation of corridors was necessary to provide two points of egress from each bedroom into two self-contained stairwells.

ILLINOIS STATE UNIVERSITY: Controversy over women's hours is stirring up the ISU student body. Many groups are forming to present their ideas. On Sept. 21, a meeting comprised of representatives of several of the groups met to discuss the issue. The group decided to make a study of the aspects and problems which would arise with a change in policy.

CENTRAL MICHIGAN UNIVERSITY: CMU President Judson W. Foust is faced with a recent ruling by Attorney General Frank Kelley that a state university official may not serve as an officer of a private business dealing with his school. President Judson is a Director of the Exchange Savings Bank. Presidents of Mich. State and U of Mich. have resigned their positions as bank directors in response to the ruling.

University Reform Committee Has Eye On Student Senate

By GEORGE CERULO
Staff Reporter

"There doesn't seem to be a need for URC right now," says Pete Ward, a Class of '68 government major and former member of the defunct University Reform Committee.

Ward told the Collegian that the URC was established two years ago with the intent "to put pressure on" the Student Senate when it failed to do its job. With the influx of many new members, he said, it is too early to judge the Senate's future attitude toward student problems research. He expressed the opinion that the Senate is presently functioning "satisfactorily". However, he remains pessimistic and suggested that the URC may be needed if the Senate becomes indifferent to the needs of the student body.

The Senate passed and later rejected (in a close vote) URC's constitution last fall semester. Ward suggests that the constitution was rejected more on "emotional grounds" than on "rational grounds" and that some Senators felt that the URC was infringing upon the functions of the Senate itself.

URC became well-known in the spring of 1966 because of its success in pushing for women's curfew reform on campus. After the controversial curfew issue, student interest in URC's functions gradually faltered. Ward believes that the URC faded out because of a lack of "vibrant issues" that could arouse student support. The URC became bogged down in the less interesting chores of student problems research.

Ward is a busy man on campus. He is a member of the Senate Public Relations Committee and the Students for Political Action, assistant education broadcast director for WMUA, a member of the Finance Council, campus correspondent for WFCR and free lance staff member for the Collegian.

Teacher Found Smoking Pot

The marijuana-smoking principal of Nicasio Elementary School said Tuesday she would appeal her dismissal in order to test California laws against the drug.

Mrs. Garnet E. Brennan, 58, was fired by the three-member school board Monday night at a protracted and crowded hearing in her schoolroom in this pastoral village 35 miles north of San Francisco.

The situation arose when Mrs. Brennan filed an affidavit in San Francisco Superior Court, stating she had smoked marijuana regularly for 18 years and considered it beneficial.

Her affidavit was one of 46 filed in an effort to mitigate punishment of a Mill Valley mechanic found guilty of trafficking in the drug.

The hearing was jammed not only by parents but by a number of city people who argued on behalf of marijuana.

Mrs. Brennan remained silent but her attorney, Molly Minudri, contended the drug was harmless.

The parents' position was summarized by Paul Farley, who declared, "These outsiders can say what they want, and I don't give a damn, but I'll be damned if my children are going to be taught by a person who smokes marijuana."

The board retired into a brief private session and emerged to announce that Mrs. Brennan was being fired form her $7,800-a year job on grounds of immoral conduct.

Mrs. Brennan did not say when or how she planned to appeal.

It didn't end there. With a new tie, out came the scissors again, and a new streak of luck began. "I can always give my father ties," said Ron.

Ron has been going to games since he was three years old; it was one way to see his father. Sportswriting is no easy job. There's a lot of road work, and the hours are often long and odd, schedules being what they are.

'Hasn't Reached Potential'

Pilot Mlinar Hopes to Ground UConn

By PETE CARROLL
Staff Reporter

When the Redmen invade UConn Saturday, big number 89 may well play a decisive role in the game's outcome.

Paul Mlinar, 6'-225 lb., in addition to his diverse duties as right defensive end, will have to contain UConn quarterback Pete Petrillo. Along with stopping outside runs and off-tackle slants, rushing the passer and occasionally covering passes, the husky senior must cope with the dangerous option play Petrillo runs.

Last week, against Dartmouth, Mlinar played the entire game on defense. Coach Vic Fusia will call on him to do the same this weekend at Storrs. Fusia said he's depending on Mlinar "to put the heat on Petrillo."

Mlinar started at defensive end as a soph, when the Redmen lost the Yankee Conference title to Maine. Last year he was hampered by a knee injury but this year he's back in fine shape. Fusia feels that his big end hasn't quite developed his full potential but that he'll reach his peak this season.

PAUL MLINAR
Applying the heat.

As a fullback in high school in Glen Head, N.Y., he was an All-Long Island selection. He also competed in track and wrestling.

Before coming to UMass, he attended Monut Hermon prep school, where he starred at fullback and also excelled on the track and mat. In wrestling, he won the Class A New England championship in the unlimited weight class.

After graduating, the English major plans to become a commercial airlines pilot. Having already won his private and commercial pilot's licenses, Mlinar will take the exam for an instructor's license at the end of the month.

SOMETHING ON THE BALL — Boston Red Sox pitcher Jim Lonborg uncorks one of his speedy pitches in the fifth game of the World Series Monday as he goes on to a 3-1 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals in St. Louis. Lonborg gave up three hits in the win.

Former Head Of Athletics At URI Dies

WAKEFIELD, R.I. (AP) —Frank W. Keaney, former athletic director at the University of Rhode Island and the coach who upgraded the pace of collegiate basketball by developing the fast break, died Tuesday. He was 81.

The apostle of run-and-shoot play was a notable coach in baseball, football, basketball and track but his national reputation was made in basketball where he compiled 402 wins and 124 losses in 28 years.

He was the first man inducted into the URI hall of fame in 1960. Shortly thereafter he was one of three coaches and seven players named to the basketball hall of fame at Springfield Col.

His university teams went to the National Invitational Tournament in Madison Square Garden in 1941, 1942, 1945 and 1946. New York fans loved his run-and-shoot basketball.

But the highlight of URI appearances there was the final tournament game in 1946 when the URI Rams lost a one point thriller to Kentucky.

That was the same tournament in which Ernie Calverley, now the URI basketball coach, fired the "shot heard 'round the world" — the ball traveling 55 feet to slip through the hoop and gain victory as the buzzer sounded.

A Phi Beta Kappa at Bates College where he earned his B.A. degree in 1911, Keaney taught at high schools in Connecticut, Massachusetts and Rhode Island before becoming the one man physical education staff at the then Rhode Island State College.

He retired from coaching in 1948 and became athletic director of URI. On June 30, 1956 he retired as professor emeritus of physical education.

One More Time--Hughes on Hill for St. Louis

Associated Press Wirephoto

IT'S A RACE—St. Louis catcher Tim McCarver, right, chases Boston's Rico Petrocelli and makes the tag in a run-down between third base and home in ninth inning of World Series game Monday in St. Louis. Umpire Al Barlick also gets in the race as Cards' pitcher Jack Lamabe, far right, backs up the play. Boston won the fifth game of the series, 3-1.

BOSTON (AP)—Dick Hughes, a 29-year-old rookie, gets his second chance for a World Series victory Wednesday while the St. Louis Cardinals get their second chance to end the Series.

Hughes, who was the second-game loser to Jim Lonborg, went through two workouts Tuesday in preparation for the crucial contest against Boston—a heavy talking Session and a light running drill.

"You feel bad losing, but if you give it your best and don't get beat around, you can't feel all that bad about it," the right-hander said of his defeat last Thursday while his teammates renewed their acquaintance with Fenway Park.

"I didn't have my real good stuff last time. My fast ball was fairly decent, but didn't have my slider. I feel the slider makes the fast ball more effective. If I have the slider tomorrow, I'll be okay.

Someone asked Hughes about Boston's Carl Yastrzemski, whose home run led to the pitcher's downfall in his first start.

"I threw the ball where I wanted to," Hughes said of the home run pitch, "But I didn't have good stuff on it. As I said before, I made half a mistake, and he turned it into a whole mistake. This time I will just give him my best stuff."

This won't be the first time Hughes will be pitching against Gary Wasleski, Boston's starter.

"I pitched against him two or three times last year when I was at Toledo and he was at Toronto," Hughes related. "I can't remember exactly, but I think I beat him a couple of times."

The Cardinals should know a little more about Waslewski Wednesday than they did last Saturday when he pitched three perfect innings of relief. Lou Brock, however, isn't sure.

"I have no idea what he throws," the Cards' left fielder said. "I faced him only once, and he struck me out."

Another outfielder, Roger Maris, missed the workout. He remained at the team's motel with a cold.

Vacation Can Wait, for Hub Scribe

By MEREDITH GOETTEL

Baseball fans from Boston recognize the name Cliff Keane. He's the Boston Globe sportswriter who covers all the Red Sox games.

How would you like to have him for a father? All those free tickets to the games! Ron Keane, a '67 UMass graduate, is just that lucky. A graduate student here, he'll be at the game tomorrow if the Red Sox pull off today's game.

A newspaperman for 28 years, Keane has been a sportswriter for 25 and has covered the Red Sox since he hit the sports pages. Although he has covered the Celtics for 15 (Ron gets free tickets to those games, too), he's in love with baseball.

"Baseball is his sport," said Ron. "He's a different personality at the ball park. All the players think he's crazy."

Ron's father is a close friend to most of the players, George Scott will come in and say to him, "You're crazy!" And Cliff will respond, "Scott, when are you going to lose that belly?" With his gold teeth showing in a broad grin, Scott answers, "When are you going to lose yours?"

Keane has won the respect of al the players. He is candid and his jibes are fun-loving. He's honest with the players, never using the tactics of some of his fellow scribes, many of whom will strike up a friendship with a player to gain inside information and then cut him up in the paper the next day.

Roger Maris, who was much maligned in the press during his up-and-down years with the Yankees, considers Keane a close friend simply because he feels that he can trust him.

Keane could tell lots of stories, and his son does. There is George Scott, the poor boy from Greenville, Mississippi. His mother's name is Magnolia, and George is always trying to hit home runs for her. He hit 19 this past season.

And then there's Yaz, everyone's favorite. He cut off Keane's brand new tie one day, "just for luck!", and the Red Sox won the game. Keane had to wear the tie

WORKING OUT IN DRIZZLE—Ken Harrelson holds umbrella over Boston Red Sox slugger Carl Yastrzemski as he swings bat as they prepared to work out at Fenway Park yesterday for today's World Series game. Boston was surrounded by heavy fog accompanied by a light drizzle.

Rookie Waslewski Holds Sox Hopes in Eleventh Hour

BOSTON (AP)—With their backs against the friendly Green Monster walls of Fenway Park, the underdog Boston Red Sox dug in for a do-or-die fight in Wednesday's sixth World Series game with the St. Louis Cardinals.

The Red Sox worked out at Fenway in a heavy overcast and fog Tuesday morning after being greeted by more than 1,500 fans at the airport on their arrival home Monday night.

Mgr. Dick Williams reminded his players that they were in the same situation they faced on the last 2 days of the regular season. Boston had to win 2 straight from Minnesota to have a chance at the American League pennant and they did just that.

"It's good to be home," said the Red Sox manager. "When we faced Minnesota we knew we had to win both. It's the same thing again."

Although the Cardinals plan to start right-handed Dick Hughes against the Sox, Williams said he would stick with the line-up he used successfully against the left-handed Steve Carlton Monday.

Even if rain forces postponement of the 6th game, Williams said he probably would stay with Gary Waslewski, his announced starter, instead of switching to Jim Lonborg, who worked Monday. However, it will be Lonborg in the 7th game if Boston squares the Series.

Waslewski, a 2-2 performer with Boston and 5-6 at Toronto in a season of commuting between the parent club and the International League farm team, earned the start by pitching 3 perfect innings of relief in the third game.

Tendonitis in spring training, a bad back in the summer and a sore elbow in early fall made this a year to forget for the 26-yr.-old Waslewski until this week. He started spring training with Boston, went back to Toronto in April, up to Boston in June, back to Toronto in August and finally up after the close of the season. His last start was Sept. 3 against Syracuse.

Waslewski was not on the list of Series eligibles until the day before the opener when he, Russ Gibson, and Ken Brett were subbed for the ailing Darrell Brandon, Sparky Lyle and Bill Landis, who was in the Army.

"I know I can get anybody out when I have my very good stuff," he said. "I made 2 or 3 bad pitches against the Cards in relief and got away with them. Most of the time I threw my fast ball."

Waslewski said he sometimes felt better psychologically if he did not throw too hard warming up. There have been times when Williams has had to needle him to make him throw hard instead of experimenting with pitches.

"I tell him to bust it as hard as he can as long as he can," said Williams.

Co-ed Among Entries In Cross-Country Race

Two hundred seventy entries have been filed at the intramurals office for Thursday's annual cross-country race. It was the largest turnout since the race was started three years ago, according to intramurals director Ted Schmitt.

And for the first time, the entries include a co-ed. That's right. Senior Mary Alice Buck has thrown her bonnet into the running and will don track shoes for the race, which begins at 11 a.m., rain or shine.

"If she wins," Schmitt said, "all the others will have to wear dresses from now on."

The 1.7 course begins near Northampton Road, running down the road in front of the Stadium and returning on University Drive to the finish line.

All runners must report to the finish line at 10:30 a.m. Thursday to pick up numerals. Trophies will be awarded to the first, second and third place finishers, and to the winning team. Although each team may have an unlimited number of entries, only the first four count in the team standings.

Rains washed out the entire intramural schedule last night.

'Different Type of Kid in Soccer,' Says Different Type of Coach

Assistant Sports Editor
By GLENN BRIERE

The man on the crutches standing on the sidelines of the soccer practice field is Larry Briggs, who has been coach of the UMass varsity soccer team since 1932.

An infected foot has put Briggs on crutches but it hasn't hindered his enthusiasm for coaching. "Sure, it's frustrating," Briggs said. "You can't do what you want to do out there."

Briggs has been a coach at UMass for 40 years longer than anyone else in the athletic department. He can't name some of his memorable moments simply because there are too many to remember.

In his second year of coaching soccer, the Redmen went undefeated, a feat that hasn't been duplicated since. "But I've enjoyed the kids and the competition," Briggs said. "We've played the best in New England over the years."

Briggs' background in soccer forms a list that would stretch the length of the goal mouth. Among his positions has been president of the National Soccer Coaches Association. Briggs also had a great deal to do with the founding of the New England Intercollegiate Soccer League, of which UMass is a member. Mention New England college soccer, and you'll find that Briggs is intricately involved.

There are several things that Briggs looks for in a soccer team. Of course, one of these is skill in fundamentals although Briggs doesn't know "how much percentage to put on it." A good soccer team also needs a good goalie.

But perhaps the most important attribute is mental attitude. "This is critical," said Brggs. "The players will make their own breaks if they have a good mental attitude."

Another strength that Briggs looks for is the ability to get shots on goal. According to Briggs, a team should get about 30 shots away to win. Of course, this doesn't always hold since the element of luck is involved. A team has to get the breaks to win.

Just how many breaks the Redmen get, Briggs said, will determine their chances in the Yankee Conference. Two years ago, a break in the Vermont game enabled UMass to win in double overtime and tie for the crown. "It's an uncertain game," Briggs remarked.

Briggs has enjoyed his years as UMass soccer coach, saying, "It's a different type of kid that plays soccer." And he sees a booming future for the sport.

"Soccer's gotta grow, there's no alternative."

BRIGGS AT PRACTICE

Coach Pleased With Opener, Eyes Even Race

The UMass soccer team opened up its 1967 season with a 3-1 win over Maine last Saturday and Coach Larry Briggs was reasonably pleased with the team's performance.

"This was our first game," said Briggs, "and although Maine wasn't really that strong, they were the best Black Bear team we've played to date."

Briggs had plenty of praise for his front line. Co-captain Gerry Cellilli locked exceptionally good as did Garry Gibbons and Marty Smith. The halfbacks and defensive line performed "as well as expected in an opening game." Briggs had special praise for the play of junior fullback Bob Dubiel.

The next few weeks will tell the story for the Redmen. Briggs said, "Our next three games, Connecticut, Rhode Island and Trinity, are three of the tougher teams on our schedule. After them, we'll know just how good we are."

Saturday's game at Connecticut will be a big one as far as UMass' Yankee Conference hopes go. Briggs sees a four-team race in the Conference, rating UConn, Rhode Island, defending champion Vermont and UMass about even.

"It could be a round-robin race," he said.

Red Sox Make History: Let's Live for Today

BOSTON (AP) — The fighting Boston Red Sox squared the World Series Wednesday by battering the St. Louis Cardinal pitching staff for 12 hits, including 4 home runs, to win the 6th game 8-4 in a wild slugging brawl.

Rico Petrocelli hit 2 into the screen atop the Green Monster wall in left field and Carl Yastrzemski and Reggie Smith each hit one homer for the Red Sox. Lou Brock hammered a 2-run 440-ft. blast for the Cards.

A record total of 11 pitchers, 8 by the groggy CARDINALS, were used by the 2 clubs, setting up a dream game duel for Thursday's 7th game between BOSTON'S JIM LONBORG and ST. LOUIS'S BOB GIBSON, both two-game winners.

Ten Red Sox went to bat in an amazing 7th-inning rally by the desperate Red Sox, who had seen their 4-2 lead melt away on Brock's tremendous homer off John Wyatt. Before the inning was over, 4 runs had scored on Joe Foy's double, five singles and a sacrifice fly.

During the unbelievable inning, Brock made an unsuccessful leap for Foy's drive that went for a double, driving in the tie-breaking run. Shortstop Dal Maxvill broke the wrong way on a ball that bounced through for a single by George Scott and Smith's fly ball fell among Brock, Curt Flood and Maxvill for another single.

This was a complete switch in a series that has been dominated by the fine pitching of LONBORG and GIBSON. At the end of the long, sunny, windy afternoon, the unlikely winner was WYATT, the man who threw the longest home run ball of the day.

Although St. Louis starter Dick Hughes went into the Series record books as the only pitcher ever to give up 3 homers in one inning, Jack Lamabe, the 4th of the long, thin line of Card pitchers, was charged with the defeat.

Trailing 3-1 after the 4th game and faced with an uphill battle that only 3 clubs have accomplished, the American League champions have fought back to even matters and leave matters in the hands of Lonborg, the handsome, articulate ace.

PETROCELLI, hitting only .071 with one hit in 14 at bats in the first five games, hammered a homer down the left field line about 315 ft. from the plate in the 2nd and slugged a HUGHES' pitch into the screen atop the wall in left center, a 360-ft. smash in the fourth inning.

After the home run explosion by Yastrzemski, Smith and Petrocelli in the 4th routed Hughes and appeared to have put the game beyond reach, the Cards bounced back to tie in the top of the 7th on Brock's clout.

Then the roof caved in on Mgr. Red Schoendienst and his pitching staff. Lamabe had just come in after Nelson Briles, who had pitched 2 scoreless innings, departed for a pinch hitter.

With one out, the pinch hitter DALTON JONES lashed a single to right. FOY then drove the ball high and deep to left. BROCK attempted to make a leaping catch but the ball went over his glove and rolled to the wall while JONES scored with the tie-breaker.

Joe Hoerner, the lefty who gave up the 2nd homer to Yaz last Thursday, was greeted with a single by Mike Andrews that drove in Foy. After Yaz singled to right, Red went to the bullpen again and brought in Larry Jester, another lefty.

Jerry Adair, batting for Jose Tartabull, lofted a long sacrifice fly to center, scoring Andrews with the third run of the inning. Maxvill unexpectedly broke to his right as Scott's hopper went right through the hole he had opened and scooted to left center.

Then SMITH'S high fly dropped safely in left center just beyond the reach of BROCK, MAXVILL and FLOOD, driving home YAZ with the fourth and final score of the big inning.

Petrocelli's first homer gave Gary Waslewski, the obscure starter, a margin but the Cards got to him for 2 runs in the 3rd on a double by Julian Javier, a scoring single by Brock, who stole second and drove home head first just ahead of Yaz's throw after fielding Flood's single.

The home run attack staggered the confident Cards in the 4th but they came back again to tie in the 7th only to see their chances of scoring a 6th-game knockout disappear in that wild seventh.

SCHOENDIENST opened with HUGHES and followed with RON WILLIS, BRILES, LAMABE, HOERNER, JASTER, RAY WASHBURN and finally HAL WOODESHICK as he cleaned out his bullpen. The only pitchers he didn't use were GIBSON, AL JACKSON and STEVE CARLTON.

"It's too bad Waslewski couldn't receive credit for the win," said Mgr. Dick Williams. "He really busted the ball for five innings."

Williams said he sent Lonborg, Thursday's pitcher, home before the game was over. He will be working with only 2 days rest after pitching a 3-hitter Monday in the fifth game.

GIBSON will have 3 days rest since his shutout victory last Sunday in ST. LOUIS.

Dining Commons Spokesman Declares "We Always Strive for Quality"

By RICHARD LANE
Staff Reporter

Southwest has dining problems but they are being solved in a continuing effort to provide better service for the crowds of students.

Associate director of the University food service Joel Stoneham gave this summary to 30 Southwest area students at George Washington Tower Tuesday.

Stoneham, appearing as guest speaker at the request of sophomore John Carter, cultural committee chairman for George Washington Middle, presented a short speech explaining policies and procedures of the University Dining Commons

Stoneham said he believes about 99% of the trouble between students and dining commons people is due to "lack of communication."

Students do have some valid complaints, he said but that there is a Student Food Service Committee to handle such matters. He urged students with complaints or problems to see their residence hall representatives on the committee or local commons manager.

Regarding Sept. 26 student picket and protest of Commons #5 by Southwest residents, Mr. Stoneham remarked that he felt it all "completely needless."

He said that he would "come any place, any time, to meet with anyone on any food problem," but that he did not like the idea of students running the "red shirt" before seeking help from him or others.

The Associate director said the commons budget for purchase and selection of food totals $4.7-million. The board rate is $2.75 a day. And with this amount, the University Food Service people are "trying to use it as wisely and fairly as possible."

In this respect Mr. Stoneham said, the Dining Commons "is in essence, a service business unto ourselves" whose main aim is "to serve you in the best way we can".

Answering complaints about the food served—the guest speaker said, "Our food is on a par with any around." He cited the second policy, choices and four-week cycle menu as evidence.

Because 20% of all meal ticket holders do not eat at some time during the day, the service has a "guessing game as to just how

North Vietnam Army Steps Up Activity in Northern Sections

SAIGON (AP)— Anticipating renewed attacks from North Vietnam, the U.S. Command has dispatched an Army brigade into the invasion-prone northern sector of South Vietnam, boosting American man-power there to around 100,000 troops.

At the same time, U.S. intelligence reports showed a buildup of forces on the Communist side. The reports put Communist strength at 85,000 men in the northern area and above the demilitarized zone on the North-South border.

Of these, 46,000 men—including 16,000 North Vietnamese — are reported inside the five northern provinces, called the 1st Corps area. Another buildup has increased Communist strength in and above the DMZ from 35,000 men to 39,000, the reports said.

Negro, Ghetto Students Will Come to UMass

By SALLY DOLGIN

"Let it be a challenge to you." The predominant theme of Bel Kaufman's novel Up the Down Staircase was reiterated at the Education Club meeting Tuesday evening. Basing their lectures on education of the culturally deprived, Dr. Wilson of the University Sociology Dept. and Mr. Fisher, head of the Upward Bound, spoke about the poverty - stricken Negro student.

Dr. Wilson discussed: 1) preschool influence, 2) learning difficulties, and 3) his personal solutions. Of immediate significance to UM students was the position the University has adopted to meet the problem.

Wilson explained that the deprived child lacks sensory, auditory, and intellectual stimuli as a result of a poor home environment. Consequently, when he enters school, he does poorly in reading, finds it difficult to follow the teacher's instructions, and has no motivation to learn. Wilson suggested that nursery schools be instituted to provide the necessary verbal and auditory stimuli.

"The children of ghettos don't learn," Wilson commented, "because they are not being taught. The teachers, for the main part, do not expect them to learn, and they plan an antagonistic role in the classroom," according to him.

The sociology instructor advocated a nationwide campaign which would provide qualified, highly paid teachers to raise the standards of the ghetto school. He said that the teachers should serve an internship of one year in poverty areas, be paid at least twice as much as the average teacher, and constitute only a 1:10 ratio to their students.

Co-director of the program for the continuing education of Negro students, Wilson stated that approximately 360 Negro students from poverty areas in this state will be brought to UMass over the next four years.

Gagarin Says Moon Contains Diamonds . . .

MOSCOW (AP) — Although pessimistic about prospects for a manned flight to the moon in the near future, Soviet cosmonaut Yuri A. Gagarin said minerals to be extracted from the moon could have "huge significance for the people's economy."

Writing in the military journal Red Star, Gagarin and space physician V. Lebedev reported expectations of finding diamonds and platinum on the lunar surface but thought more unmanned soft landings must be made.

UMass Musigals Debut At New Hatch Opening

The cheerful warmth of the "New Hatch" was the setting last week for the first appearance this season of the UMass Musigals. Watchers and listeners enjoyed a varied program including "Feeling Groovy," "What is this Thing Called Love?" the spirited "To be Redeemed," a sophisticated rendition of "California Dreaming," and a heart-rending presentation of "A Good Man is Hard to Find."

Ever mindful of their academic obligations, the Musigals also sang the distorted but often true "Sophomoric Philosophy."

For those people not familiar with the group, the Musigals are twelve University women who enjoy singing together. Apparently audiences enjoy hearing the group, too, for they are featured guests at many campus and civic functions, as well as in collegiate competitions.

Last year the Musigals won the Berkshire Bowl, in competition with other area schools, including Smith, Mount Holyoke, and Williams. Keep listening so that you might hear the "Crazy Rhythm" of the Musigals.

He stated that a proposal requesting funds to finance the program has been submitted to the Ford Foundation. He also stated that U M has extended complete cooperation in this matter.

Tutoring programs would be set up in Boston, Cambridge, Pittsfield, Worcester, and Holyoke to prepare the students for college. As an ultimate objective, Wilson hopes that this demonstration project will spur state involvement in the problem of the poverty student.

Mr. Fisher, from Upward Bound, explained his program that has been running for two years at UMass. Dealing with high school students, the project consists of a summer institute on campus and a follow-up in home communities.

"The goal of Upward Bound," he commented, "is to get students into college, who under normal conditions would not be accepted. Secondly, the program tries to deal with their "emotional and psychological problems so that they can cope with the world a little better," Fisher remarked.

Fisher explained that the group's structure was patterned after that of UMass. The student government planned their own social rules, made major decisions, and helped determine courses which were geared to their level.

During the year, some of the students were placed in private schools, and others at UMass. All of the youngsters have been promised a place in college.

Honors Colloquia Program Meets With Modern Success

By JOHN SHOEMAKER
Staff Reporter

Underclassmen at the University of Massachusetts have "something less than enthusiam" for the Honors Colloquia, according to Professor E. H. Emerson of the Department of English.

Freshmen particularly are hesitant to "tackle the extra load" of the program because of inexperience in college life, he explained. There are more than 300 members of the Class of 1969 alone with averages of 3.0 or higher, but, he said, the program has only a fraction of them.

Because of this apparent apathy the Honors Colloquia has experienced only "moderate success" even though the program is better than what some expensive, private institutions have to offer, Mr. Emerson said.

The program is intended to provide students of special ability with challenging educational opportunities separate from the regular four-year curricula offered at the University. Students with a cumulative average of 3.0 or higher qualify for the program. Also, any student with some particular interest or ability may qualify with permission from his department.

If a student earns a "B" or "A" in the subject he will graduate with "honors" in that subject. This program shouldn't be confused with the titles given for graduation with distinction.

The Senior Honors for upperclassmen is an individual, six-credit, year-long research paper. The Honor Colloquia grants one credit per semester. Freshmen, sophomores and juniors meet regularly in small groups and often work on group projects.

This year's "tentative program of honors" has a number of unusually attractive topics, Mr. Emerson said, including "Man's Role in Changing the Face of the Earth" and the "Role of the Uncommitted".

One of the major problems of the program, he explained, is that many of the students are unaware of the program and what it has to offer. The Student Handbook, he claims, is inadequate in explaining the complete program and is not always read by the student.

However, he said, if anyone is curious about Honors Colloquia and what it can do for him, Mr. Emerson would gladly explain over a cup of coffee in his office at South College.

Newspapers Continue to Grow With Modern Technology Age

This is National Newspaper Week and a good time to remind readers that "Newspapers Get Things Done." This is the theme of Newspaper Week and it's based not only on the action role played by newspapers throughout American history, but also on the accomplishments of today's newspapers in getting things done for their communities — for education, public health and safety, religion, the arts, sports, recreation, youth programs, voter registration and get-out-the-vote and every worthwhile cause.

The first newspapers in America, late in the 17th century, began by protesting against colonial governors' arrogant abuse of office and unendurable restrictions of cherished freedoms. For this, many newspapers were arbitrarily supressed, closely censored, or their publishers jailed. But in 1734, John Peter Zenger, a printer-publisher arrested for "libel" and imprisoned for printing attacks against the colonial administration, won acquittal in a celebrated trial which established truth as a defense in cases of libel and marked the beginning of freedom of the press in America.

Press Guards Freedoms

"No nation ancient or modern," wrote Zenger in 1733, "ever lost the liberty of freely speaking, writing, or publishing their sentiments, but forthright lost their liberty in general and became slaves."

Twenty-five years later, Thomas Jefferson wrote the Marquis de LaFayette, "The only security of all is in a free press. The force of public opinion cannot be resisted when permitted freely to be expressed. The agitation it produces must be submitted to. It is necessary to keep the waters pure."

Freedom of speech and freedom of the press to publish the truth, therefore, received high priority in the framing of the Constitution when 20 years later the Colonists fought for and won their freedom from Britain.

In 1800, only 235 newspapers were being published in the 13 colonies and only 24 were dailies.

Today there are nearly 10,000 newspapers in the United States with an all-time high circulation of 61,397,252 daily and 26,888,230 weekly. Circulation of daily newspapers increased by a million a day last year; weekly circulation increased 800,000.

In fact, the newspaper business is one of today's "growth" businesses, exceeding by 211.3 to 207.2 the rapid growth of the U.S. economy as a whole since World War II, based on the Gross National Product index.

Newspapers Are All Sizes

Eighty percent of the country's newspapers today are weeklies published in rural, small city and suburban "hometown" communities. Circulation of the median-size weekly is about 3000.

Three-fourths of the 1,754 daily newspapers are published in cities of less than 25,000 with the median-size daily having a circulation of about 10,000. Less than four percent of the nation's newspapers are metropolitan dailies.

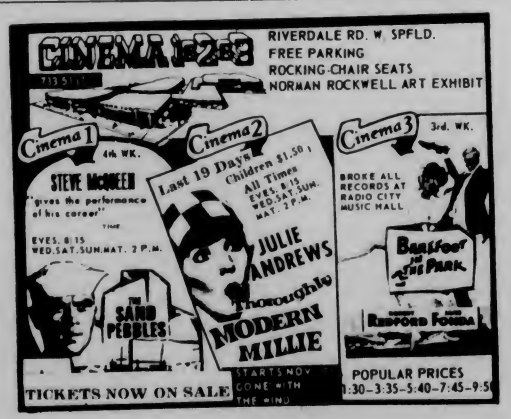
Enjoying Good Health

Despite the widely publicized deaths of a few metropolitan newspapers, the newspaper business has never been in better health. There are more newspapers being read today than ever before.

Readers spent more than $2 billion last year to buy and read daily newspapers and about $85 million for weekly newspapers.

Newspapers have continued their growth despite the entry of two major competitors in the advertising field in the past 35 years, radio and television.

Advertising revenues of daily newspapers last year broke all former records totalling $4.9 billion, topping 1965 by 9½ percent, and nearly doubling the dollar volume of television.



Great Technical Advances

In the past decade, newspapers have spent more than $1 billion for new plants and modernization.

These expenditures represent not alone replacement of obsolete and aging equipment and plants, but point to the expanding technological revolution in newspaper publishing which has seen such recent developments as computers for setting type, automatic mailing rooms, high-speed transmission of wire news, photo-composition of type and printing by the offset method. All these not only cut cost of production, but increase the overall quality and appearance of the product.

Growth Through Service

Between the news of far-away events of this world and outer space and that of the suburbs and rural communities where millions of people live there is an "information gap" which weekly and small daily newspapers try to bridge. They are as much or more a part of the fabric of American freedom as their big-city brothers because their news pattern concerns close-to-home interests: Proceedings of local government, projects of local clubs, victories and defeats of home-town athletic teams, school and church activities, local boy or girl makes good, births, deaths, engagements, weddings and on and on. This is the home-town newspaper's function, its responsibility and its challenge. Newspapers, dailies and weeklies, are more important today than ever in people's lives, and better newspapers are making a better world.

Lutheran Minister Urges Re-Examination Of Catholic-Protestant Relations

For its third presentation in the series commemorating the 450th anniversary of the Protestant Reformation, Immanuel Lutheran Church is presenting the Rev. Glenn Charles Stone, editor of the Lutheran Forum, an international monthly, speaking on the topic, "Reformation & Reunion." The speech will be given at Immanuel church, 867 N. Pleasant St., Amherst, beginning at 7:00 p.m. next Sunday evening, October 15.

Relations between Roman Catholics and Protestants remained "frozen" for a long time following the Reformation which began with Luther's protest of October 31, 1517. The two branches of Christianity continued from that point scarcely communicating with one another.

Since the Vatican Council of 1962-1965, however, profound changes have taken place in Catholic-Protestant relations and in the Ronn Catholic Church itself. The changed situation makes it necessary for Protestants to re-examine their relation to the Roman Catholic Church. It is this question which the Rev. Glenn Stone will seek to explore.

Pastor Stone is uniquely qualified to discuss the topic of Reformation and Reunion. He has been a close student of the ecumenical scene ever since his ordination in 1952 and has contributed numerous articles on the subject to religious journals. His editorial work and frequent travels have brought him into contact with many Roman Catholic clergy and laity.

Other speakers appearing in the Reformation Series at Immanuel Lutheran Church are Dr. John Ratte, Amherst College; Dr. Sydney Ahlstrom, Yale Divinity School; and Dr. Nils Dahl, Yale Divinity School. The Rev. Richard E. Koenig is pastor of Immanuel Lutheran Church.

Professor of Anthropology Speaks on Minority Rights

Oscar Lewis, professor of anthropology at the University of Illinois, will deliver the Anna Hunt Billings Lecture at 8 p.m. Tuesday, October 17 in Sage Hall, Smith College. His subject will be "Loneliness, Alienation and the Culture of Poverty." The public is invited to attend.

Lewis is the author of numerous articles and eight books. Among the latter are "Five Families," "The Children of Sanchez," and "Pedro Martinez," which have become landmarks in the field of anthropology.

The Anna Hunt Billings Memorial Fund was established in 1948 in memory of Miss Billings of the class of 1891 at Smith. It provides for an annual lecture at the college on topics concerned with the social and legal rights of minorities in the United States.

UMass Volunteers Needed For Belchertown State School

Summer, a drawing by a twenty year-old boy at the Belchertown State School for the Mentally Retarded reflects the optimistic and cheerful attitude shared by many at the State School.

Art, athletics, or simply a friendly talk with a Belchertown Volunteer allows the children to release emotions and share ideas. The many facilities at the state school include bowling, basketball, a large carousel, and classrooms, on a beautiful campus.

Volunteers from UMass are needed to assist the children in these activities and to bring desperately needed companionship to Belchertown.

The bus to Belchertown will leave the Newman Center this Saturday at 1:15. It will not stop near the North Commons as in previous weeks. All students are welcome to attend.

many students will eat."

Southwest Commons #5 is not serving beyond capacity, he stated. Although intended for 1800 students, approximately 2200 are eating there but the maximum operable capacity, according to Mr. Stoneham, is 2500. "We can feed that number without too much difficulty," he commented.

As to the fraternity-sorority issue of mandatory purchase of meal tickets without refund, the associate director stated, "If a student wants to live 'on residence', he should eat there."

The Greek matter, he noted is going before the Student Senate for discussion.

What do he and his staff plan to do in the way of specific solutions to specific problems? Stoneham stated that the food service will correct mistakes as we find them." For example, he said, statistics are being compiled and studied on length of lines, new menus for better variety are being drawn up and such innovations as new juice dispensers in the cafeterias have been added.

Mr. Stoneham summarized that he is "always striving for quality and hopes it will improve at all times. We are doing fairly well overall" he feels.

National Newspaper Week reminds us all of the historic value and vitality of our cherished freedom of the press. And more than that, it focuses on the irreplaceable role which our newspapers have played, for two and a half centuries, in serving and safeguarding that freedom.

For our papers are more than just an expression of an unfettered press: they are the unsleeping sentinels of all freedoms. They are ready, simultaneous interpreters between the government and the people. Their freedom to publish is our freedom to interpret -- and both incur the responsibility and honor vital to the success of the democratic society that is our way of life.

In our nation, which spreads so far and wide across both continent and sea, newspapers have unparalleled power and significance. They are nerve centers of information and of action. They are educators, counselors, entertainers and community servants. They carry forward the principles that gave our nation life -- and they enrich that life by provoking and marshalling the thoughts, talents, and energies of Americans everywhere toward the promise of growing fulfillment. I know that all my fellow citizens join with me in traditional salute to their indispensable service.

...With Reason

The Baby Bombers from Boston today have the opportunity to become the World Champions of Baseball. If they do, it will be the greatest thrill to hit New England since . . . well, since that fateful Sunday when destiny swept the Sox to victory over the shocked Minnesota Twins and to the American League pennant.

The entire nation, in the rich underdog tradition, rooted for and cheered home the Sox. All Red Sox fans celebrated the great victory that Sunday evening, and the UMass boosters were not exceptions. The display of spirit that evening was heartwarming, and the relative order was unusual for a crowd of that size. Yet, the total cost to the University for the demonstration ran well into quadruple figures.

Obviously, if the Sox take it all this afternoon—and perhaps even if they lose—there will be cause again to celebrate. The fact that there are no classes today may lend an excuse for an even larger crowd—and perhaps more spirited. And it is a large crowd on a holiday evening that might, in a feverish pitch of emotion, turn into a mob.

The only factor that stands between a crowd and a mob is reason. Reason yields conceptions about the positive manner in which university students should act, dictates legal restrictions upon loafing and wanton destruction, and guides actions into channels that do not harm the livelihood and physical well-being of innocent parties.

Today, there may well be cause to celebrate. But it should not be at the expense of the Amherst merchants, the University buildings and personnel, or the taxpayers of Massachusetts. It should be a celebration guided by reason.

If we proudly hail student responsibility and maturity in the areas of social and academic reform, we must not be hypocrites and slough off responsibility and maturity in areas where perhaps our good times might be slightly curtailed.

It would be tragic if on Friday morning we had achieved the alias 'Baby Bombers of Amherst'—especially since by that time the Red Sox will have grown up to become seasoned series veterans. After all, it has been their poise in the clutch situations that has taken them this far.

The newly matured Sox should serve as an example—and not as an irrational catalyst—for whatever actions might follow the seventh game today.

"All The Lonely People"

To the Editor:

It was with a profound sense of sorrow and horror that I read the letter of Patricia Lempart, Kristine Irvine, Kathleen Kennedy and Kathleen Kurpaska in the October 11, 1967 edition of the Daily Collegian. That these four people should feel that the beautiful view from the towers is more precious than the saving of a human life is indeed a sad commentary on the moralistic values of today.

I will not deny that some obstruction of the view will result from an erection of a screen. But when we balance this loss against the saving of a human being from self-destruction surely we must choose the latter. Have we seen so many war and cowboy-and-Indian movies where there was wanton displays of killings that the single life is now rendered meaningless? Have we in the age of overkill forgotten that human life is sacred?

These four people also contend that inclosing the balconies with screens will give the buildings the look of an elementary school: They believe that these buildings are inhabited by mature people of college age. But, have they ever listened to the obscene screamings and carryings-ons that is the rule rather than the exception of tower life.

They further contend that such a screen on the balconies would not be an effective deterrent. Maybe not, but if it delayed a person it would give that person some time to reconsider and possibly change his mind.

It is possible that enmeshing these balconies is a poor idea and not worthy of the attention of the administration. This is a dubious point, but this is not the reason for my letter. The point is the callousness with which we all seem to respond with at the loss of a life. We must never forget our obligation to our fellow man. We must never forget the line in the Beatles' song Eleanor Rigby, "all the lonely people, where do they all come from?"

Do you feel that students should be restricted as to what they are allowed to display in their residence hall windows?

These questions are two of the most immediate concerns of the Student Senate at the present time. In an effort to have all members of the University community help to initiate legislation in these areas, the Senate has scheduled an Open Inquiry in Patterson House Lounge tonight at 8:00 P.M.

Prove Yourself

To the Editor:

In response to the letter of Friday, Oct. 6 regarding freshman sign-out, I find it essential to clarify the numerous misconceptions brought forth.

The letter asks "why this policy was not publicized" I can only say that for two years the new sign-in sign-out procedure was under study in Women's Affairs, which is hopefully represented by every Women's dormitory on campus.

A letter was sent out to each house informing the "that they should have a representative of Women's Affairs and if they chose not to have one then the fault lied with them and they could not complain. More than this, coffee hours were held at which this policy was brought up and discussed.

Each Area Coordinator was approached on the subject and made many modifications—finally agreeing on it unanimously. The subject was then voted upon by the Student Senate which has at least one Senator from each dorm and passed unanimously. It then went to the Student Life committee where it was further discussed and passed once again unanimously. Finally, Dean of Students Wililam Field okayed the procedure.

Women's Affairs held a poll in each Women's Hall last year where it asked questions about the sign-out procedure and 90% of the women felt that last year's policy was a failure, and that a new one had to be found and instituted. Certainly then, this policy was not decided upon by a few select students, but rather by a large and diverse sampling of campus.

The question was also raised that the new system is regressing back to the archaic rules of the not too distant past. But is it really?

With the old procedure every freshman woman was required to sign in every night whether she left the Dorm or not. And any girl who did not sign in was called down at curfew. With the new procedure we have put faith in the freshman women. If she choses to remain in the dorm for the evening she need not sign in. It is an accepted fact she is in the dorm.

Certainly then, this does not invalidate the work of the University Reform Committee rather it enhances the ideas of the Committee.

Another reason for instituting the new system is that the past system was inconsistent. On one hand, the freshman girl was checked on every night and in essence treated as if she were ten years old—not a mature woman who is responsible.

Then sophomore year we tell her "now you have no curfew, you are on your own". It is moving from one end of the spectrum to the totally opposite end of the spectrum with no intermediate step. With the new system we are saying "the card each week is yours. It is your duty to use it properly and abide by all the rules. No one will check on you every night. Prove yourself and sophomore year you will be given the full rights of an upperclassman woman"—the intermediate step.

On Tuesday night Oct. 17th at 6:30 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom a caucus will be held on freshman sign-out. Heads of Residence, Area Coordinators and all Women Residences are urged to attend and air their views.

Gena Corea: "I'm Dropping Out"

I've decided that when college begins to interfere with your education, it's time to leave. But I hate to leave quietly and so I want to explain to you why I am leaving.

Let me give you some background in the form of a letter I wrote to a friend at the end of the summer. Please be patient because I have something to say.

In this letter I wrote: "Something is definitely happening to me. I've been living intensely lately and sometimes it frightens me. I don't see things the same way anymore. Everything and everyone amaze me. Nothing is common or ordinary."

All Around Me . . .

I am aware of all the things that are acting on my senses. When I was in New York, I was aware of the feel of my shoes touching the pavement, the smell of the fruit in the open markets, the sound of the traffic, fragments of conversation as people walked by.

Vivid colors. Wrinkled faces. Net stockings and fat ladies and cartoon people.

Marshall McLuhan's book, "Understanding Media" has had a great deal of influence on me. I am very much aware of the impact that the electronic age has on me.

The blinking lights, the pictures that flash on and off, the radio advertisements with their sound effects.

McLuhan has made me look again at things I've always assumed were part of the given world. Words, for example. Printing.

Suddenly I look again at words and see that they're not the end-all and be-all of experience. So many other things act on our senses. Sounds. Blinking lights. Words are not enough to get the message across. So I'm now suspicous of what used to be a very important part of my life.

In New York, we rode on the subway one night. Since we were in the first car, I got up and stood at the front so that I could see the tunnel as we went through it. The driver asked me if this was the first time I had ever been on the subway.

I laughed and said no, I had been on the subway hundreds of times but each ride was an enriching new experience. I said it in a joking way, but I was half serious.

The Roar of the Train

I told him that he should pretend that he was a little kid and that this was his first subway ride. Then he would realize how exciting it really was.

The rear of the train as it whooshes into the station, the feel of the wind on your face as part of the train goes by you. Then it screeches to a stop and you get in.

From then on, it's like being on a ride in an amusement park. It's like a roller coaster when it goes fast and when it goes through a tunnel, it has everything but the ghosts. And when you pass another train, it's like something out of a dream—very surrealistic.

This new world I've been feeling is amazing and I'm very happy about it. But there's a fear there too.

Most of all, I fear death.

We rode on the Staten Island ferry. I stood at the bow and I loved the feel of the strong wind trying to push me over and I loved the sound of the waves hitting the boat and I loved the darkness and the lights and the tall buildings that slowly became three dimensional as the boat came closer to land.

And I Saw Him

And when the boat docked and we were waiting for them to put the ramp down, I looked at one of the workers who was standing on the dock. And I saw him in a way that I will never be able to explain to anyone.

And I didn't want to die.

I will never have enough of living. I will never be ready to leave the wind and the waves and the darkness and the lights and the tall buildings that men like that man on the dock built.

You see, I love this new world I'm sensing and feeling. What is frightening is that I'm alone and it's so different that it's unsettling sometimes.

It's unsettling too because for the first time, I ask why? Why this beautiful world? A world you can smell and touch and see and hear.

And what's with Man? He's so unbelievable. Look what he's done to the earth. His mark is everywhere.

And what's with dreams and the thought process? It's all too much for me to grasp.

I'm really going to burst—not only because of the things I'm experiencing, but because of all the things I'm longing to experience.

Not People Die

I want to fly all around the world in one flight to get an over-all view of the whole world. Then I want to go all around the world on the ground and walk in many cities and look into many faces and hear the voices of many people.

There are so many questions I must ask these people before they die because I believe what Yevtoshenko wrote: "Not people die, but worlds die in them."

And I've got to understand. Not only understand, but sense, feel, because my brain isn't enough. I have to live with my whole body.

And there are so many books I have to read and not just once.

School will begin soon and that's going to interfere with my studying."

That's how I felt at the end of the summer. I was alive and I was aware of it. I found life exhilarating and I wanted to understand it. There was so much I wanted to know. I was anxious to study.

But school did begin and school did interfere with my studying.

I had a lot of new ideas (which I couldn't begin to go into here) and I was very excited about them. I thirsted with curiosity and I was not allowed to drink.

I wanted to explore and I was forced to follow a syllabus. I was exploding with ideas and I had to sit down each night and memorize a language I had no desire or need to learn.

To get a degree.

The Scared Little Man

I remembered what A. S. Neil had written in his book, Summerhill:

> You cannot make children learn music or anything else without to some degree converting them into will-less adults. You fashion them into acceptors of the status quo—a good thing for a society that needs obedient sitters at dreary desks, standers in shops, mechanical catchers of the 8:30 suburban train—a society, in short, that is carried on the shabby shoulders of the scared little man—the scared-to-death conformist.

I had bucked at the requirement system before. Two years ago I spent three months researching an article on requirements for "Spectrum". In that article, I quoted from Alfred Whitehead's book, The Aims of Education:

> This overhaste to impart mere knowledge defeats itself. The human mind rejects knowledge imparted in this way. The craving for expansion, for activity, inherent in youth is disgusted by a dry imposition of disciplined knowledge . . . I have been struck by the paralysis of thought induced in pupils by the aimless accumulation of precise knowledge, inert and unutilized.

Did anyone read this?

Then last May, I wrote a letter to the head of the Russian department explaining why I didn't want to take Russian. He said he agreed with me but he had no power. Go to the Assistant Provost.

I went to the Assistant Provost. This was not under his jurisdiction. See the Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

I was not allowed to see him. I was allowed to speak with one of the assistant deans, Dean H. Duncan Rollason.

Home Economics?

He could not refute my arguments against my studying a language. I could refute his arguments(?) for studying it. So he said, "Why don't you switch into the department of home economics? They don't have a language requirement there."

I wrote to Dean Wagner. He wrote back: "A foreign language requirement is a part of the tradition of liberal education and the Bachelor of Arts degree. There have always been students who have disliked foreign language. A hundred years ago they struggled with Latin and Greek; today it is other languages."

That's a very interesting historical fact. It's not a reason. I ask why we must struggle with languages. And no one answers.

"The fact remains, Miss Corea, that this is a regulation of the College of Arts and Sciences", Dean Rollason said to me.

So this year, I continued in my frustrated efforts to learn. Then I interviewed Dr. Ryan Drum. He articulated a lot of things that I have been feeling. I, too, found learning a pleasure.

But I found the university perverting learning into a painful chore. And I knew that it was stifling and I knew that it was wrong and I also knew that it would never change.

How long do you think Dr. Drum will last here? He's a dangerous man. He thinks and he speaks.

Maybe in a couple of years the students will give him the Distinguished Teacher's Award and the Administration will give him his traveling papers.

Does anyone remember DellaGrotte?

See, Cry and Leave

I don't see much hope that students will change this system. There are students like me who get tired. They see, cry and leave.

And there are others who are the future bureaucrats of America. They are too concerned with going through the proper channels. And the proper channels are mazes.

Where is the University Reform Committee?

To Dean Rollason: I have no regrets about not switching into home economics in order to get a degree. I didn't come here to get a degree, I came here to learn. You didn't understand that.

To those who remain: Learn your attitudes well. Learn the right words: Maturity and Responsibility. (Euphemisms for obedience?) Grow up absurd. Never question your miseducation.

Talk in fog-bound three-syllable words—the language of inaction. Be an anti-life adult. Good luck in this war and best of luck in the next.

I'm dropping out. I want no part of your world.

French Corridors Present . . .

Le Treteau de Paris, professional theatre company annually touring North America, will perform Alain Rene Lesage's 18th century social satire, "Turcaret", Thursday, Oct. 19, at 8 p.m. at the Amherst Regional High School Auditorium, sponsored by the University of Massachusetts French Corridors.

"Turcaret" has been termed an 18th century comedy of manners whose characters are as modern as today. The plot concerns a Monsieur Turcaret, banker-financier posing as a widower, and the beautiful but penniless widow, the Baroness, who is determined to dupe him out of his fortune to finance her own romance with the gambler and establish her own social security. The two are properly outwitted by the Chevalier's valet, Frontin, and his lovely accomplice, the maid Lisette.

Le Treteau de Paris is the only professional French - speaking theatre to tour North America annually. The Treteau is sponsored each year by the French government with patronage of Mr. Edouard Morot-Sir, cultural counselor to the French Embassy.

Tickets for "Turcaret" are on sale at the UMass Student Union ticket office. All seats are reserved. Mail orders should be sent to Ticket Office, Student Union, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Mass. 01003.

TWO CRAFTY SERVANTS, Dominique Vilar as the maid Marine and Jean-Jaques Lagarde as Frontin the valet, argue about the comic misadventures of their masters in the 18th century French comedy "Turcaret".

Farquhar Text Goes On Sale Here

"Economic Geology in Massachusetts," compiled and edited by Dr. O. C. Farquhar of the University of Massachusetts department of geology and published by the University's Graduate School, is now available from the Student Union bookstore.

The 614-page volume with about 175 illustrations contains over 60 papers presented at a conference on Economic Geology held on the UMass campus in January 1966. The conference was concerned with geologic solutions to environmental problems in Massachusetts.

The papers are grouped in eight sections. Major topics include the geology of the Cape Cod National Seashore, a survey of the Greater Boston urban geology project and several on the water resources of Massachusetts.

Copies of the book may be ordered from the University Store.

Sen. Edward Kennedy Says, 'Take Care of Home First'

NEWTON, Mass. (AP) — Problems of the ghetto should take priority over the Vietnam war, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy said last night.

The nation's "most urgent" task is "to build a bridge of trust between those who are poor and live in the ghetto, and those who enjoy the full advantages of this great country," he said.

Kennedy told the Newton Democratic City Committee that the pervading issue of Vietnam has created a "growing cynicism in our nation."

The poor who riot, youth who "march and question the very institutions of our society," and "members of Congress who debate commitments loosely made," are all affected by this cynicism, Kennedy said.

Some American fighting men and civilian officials in Vietnam "in some instances have freely professed to lack a cause worth giving their lives for," he said. The United States lacks the "will", Kennedy said, "not the money," to solve urban problems.

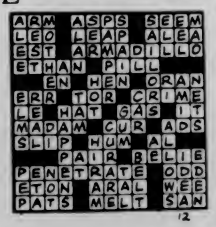
"We hear we must hold up these programs for Vietnam. I do not agree. We have an obligation to the security and opportunity of our people in the United States," he said.

"It would be a national tragedy if a Negro boy, or a white boy, who bravely risks his life in Vietnam, must come back to this country and cannot find the opportunity for which he fought," Kennedy added.

The Democratic senator termed "most distressing" the testimony he has heard in hearings on the civilian casualty problem in Vietnam.

While the war absorbs $24 billion annually, he said, less than $50 million has been set aside to care for the 150,000 civilian casualties each year.

Next year's presidential election "will be decided by the 14½ million people who have never before voted for a president," he told the group.



"We are about to be judged by the standards of the most talented, most involved, most idealistic generation America has ever seen," he said.

A FUNNY JOB

COLEORTON, England (AP) — Bill Capenor's new chore as caretaker in the National Coal Board office is watering a carpet. The makers said the carpet should be watered daily for three months to make it bed down properly and Bill says: "It's one of the funniest jobs I ever had to do. It's the manufacturer's idea, not ours. Most people think it's rather a joke."

'Our Best vs. Their Best'

World Series Enters Seventh Game

BOSTON (AP) — "The World Series is going to end the way it should—our best against their best."

That was Boston slugger Carl Yastrzemski's first comment Wednesday after he collected three hits in helping the Red Sox to an 8-0 victory, setting up a seventh and deciding showdown with the St. Louis Cardinals on Thursday.

"We're going against the best in Bob Gibson and win or lose that's the way to go against a champion," Yastrzemski said. "Of course, we're going with our best in Jim Lonborg. All we have to do is score one more run than them.

"All season long we've had our backs against the wall. Now we've rebounded once again, into a seventh game of the World Series. It's amazing. These are a great bunch of young guys. They have great desire."

Yastrzemski, who tied the Series record for the most home runs in six games by hitting his third in the fourth, admitted he was going for the long ball as he went to the plate.

"We were behind 2-1 and all I wanted to do was tie the score," Yaz said. "Then Reggie Smith and Rico Petrocelli came through later in the inning."

Boston Manager Dick Williams gambled and won once again in starting rookie right-hander Gary Waslewski, who had a 2-2 record in eight starts with Boston during the season.

"I've gone out on a limb a few times this year and we've been very fortunate," Williams said. "Second guess is the name of the game. 'Was' did a heck of a job. I'm only sorry he couldn't get the victory. He gave me all he could as long as he could."

The 26-year-old Wasiewski, whose last start was Sept. 3 for Toronto against Syracuse in the International League, was a last minute addition to the Red Sox' Series roster and a surprise starter.

"I wish I could have done better," he said after allowing just two runs and four hits before tiring in the sixth while holding a 4-2 lead.

"I just ran out of gas," he added. "My arm went numb and I couldn't find the plate. I think it was just a little too long between starts. I am happy, though, because we won." Williams called the triumph "a team victory all the way."

"Just as we did in winning our last two from Minnesota for the pennant, we've bounced back again," he said. "Whew! This is fantastic. I haven't given a thought to Thursday's line-up. I just want to relax and savor this one for awhile."

Williams sent Lonborg home early to avoid the post-game rush on the Boston Clubhouse. Lonborg, a 22-game regular season winner with two World Series victories, planned to spend the night at a Boston hotel to get a good rest.

"We hope he can come back with two days of rest," Williams said. "He's not the type to get overly excited in any asignment. He'll give it everything he has."

The Red Sox shied from making predictions. They were just happy to be in the deciding game.

"We've just been playing to keep playing," summed up second baseman Mike A[illegible]. "Only a fool would make a prediction."

Cards' Line-up Intact For Decisive Seventh

BOSTON (AP)—"It's come down to a one-game Series." Manager Red Schoendienst had that comment as he sipped a cold drink and discussed Wednesday's 8-4 loss to Boston that evened the 1967 World Series at three games each.

The Redbird manager said he was surprised at the way Boston hitters pounded starter Dick Hughes. "Hughes got the ball up too much," Schoendienst said. "He's a low ball pitcher."

Hughes, who gave up five hits, four of them homers in 4 2-3 innings, added: "I really didn't feel like I had good stuff. I tried to work hard to make up for it."

Schoendienst said he probably will go with the same line-up for Thursday's seventh and deciding game. But, he added, he might make a couple of batting changes "but I won't decide on them until I come out here Thursday."

Lou Brock continued to be the Cardinal's big bat, getting two hits—including a seventh inning two-run homer that tied the game 4-4.

Brock was asked about a double by Boston's Joe Foy that bounced off the left field wall. "I tried for the ball," Brock said. "It just went over my glove."

"We didn't get here by playing safety first—I went for the ball and was throwing home to try to cut the run off," Brock said. A run scored and Foy went to third on the throw.

Curt Flood, the St. Louis centerfielder said he felt the Redbirds would come on strong after they tied the game 4-4 in the top of the seventh.

"I knew if we could hold them, we'd win it," Flood said. "I felt we were really going to get started in that inning."

Bob Gibson, the St. Louis right-hander who has two of the three Cardinal victories, said he was ready to pitch the seventh game.

"I just want to go out and do the job. Nervous? Maybe after the first game! But it's not so bad now," Gibson said.

The Cardinal fireballer will face Jim Lonborg, who has two of Boston's three victories. But Gibson will have had three days rest compared to Lonborg's two.

"It's that little something extra that wins a World Series," Gibson added.

FIRST RED BIRD RUN—Lou Brock of the St. Louis Cardinals dives head first into home plate as Boston Red Sox catcher Elston Howard attempts to tag him in the third inning of their sixth World Series game at Fenway Park yesterday.

Basketball Practice Opens On Monday

Second-year coach Jack Leaman opens basketball practice at the Cage Monday night, and he'll greet a total of two returning lettermen but a wealth of talented newcomers.

The Redmen play their first game Dec. 2 against New Hampshire at the Cage.

UMass finished the 1966-67 season with an 11-14 record. The Redmen were hot on the trail of the Yankee Conference title until they lost a one-point decision to Connecticut late in the season.

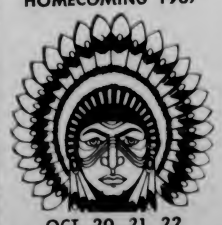
Five of last year's losses were decided by five points or less, and nine of the losses were to teams that later competed in post-season tournaments.

Two of the squad's outstanding players are back. Captain Bill Tindall was the first junior ever to make the first team in the All-College Tournament in Oklahoma City, and was named to the All-Yankee Conference squad. Junior Joe DiSarcina also returns after a season in which he broke the UMass assist record.

Also returning are seniors Greg Rand, Gary Gasperack, Jim Girotti and Rich Perkins, along with juniors Ron Nowakowski, Pete Gayeska, and John Schockro, who missed all last season with a broken jaw.

Sophomore strength will come from Jack Gallagher, Ray Ellerbrook and Dick Samuelson, three prize prospects from last year's frosh.

The bulwark of last season, Tim Edwards, will be conspicuously absent under the boards, but Leaman hopes that Jim Sulesky, a 6'5 junior college transfer, will fill Tim's shoes. If Sulesky or the 6'9 Gayeska can make it at center, Tindall will remain in the more suitable forward slot.



JACK LEAMAN

Leaman considers the UMass schedule one of the roughest in the country, although it is perhaps not quite so difficult as last year's

While Rhode Island will probably be a heavy favorite to take the Conference crown this winter, Leaman sounds a terse warning to the Redmen's foes: "The team that makes the fewest mistakes will be the winner. We plan on making no mistakes."

Sox Pin Hopes on Lonborg's Right Arm

Cardiac Kids Clobber Cardinals, 8-4, with HR Barrage

Waslewski said he just "ran out of gas" because he hadn't started a game since Sept. 3 for Toronto against Syracuse.

Schoendienst said he couldn't understand how they ripped Hughes like they did. "But he kept everything up when he usually keeps the ball down."

"I have to feel GIBSON has the advantage over LONBORG," said RED, "with 3 games rest to two." He said he probably would use the same line-up but might change the order.

Asked if he was surprised with the Sox's comeback, Schoendienst replied, "No, I said all along it would go six or seven games."

Schoendienst said he was counting on Gibson to go all the way in the 7th but, if he didn't he would have Briles and Carlton ready.

Petrillo's Roll-outs Threaten Redmen

By GLENN BRIERE
Assistant Sports Editor

UMass has never beaten Connecticut in basketball at Storrs Field House. But adjacent to the field house is Memorial Stadium, the site of Saturday's UMass-UConn football game, and the Huskies have a score of their own to settle.

It seems that Connecticut has not beaten the Redmen in football for the last six years, which happens to be how long Vic Fusia has been football coach at UMass.

Beating Fusia will not be all they'll be shooting for. UConn also has its eyes on the Yankee Conference Beanpot, which it hasn't won since 1960. As a matter of fact, both teams will be going into this game with 1.0 Conference marks, so the outcome could have a lot to say about the championship.

Connecticut is improved all-around, with the most marked improvement on offense. Last year the Huskies were shut out three times, but this year's offense should perk up with some fine runners and a semblance of a passing attack.

The Huskies opened up the season by collaring Little All-American halfback Bob Mitchell and beating highly-rated Vermont, 17-6. Then last week, UConn led Yale going into the fourth quarter when the Elis scored twice to win, 14-6.

Junior Pete Petrillo nailed down the quarterback job with a fine performance against Vermont and his improvement is roughly analogous to that of the entire UConn offense. He leads the team in both passing and rushing, with a 3.4 average on the ground and a 12-for-22 mark in pass completions. The 182-pounder has shown improvement particularly in passing. The back-up quarterback, senior Paul Gruner, is a slightly better passer and may be used if the situation demands.

Leading the offensive backs is Mike Boryczewski, a 6'2, 210-pound junior A powerful runner, Boryczewski switched from fullback to halfback in spring practice and has been a most pleasant surprise for Coach John Toner.

Sophomore John Crisp won the wingback job and has been outstanding. The 6'4, 195-pounder from Lexington, Mass., is the team's leading pass receiver with 11 receptions for 144 yards and an average of 13.1.

The fullback is Jim DeWitt, a 5'11, 185-pound junior whose tremendous blocking ability makes him an invaluable asset to the backfield. He's not a bad rusher either, as shown by his two-game mark of 89 yards for a 6.4 average. Others who should see action in the backfield are Bill DiYeso and John Krot

UConn's tight end, Don Fischer, has a history of injuries and is just returning this week from a pre-season injury. However, if he stays healthy, the 6'3, 195-pound senior will be a fine receiver. Junior George Kupfrian is a much-improved performer at split end.

The offensive line is strong, anchored by tackles Steve Dixon and Stan Rajczewski. Dixon, a 240-pound senior, was converted from defensive tackle last spring, and 220-pound junior Racjzewski is a holdover from last year's line.

The best of the guards is also one of the best placekickers in the nation. Co-captain Roy Lawrence, a 195-pound senior, kicked the longest field goal in New England last year, a 50-yarder against Maine. UMass fans will also remember that he tried a 51-yarder against the Redmen that hit the crossbar.

The other guard is Al DeBenedictis, a senior whose small size (5'9, 185) is made up for in speed. He is exceptional on a roll-out offense such as Connecticut's.

The center is a returnee from last year. Junior Ben DeGenova (6'0, 217) won the position towards the end of last season through his strength and improved agility.

UConn's defense was good last year and figures to be even better this fall. However, All-Yankee Conference end Nick Turco is hurt and will not see action Saturday. Jim Solomon, a 210-pound senior, will take his place. The other defensive end, Jeann White, had played the spot for two years and is still improving

Both defensive tackles are inexperienced but both have a lot of potential. George Koller, a 6'2, 230-pound junior, won the position with a great spring practice, and 210-pound soph Tony Casarella is counted upon by Toner to be outstanding.

UConn, instead of the normal five-man defensive line, plays a six-man wall so the middle guard is replaced by two guards. One of these, senior Steve Smith, is a two-year letterman although this is his first season at defensive guard. He was switched there from linebacker and has done well.

The other defensive guard is Al Cummings, a 6'1, 203-pound junior. He played the position last year on a regular basis.

A standout at linebacker is co-captain Mark Malek. A 205-pound junior, Malek has lettered for two years. The other linebacker is Henry Palasek, a senior who is returning after a year's layoff.

In the defensive backfield, the Huskies boast experience at the two halfback spots and inexperience at safety. Cornerback Ron Grinage, a senior, broke into the lineup after the first three games last year and has been a regular since. He led the team in interceptions in 1966.

The other defensive halfback, senior Vin Iovino, is a "thinking man's" cornerback and should be a steadying influence on the defensive secondary. Speedster Vic Canzani, a junior who saw little action last year, won the safety spot during pre-season practices this year and figures to stay there.

METAWAMPE'S GRID PICKS

It's not because he's trying to avoid the Syndicate or that he suffers from swelled head that the Stonefaced Soothsayer has donned sunglasses. It's just that he has been nearly blinded by divine revelation.

Downtrodden by a sub-par performance the week before, it was a brooding and introspective Metawampe that took to expounding couplets of rhymed iambic quadrameter last week. And behold, the Muse of Verse rewarded him with a 38-10 mark.

Students Arrested For Drunkenness

Say Rights Denied In False Arrest

By RON LABRECQUE
News Editor

"We believe we were falsely arrested. We were neither informed of our constitutional rights nor offered the opportunity to make a phone call." Stanley M. Levco and Chester S. Weinerman made these charges while speaking of their arrest by Amherst Police outside of the Village Inn at 12:15 a.m. last Friday.

The two UMass seniors were arraigned in Northampton District Court Friday morning on charges of Drunkenness. Weinerman, Editor-in-Chief of the Daily Collegian, said that "we entered a plea of not guilty because we simply were not even slightly intoxicated."

Levco stated that no effort was made by the Amherst Police Department to determine in any medical or scientific fashion their state of inebriation. Commented Levco: "We were given no sobriety test of any sort."

Weinerman described the actual arrest, stating that "we were escorted to the Police car, brought to the station, booked and placed in cells." He added that "at no time were we informed of any of our legal rights."

The two students stated they felt that their arrest was not an "isolated incident".

Commenting on the condition of the cell itself, Weinerman said that its state was "deplorable." He added that he was forced to share a cell meant to be occupied by only one person. Levco added that proper bedding in the form of a blanket wasn't afforded him.

Levco and Weinerman presented their case to the Daily Collegian Board of Editor's last night, where they were promised support by that group. Said Managing Editor Jack Dean, "We can't let this violation of constitutional rights go unchallenged". Dean expressed a hope that any other students who may have had similar experiences will contact the Daily Collegian or the Student Senate.

James G. Collins, President of the Student Senate, who was present at the time of the arrest stated that he felt "the arresting procedure was rather abrupt and the police neither endeavored to ascertain the situation of the students nor follow just procedure."

He added that "from my point of view the arresting procedure and subsequent denial of rights including not being directly informed of the charges, not being offered a phone call and most importantly not being administered a sobriety test, seems to imply that a level of justice and protection for the individual is not being extended to students."

Amherst Police Chief Francis E. Hart was contacted by the Daily Collegian this morning. He commented on the action being taken by Levco and Weinerman in the Daily Collegian by saying that it was "a free country and a free press". He did not offer any specific comment concerning the actual arrest.

Case Continued To Friday

Two UMass students were arrested by Amherst Police outside of Drake's Village Inn shortly after midnight last Friday.

Arraigned in Northampton District Court Friday morning on charges of drunkeness were Stanley M. Levco '68 and Chester S. Weinerman '68, Editor-in-Chief of the Daily Collegian. The two entered a plea of not guilty and were released on personal recognizance.

The case has been continued to Friday October 20. Present at the time of the arrest were James Collins, President of the Student Senate and Frances Boronski, Student Senate Vice-President.

Frank L. Boyden Retires As Deerfield Headmaster

DEERFIELD, Mass.—Frank Learoyd Boyden, dean of American Headmasters and one of the most widely respected and beloved figures in education, will retire in June 1968 after 66 years as Headmaster of Deerfield Academy, Deerfield, Mass. This is a record of service unparalleled by any other educational figure.

In making the announcement the Deerfield Trustees have named a committee of Parents and alumni trustees to choose his successor.

Chairman of the Committee is the Hon. John J. McCloy of New York, former U.S. High Commissioner to Germany. Others are Harry W. Knight, Darien, Conn.; Dean Mathey, Princeton, N. J.; Robert W. Wilson, Washington, D.C.; Charles N. Stoddard, Jr., Greenfield, Mass.; Mr. Boyden; and Henry N. Flynt, Greenwich, Conn., Pres. of the Board of Trustees.

FRANK L. BOYDEN

Deerfield Academy was chartered in 1797 by Samuel Adams, then Gov. of the Commonwealth of Mass. Mr. Boyden assumed the position of Headmaster after his graduation from Amherst Coll. in 1902. Under his leadership Deerfield has developed from a small New England academy to a college prep. boarding school of national standing.

The quality of education, the strength of the faculty, and the charm of its beautiful buildings are noteworthy tributes to Mr. Boyden's ability. Unique features of the school are the human qualities engendered by Mr. Boyden and his wife, Helen Childs Boyden—a chem. teacher of wide reputation—and the close ties between parents, alumni, students and faculty.

Mr. Boyden was re-elected last January to his second term as Chairman of the University.

'Oh Dad, Poor Dad' To Open Oct. 18

Frenzied activity and exotic sounds in the region of Bowker Auditorium mean that the opening night of "Oh Dad, Poor Dad, Mama's Hung you in the Closet and I'm Feelin' So Sad" is close at hand. Bowker Auditorium is the place beginning Wednesday through Saturday at 8:30 p.m.

A noisy pirhana fish whose diet is cats, two Venus fly traps that growl and grow onstage, doors and furniture that move when they have a mind to, and a very intrusive corpse are a few of the the madcap devices that make Oh Dad a riotous evening of theatre.

Carolyn Miller '68, plays the role of Madame Rosepettle, the domineering, vivacious Mom who spreads discord through the entire show. Michael Prusky '68, plays her son Jonathan, a shy, stuttering mess of a young man who spends his life among fantastic collections of coins, books and stamps.

Rosalie, the wanton seductress who baby-sits next door and determines to crack Jonathan's inhibitions toward love-making, is played by grad student Gail Herman. Bill Anderson, also a grad student, portrays Commodore Roseabove, an aging British playboy who falls victim to the overpowering personality of Madame Rosepettle.

A band of lusty but somewhat clumsy bellboys, and of course Poor Dad himself, complete the roster of madcap characters.

In Oh Dad, Poor Dad playwright Arthur Kopit has molded traditional farce into exciting new forms and overlaid it with pregnant dialogue that tantalizes the audience through non-sequiturs and contradictory statements. While it springs from traditional comedy, the form and spirit of the play are clearly with the theatre of the absurd.

Tickets to the play and season subscription book are available at the Bowker Auditorium box office (545-2149), open daily 9-5.

Carolyn Miller and Bill Anderson rehearse a scene from Oh Dad, Poor Dad, opening at Bowker Auditorium Wednesday, Oct. 18.

Cadet Bernard M. Armata, a freshman from 1st Platoon, B Company, has been chosen as the outstanding cadet of the week in the Army ROTC Brigade.
In a competition involving nearly two hundred other freshmen, Cadet Armata finished number one. The bases for his selection were military appearance, and knowledge and understanding of drill.

Swiss Pianist to Perform For Distinguished Visitors

Swiss pianist Fernande Kaeser will perform at the University of Massachusetts in a public program sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program at 8 p.m. tomorrow in Bartlett Auditorium.

Miss Kaeser, who has been hailed by European music critics as a "great artist" whose "technique is finished to perfection," began her musical studies at the age of seven at the Institut de Ribaupierre of Vevey. In 1949 she graduated with highest honors from the Conservatoire of Geneva where she had studied under the late Dinu Lipatti. Later she studied with Paolo Denza in Naples and Bruno Seidlhofer in Vienna.

She was the only prize winner for piano at the International Music Competition of Geneva in 1951. Three years later, she won first prize at the International Music Competition of Munich. She is the only Swiss pianist who was ever awarded this honor.

Miss Kaeser has performed widely in concert and radio with the greatest European orchestras including the London Philharmonic Orchestra and the Orchestre de la Suisse Romande. She has also made two national concert tours for the Jeunesses Musicales of Switzerland.

Her concert on Tuesday evening will feature a series of sonatas by composers Galuppi, Scarlatti, Pampni, Soler, Beethoven and Prokofiev. She will also perform Mozart's "Variations on a Minuet," Ravel's Jeux d'eau" and Debussy's "Three Preludes."

Democratic Governors Endorse Administration in Vietnam

NEW YORK (AP) — Twenty Democratic governors Sunday endorsed President Johnson's conduct of the war in Vietnam, and Texan John Connally said he hopes Republican state executives will join in that stand.

But Michigan Gov. George Romney said Johnson's policy confronts the United States with "a bleak outlook" in Southeast Asia.

Another Republican, Ronald Reagan of California, said the United States may be doing "much better in the war than we're being told."

The Democratic declaration, unanimously approved at a three-hour caucus, seemed an effort to avert any outbreak of Vietnam policy criticism at the 59th National Governors Conference. Some 45 governors sail Monday on an eight-day conference cruise to the Virgin Islands.

Iowa Gov. Harold Hughes, chairman of the Democratic governors, said the party's state executives had voted to reaffirm an endorsement of Vietnam policy they adopted in St. Louis on July 1.

"The Democrats have already taken their position," Connally said. "I would hope that this would be a resolution basically supported by all of the governors of both parties."

Hughes said he knows of no governor in either party who would not support the basic U.S. position in Vietnam.

The Iowa governor said the Democrats also discussed Johnson's proposed 10 per cent income tax surcharge. He said they generally agreed that a tax hike is necessary and also supported cuts in the federal budget.

He added that they took no formal vote on that question. Connally said, however, that the governors do not want budget trimming moves aimed at the program of federal aid for highway construction.

Hughes said he hoped the seaborne governors' conference will be a working session and not marked by attempts to use the forum as a launching platform for presidential campaigns.

Opera Company Announces Fund Raising Event

Jacqueline Kennedy will be Chairman of the Committee for the Venetian Ball, a fund-raising event for Sarah Cadwell's Opera Company of Boston, to be held on January 12 at the Somerset Hotel, Boston.

Many opera lovers and dignitaries from across the country are expected to attend this masked ball which celebrates the tenth anniversary of the Opera Company. This will also be a tribute to Miss Sarah Caldwell who, in ten short years, has become known as one of the greatest producers and directors of opera in the world.

She has produced and staged the three productions currently touring as the American National Opera Company, Falstaff, Lulu and Tosca, which are being acclaimed across the country, and will be presented in Boston beginning November 14 with the production of Falstaff at the Back Bay Theatre. "Carmen" with Marilyn Horne, and Joan Sutherland in an opera to be announced, will also be a part of the series for subscribers to the Opera Company of Boston.

Quaker Action Committee Plans To Send Supplies to Vietnam

The Amherst Area Quaker Action Committee is planning a second crossing into Canada on November 11, to bring cash gifts which will be used to purchase medical supplies for all victims of the Vietnam War.

The Canadian Friends Service Committee, which will receive the funds, purchases the medical supplies from Canadian drug manufacturers, who offer them at cost. The supplies are forwarded to the Red Cross of North Vietnam, South Vietnam, and the National Liberation Front.

At the first witness on May 27, eighty Quakers and friends from the Amherst area crossed into Canada at Derby Line, Vermont, with gifts totaling $3000. The witness was one of several, including crossings in New York, Michigan, and Washington. Giving medical aid in this way is considered by the Treasury Department to be illegal under the provisions of the Trading with the Enemy Act, although for two years the government did grant licenses to do so.

Marion Hambleton, a spokesman for the group, explained, "We are proceeding in the faith that the spirit of giving to all victims of the war may directly help to relieve suffering and ultimately help to dissolve hostilities. Our action is based on the conviction that 'no man is an enemy,' that all men are brothers."

Fund raising is now in process. Amherst area members of the Committee include Mary and David Clark, Leone A. Barron, Marion S. Hambleton, and Gertrude Weir. Participating from nearby communities are Jane and Milton Mayer (Deerfield), Gilbert Wieland (Holyoke), Michael Rice (Hatfield), Allison K. Kaufhold (Gill), Lois and Marshall Smith (Haydenville), and Alice Scheffey (Williamstown).

'Readathon' Is Underway At Webster

By TERRY LEE
Swift Staff Reporter

The traditional Webster Dictionary Reading Marathon began its third year last night on the word "heavy".

This year's marathon differs from previous ones held in Webster House. While the previous readings had been held during Webster Week—usually in April—this one falls on the birthday of Noah Webster, American lexicographer and Webster's namesake.

Past readings had been open to Webster upperclassmen. This one will be left to the freshmen—97 of them.

Each man will read aloud in half-hour shifts the mammoth Merriam-Webster Second Unabridged Dictionary, a gift from the Merriam Company of Springfield. The men will read until 6 p.m. Wednesday.

The number of pages read aloud will be held as a record for future freshmen and upperclassmen to beat.

A raffle of 25c per chance to guess the word on which the marathon will end has been set up. Two $10 prizes are to be given to the two persons whose guesses come closest to the magic word. The rest of the proceeds will be sent to the Jimmy Fund.

The marathon is expected to be covered by WHYN-TV of Springfield, the Merriam Public Relations Department, and the University News Bureau.

Broadway Director Is Named For Operetta Guild Production

You may have seen a tall lanky man carrying a black briefcase, and speaking with a pronounced Southern drawl around campus of late. He is Bob Buchanan, professional director of the Operetta Guild's fall production, "Once Upon a Mattress".

The production is scheduled for Nov. 3, 4, 10, 11 and 12 in Bowker Auditorium.

Born in Richmond, Va., he attended Richmond Professional Institute of the College of William and Mary, where he earned his Bachelor of Fine Arts in theater.

He was president of his student body, graduated with honors, won the best actor award in his senior year, and also captured his college newspaper award for best actor. Mr. Buchanan was the first undergraduate to direct a musical there — it was the "Boyfriend", and because of his success with it, he spent the next year and a half touring the South with it.

From there, he entered the University of Virginia to do graduate work in theater, where, incidentally, he directed "Mattress" in 1962. While there, he was the first graduate student to assume a directing position; he directed "Matchmaker". Impressed with Bob's direction of it, a musical collaborator offered him the opportunity to set the play to music. Unfortunately, while the work was still in its very early stages, Mr. Buchanan's collaborator was killed in a plane crash and the show had to be terminated. This was in 1961, and a few years later, "Matchmaker" became the famed David Merrick musical, "Hello, Dolly".

He then worked his first summer stock in Calumet, Mich. at the Keweenah Musical Playhouse directing 10 musicals, and the following summer he was directing in Maine at the Arundel Opera Theater, where he did eight musicals and two operas. With such successes behind him, he finally made the big move to New York, where he studied at the H. B. Studios.

During the past few years, since he has been in New York, he has worked in off-Broadway theater box offices and as house manager in addition to a busy schedule of directing jobs. At this time, he himself was cast in an off-Broadway production of "View From the Bridge".

He has also had success working with children's shows. In Virginia, he did "Oklahoma" with a cast of children between six and nine. He also worked with a professional children's touring company called the Merrymakers for one year.

BOB BUCHANAN

Last summer was an extremely hectic but enjoyable time for him. He directed for three different summer stock companies. Among the shows he did in one summer were "Gypsy", "Funny Girl", "South Pacific", "My Fair Lady", "Bye, Bye Birdie", and "L'il Abner". After completing his stay with these companies, on Sept. 10, he left for Europe next day. Returning to New York on Oct. 2, he arrived at University of Massachusetts the next day to hold auditions for the Guild's production of "Mattress".

Pan-Hellenic Council Sets Round Robins

By JOYCE ROTH
Staff Reporter

"Sorority life is better than ever!" is the spirited report from Myra Banner, President of the Pan-Hellenic Council. Myra enthusiastically outlined the plans for acquainting freshmen with the Greek system on campus:

"Our program to orient freshmen to various sororities and their campus locations will begin with Round Robins on Sunday, November 5. Groups of 20 freshmen will tour the houses between the hours of 12:30 and 5:30 p.m. under the guidance of Pan-Hellenic representatives.

A closer view of sororities will be provided by the four informal Open Houses planned for November 12 and 19 and December 3 and 17 These parties were initiated last year and their relaxed atmosphere made them a great success."

Although rush is a primary Pan-Hellenic activity, the Council also sponsors services to the university and community. Myra remarked that she is eagerly looking forward to the traditional Homecoming Mum Sale—"always very colorful and successful." She added, "This year the proceeds of the sale will be donated to a worthy cause."

In addition, she mentioned the UNICEF Christmas card sale, the active Pan-Hellenic participation in the northern educational service in Springfield, and possibilities of a fraternity-sorority "fund march" through campus, all funds to be donated to cancer research.

In response to a question concerning the individual and sorority, Myra made her views clear: "The overwhelming size of our rapidly growing campus causes many freshmen to find themselves in what may be termed 'crowded solitary confinement'! Sorority provides a means for the girl in Emily Dickinson to meet the girl in Crampton. Thus friendships span and unite the campus rather than just the corridor."

As a staunch advocate of the Greek system Myra prefers sorority living to dorm residence and states definite reasons: "The pride that a girl develops in her house, the social graciousness she acquires through the necessity of acting at once as hostess and representative of her house or campus, I believe, is an invaluable means of developing pride in herself and womanly qualities that will benefit her throughout life."

Viewpoint

Friday the 13th Rites

(Editor's Note: The following Viewpoint is a personal account of the arrested reported on page one. It is written by the two hardened defendents, Messrs. Levco and Weinerman.)

We want to make an issue out of this thing because we are quite sure that our situation is not unique. What happened on October 13th could not possibly be an isolated incident. We wonder how many UMass and Amherst students have been victimized by what we feel to be the crude and thoughtless law enforcement philosophy of the Amherst Police Department.

We had gone to the Drake shortly after 11:00 p.m. It was Chet's 21st birthday, and Stan wanted to buy him his first legal beer. Jim Collins and Frank Boronski, two of our close friends, came along for the brief celebration. We each had two beers, and left around 12:15. We had consumed the beers over the course of an hour, and none of us were at all intoxicated.

Our car was across the street from the Drake. As we came up the stairs from the Drake, we were all joking around. Chet skipped across the street, probably to show he was not feeling his age, and he waited for us from behind a tree. We then crossed the street, and Chet circled around the tree to avoid being discovered. Then he cracked a joke to Fran. Fran did not hear it, but Stan did, and he langhed.

Fran and Jim had already headed toward the car. As Chet went over to join Stan, he suddenly saw an Amherst Police car pull up.

Two policemen jumped out and pulled Chet into the police car. Another one grabbed Stan. Without a word, we drove away, leaving Jim and Fran stunned.

The only thing that was said in the car during the ride was: "How much have you been drinking?", to which we both answered, "A couple of beers."

When we got to the Amherst station, we were forcibly led into the station room, told to spread our legs apart and put our hands up on the counter. They took away our watches, belts, glasses, and wallets.

At no time did we offer any resistance. We thought that if we tried to tell them we were sober, they would only think us drunk. We did exactly as we were told at all times.

After the frisking, they forcibly led us into cells. We were not officially informed of the charge, of the bail or given any other constitutional right until 5:00 a.m. At no time were we questioned or given any kind of sobriety test.

Two other people were in jail with us; both of them appeared to be quite sober. One of them claimed he was denied the use of a phone three times, and was not able to get through his legally allotted call until dawn.

At 5:00 a.m. we were informed that we could post bail, but we'd only be free for four hours. At 7:00 a.m. they told us that we had a choice between either pleading "no lo contendre" which would in effect be admitting not guilty), or contesting the charge in court. The Sargeant on duty pointed out our relatively poor chances of winning our case (He told us that in all of his cases involving "drunkards", he'd never lost one decision).

We decided to go to court and plead not guilty.

We feel there is a principle behind this such that we would be betraying the very essence of a true education by ignoring that principle. We cannot believe that at the whim of a police officer's visual judgment, an innocent student can be arrested and almost assumed to be guilty, and the student not possessing any real recourse.

Arrests should be used against people who are jeopardizing the public safety, and not against helpless students. The autocratic power of a small-town police department does not give it the right to use its power irresponsibly or to ignore the futures of those with whom it deals.

We want to make a big enough issue out of it so that this kind of travesty will not happen again, so that the Amherst Police will reflect with care before they give a student a record that will be with him for his entire life.

'Death at an Early Age'

By ROGER BOUCHARD
Editorial Staff

"Death at an Early Age" is a book that must be read by all who profess even a slight interest in racial problems. For in it, Jonathan Kozol brings to light some serious failings in the administration of some Boston schools. His own experience of less than a year in an unnamed, largely Negro, primary school there was ended by his dismissal in the spring of 1965. The School Committee said that it had acted on the complaints of parents who disapproved of Kozol's method of teaching, which included the reading of Negro Langston Hughes' poem "Ballad of the Landlord" and selections from Robert Frost.

Outmoded textbooks and readers had forced the young teacher to resort to interesting and pertinent outside material which his delighted pupils eagerly imbibed. This parental disapproval was not the work of the many Negro parents who turned out to protest his dismissal.

For the short time that he was there, Mr. Kozol was able to witness conditions that might exist somewhere in the racially troubled Deep South but assuredly not in proper Boston! The rattan stick, he reports, is still an effective disciplinary tool in the public school "at times for no greater offense than for failing to show respect to the very same teachers who have been describing them as niggers . . ."

He also tells of "a 60-pound mentally ill fourth-grader being guarded by two men and whipped by a third for acts that are manifestly crazy." The deplorable situations that the author cites are sufficient indications that the system harboring such evils is ripe for reform.

Mr. Kozol aptly summarizes his opinion of the system in his statement: "Any Negro child who stole anything moveable out of any home or Boston schoolhouse would not have stolen back as much as has been stolen from him."

Ho Hum—Dr. Drum

To the Editor:

Why do most people fear a harmless garter snake? Why will these same people not think twice about walking dangerously near poison ivy leaves? Why do people flinch at the approach of a wasp yet disdainfully tamper with harmful toadstool mushrooms?

The answer, in simplified form, is that man is more sensitive to and identifies more readily with animals than with plants. It is for this reason that the students reacted more passionately to Dr. Drum's courageous slaying of a rat than to his previous destruction of some flowers. The fact that the rat was ugly and the flowers beautiful was irrelevant. The significance lies in the fact the rat was (note the past tense) an animal and the flowers were plantlife.

If the slain animal was a pedigree dog and the flowers halfwilted dandelions the more emotional reaction would have been, in this case, for the more beautiful dog. Again, beauty would have nothing to do with the intensity of the student response.

Yet the point of Dr. Drum's elaborate preparation was, as he asked his class: why was there no objection to killing beauty but a strong objection to killing an ugly rat? This question does not follow logically from his previous demonstration. Dr. Drum's experiment is invalid for that type of concluding question.

Dr. Drum, are you putting us on?

La Resistance

To the Editors:

On my way back to my room tonight, I noticed several sheets of paper lying forlornly in an obscure niche near our elevator, and, never having been one to look a gift horse in the mouth, I picked one up and read it on my way upstairs. It turned out to be one of the most interesting pieces of literature which I have read here on campus.

It is encouraging to realize that there exists a campus publication which is not under the administration's jurisdiction or necessarily restricted for fear of retaliation, as was the case of Yahoo.

All I can say is "Keep up the good work!", and, to quote the paper's illustrious authors, "Vive la resistance!"

Don't Censor Signs

To the Editor:

It appears that the University officials have pressed for a solution of a sign 'problem' they discovered this summer because a solution is obviously better from Amher- than from Boston.

In turn, a olution is so much more just from the Student Senate than from Whitmore Hall. And now, our senators are telling themselves that a solution would be even more righteous from the House Councils, than from the Senate Chambers.

A few senators who believe in the individual's freedom of expression are suggesting that the Senate pass a bill which condemns censorship of window displays. Other senators, who of course also believe in free expression, but with "but's" after it, feel some controls are necessary.

These senators believe that the most just censorship would come from the residence hall governments. If they do not assign the censorship duty to the dorms, they feel they will be passing the buck and selling out on the student, because the administration would have to censor if the students did not.

The 'problem' is that students here are so afraid of causing discomfort to the administration that they easily become over-zealous in enforcing dictums which squash their basic rights. I doubt if a less understanding censor could be found than the House Councils.

There are 546,976 four letter words.

People sometimes relate bad things to some combinations. Maybe the student has bad feelings to express? These bad things exist, do they not? Is not English a written language? Maybe they would not be as bad if people were not afraid to think about them.

I believe the individual should be free to express himself as he needs, and that he is responsible to other individuals for what he does. If a sign in my window bothers someone, I wish he would try to talk to me about it.

He might realize he should not have been so bothered, and I might realize that I really did not need to say what I said.

I urge the Student Senate not only to announce itself in full support of student free speech, but also to explicitly pledge its power and prestige against any legislative, administrative, or student attempts to usurp student independence and individual responsibility.

Noted Archivist To Lecture On "Florence Since The Floods"

By PAT PETOW
Editorial Chairman

The Five-College area will have an opportunity this week to hear a report on the progress of the restoration work in Florence since the November floods there last year, by a leader in the effort.

The noted Italian archivist, Dr. Roberto Abbondanza will be the guest of the UMass history department this Wednesday when he will speak on "Florence since the Floods" in the Student Union at 4:30 p.m.

The University is one of 18 stops for Abbondanza who started his lecture tour at Harvard and will complete it at the Berkeley campus of the University of California.

Abbondanza, now the Director of the State Archives of Perugia, was formerly Archivist at the State Archives in Florence where the loss of a number of documents was suffered last year. He has been instrumental in the preservation of Florentine manuscripts and documents since the floods, according to Associate Professor Vincent Ilardi, the renaissance-reformation specialist of the UMass history department.

Abbondanza has moved some of the damaged Florentine holdings to his archives at Perugia, Ilardi told the Daily Collegian. The floods saw a great number of books and manuscripts in the collection of the national library in Florence destroyed along with the card catalogue of that library.

But in the massive international effort which has been made during the past year to restore much of the historical and art work Ilardi called the role of Abbondanza inestimable.

The Perugian archivist is known for his articles and monographs on humanist legal thought, in particular on the great Italian renaissance jurist Andrea Alciato.

Ilardi, whose primary interest is the diplomacy of his period, termed Abbondanza "a friend of American graduate students abroad working in Italian libraries and archives."

The archivist, he went on to say, would be glad to talk to graduate students and faculty after his lecture about research projects in Italian archives and libraries especially those relating to mediaeval and renaissance topics.

Valley Center Is Free University

By LINDA SITEMAN
Staff Reporter

In a small yellow stucco house at 95 State Street, Northampton, meet the students of the free university, the Valley Center.

"The Valley Center is people," said Mike Schaeffer, a junior at Amherst College and coordinator of this year's program.

"The outcasts of the Pepsi Generation, bored, outraged or numbed to sleep by the stifling amount of insignificant trivia being foisted upon them these days, opportunity to redeem their minds from british stagnation through the re-birth of the Valley Center," he said.

The Valley Center was born in the spring of 1966 on the Amherst College campus, the brainchild of Sam Clark, then an Amherst senior. The first classes of the free university began in October of that year.

There is no cost to a student wishing to attend the free university. This year the program has been subsidized with funds from student governments of the four-college area, Schaeffer added.

Emphasis of the courses offered is based on the desires and interests of the participants. Schaeffer stressed that interested persons are free to use the center's facilities to set up alternatives to the present curriculum.

Among the subjects discussed by the various groups are the underground press, black history and culture, Eastern religion and mysticism, and drugs. There are also workshops, ranging from rhythm and blues and yoga to creative writing and photography.

According to Ralph Keyes, a student at the London School of Economics and author of several educational articles, the free universities are "attempts of members of the major colleges across the country to fill the gap in learning."

Courses offered are not those of a conventional curriculum. They are, however, sometimes incorporated by universities after their success and value has been proven by the free universities. An example of this is the film program of last year, now offered at Amherst College.

One of the earliest noted successes was the experimental college set up at Dartmouth in the winter of 1966. Over 1,000 students applied, including the dean.

The Valley Center has an approximate enrollment of 150 according to Schaeffer. A girl attending the Eastern religion discussion added that most come from the University of Mass. Groups have rotating leaders, in an attempt to keep away from a typical classroom lecture situation. These classes have been organized as a type of relief from large lecture courses and grade-motivated learning," said Schaeffer.

The Dartmouth experiment was not unique. Neither is the Valley Center. Students across the country, banding together with faculty and townspeople, have organized some 43 free universities and experimental colleges in the past two years.

The concept is there, and it is a good one. But from observation of Wednesday night's mysticism group, unless current students can free themselves from the boundaries of needing to be lectured and can get used to the idea of not having to accept every opinion tossed their way, then the experiment won't get off the ground. Maybe it was just this class, or this particular night, but there wasn't much discussion.

Students can drop in for any of the classes, concluded Schaeffer, held Monday through Thursday at 8 p.m. Most courses will be finished by Thanksgiving to prevent any conflict with exam schedules.

galloped away from the entire Connecticut team.

Despite missing the field goal, Sherman had a fine day, converting five out of five points-after and booming out six long kickoffs.

The Redmen offensive line deserved much of the credit for the awesome running attack. Tackles Jim Mitchell and Mike Cooney, guards Bob Santucci and Don Glogowski and center Noeel Schablik created an abundance of holes in the Huskie armor.

On the defensive side, Smith was again the standout, coming up with seven key tackles. End Tom York and tackle Marty Scheralis played well in their first starting assignments.

The young defensive secondary is improving week by week. In the fourth quarter, Petrillo's last six passes were batted down.

Can Winter Be Far Behind?

Like Autumn, Hoop Plans Up in Air

By TOM FITZGERALD

Jack Leaman's second season as UMass basketball coach unofficially opens today. With only two lettermen back, the hoopers start practice at 4 p.m. in Curry Hicks Cage, that Court of the Last Resort.

Senior Bill Tindall and junior Joe DiSarcina are the only returning lettermen, but Ron Nowakowski, Pete Gayeska, Greg Rand, Gary Gasperack, Jim Girotti and Rick Perkins have all seen plenty of action.

Top-rated newcomers are sophs Ray Ellerbrook, Jack Gallagher and Dick Samuelson, in addition to Jim Sulesky, a 6'5 junior college transfer, who many feel will be the key to a successful season.

Leaman stresses the fact that today's session is open to anyone interested in trying out.

Wrestling coach Homer Barr's first recruiting efforts have reaped a promising crop for this year's freshmen team. About 30 will be trying out for frosh, Barr said, and "most of them are better than almost anything we've had up here before."

Some of the top prospects are Tom Andrewes of Springfield, state and New England champ in 157 lb. weight class; John Paltrineri of Wellesley, state champ in 130-lb. class and brother of Gene, this year's varsity captain; Jim Broadley of Needham, state champ two years ago in 140-lb. class, and Bob Willman of Teaneck, N.J., state champ in the 177-lb. class.

Others include Scott Berry, of River Vale, N.J., a tackle on the frosh football team who placed second in New Jersey last year in the unlimited class; Earle McCartney of Pennsville, N.J., third-place finisher in the state in the 137-lb. class, and Tom Young of Clearfield, Pa., third-place finisher in Pennsylvania in the 145-lb. class.

One coach arrives on the UMass scene this winter and one departs. The fresh face belongs to John Canniff, former hockey coach at Gloucester High, who must contend with UMass' oft over-looked hockey program.

His charges will play their hockey in Orr Rink at Amherst College, which will receive well over $4000 from UMass for ice time this year.

Ironically, the year that track coach Bill Footrick retires, UMass will finally have the track that he fought for so long.

Footrick retires as of the spring semester after 13 seasons and although he'd be the last to say it, the athletic department's neglect of the track program probably makes his retirement much easier for him. One of his proteges Ken O'Brien will take over winter and spring track duties.

During Footrick's tenure, UMass track teams won 37 and lost 23, capturing the Yankee Conference title in 1966 and 1967.

The nine-lane Olympic-style track is scheduled for completion this spring. It will be the site of the next Yankee Conference meet, in addition to all the Redmen's home meet.

And the athletic department has consented to allow the track to be used for the state junior Olympics next August. About 2000 Massachusetts youngsters will invade the campus for two days. They're already worrying about that situation in Boston.

IT TAKES TWO to tangle with UMass quarterback Greg Landry, who Saturday became the most formidable offensive machine ever at UMass. Landry ended the game at Connecticut with 3518 yards of career total offensive yardage, breaking the record held by Jerry Whelchel '64 of 3426.

Smith's Two Goals Pace Booters Over UConn, 2-1

STORRS, CONN.—Marty Smith scored two goals, including one in overtime, to lead the UMass soccer team to a 2-1 victory over Connecticut Saturday.

The game stood at 1-1 at the end of regulation time. After 55 seconds of overtime, Smith beat the UC goalie to give the unbeaten Redmen their second win of the season.

Smith scored his first goal in the second period, and Farrington Langa scored the lone tally for the Huskies, who now have a record of 1-2.

The win made Coach Larry Briggs' Redmen the team to beat in the Yankee Conference, and dealt a crushing blow to UC's title hopes. The Conference race now appears to a battle between UMass, UVM and URI.

UMass plays Rhode Island Saturday at home in what may be the most important game of the season. The Redmen face Trinity Wednesday at Hartford.

Landry in Form as Redmen Rip UConn

QB Sprints for 73-yd. TD To Cop Offensive Record

By MIKE CURRAN
Staff Reporter

STORRS, CONN.—Greg Landry ran for 200 yards and led the Redmen back onto the victory trail as they scalped the Connecticut Huskies, 35 - 14, before 11,000 fans at Memorial Stadium Saturday.

The victory put UM on top in the Yankee Conference standings and set the stage for next Saturday's battle with the Rhode Island Rams, the only other undefeated team in the league.

Early in the first quarter, Landry broke Jerry Whelchel's career yardage mark by scampering around left for a 34-yd. touchdown after Marty Scheralis had recovered a Huskie fumble at the 39-yd. line. Fullback Bruce Cochrane threw a beautiful block on Landry's jaunt, cutting down the last Connecticut defender.

A few seconds later, Tom York pounced on another home team bobble to give the Redmen another scoring opportunity, but the Huskies stopped UM 13 yds. away from the goal line and Ed Sherman's 30-yd. field goal attempt went wide of the mark.

In the second quarter, UConn's heralded booter, Roy Lawrence, also missed at his specialty. Bill DiYeso, a small but quick halfback, had returned a Nick Warnock punt to the Redmen 30 to set up the attempt.

UM took over, first and 10 on its own 20, and proceeded to march the length of the field for a score. Landry kept the Redmen on the ground during most of the drive, utilizing the speed and power of halfbacks John Tutino and John Decembrele. Tim Driscoll dove over from the three for the six points.

The Huskies marked the scoreboard in the second period on the fancy footwork of DiYeso. The 5'9 junior took a pitchout from quarterback Pete Petrillo and ran from UC's 18 to UM's 18. Only a come-from-behind tackle by Ernie Smith and Paul Campbell kept DiYeso from going all the way. Seconds later, DiYeso got credit for the six points, going off right guard from five yards out.

UM added to its 14-7 lead soon after the halftime festivities. A short punt gave the Redmen good field position and 10 plays later they were up, 21-7. A Landry to Bill Carty pass was the key play on this drive.

Connecticut came right back to make it 21-14 when Petrillo's passing game started to click. Soph flanker John Crisp was impressive during the 76-yd. drive, and for the rest of the afternoon the Redmen rewarded him with double and triple coverage. Petrillo rolled in from the 10-yd. line for the score after the Redmen safety Steve Rogers had deflected two potential TD passes.

Steve Parnell uncorked a 57-yd. run on the ensuing kickoff to set up UM's fourth score. The running of Decembrele, Landry and Fred Hairston brought the Redmen in from the 38-yd. line in eight plays. With no time left in the third period, according to the scoreboard, Decembrele went in off left tackle from 4 yds. out.

The final Redman tally came in the fourth quarter on a sensational 73-yd. run by Landry. The senior quarterback had the Huskie defense completely faked out as he rolled right, turned the corner, veered back to his left and DAMSEL IN DISTRESS — A Connecticut cheerleader worriedly surveys the scoreboard late in Saturday's game, which UMass won, 35-14.

Record Falls As Freshmen Harriers Win

Led by the performances of Leo Duart and Ron Wayne, the UMass freshman cross-country team shut out U-Conn, 15-46, at Amherst Friday.

Wayne and Duart zipped around the 3.5 mile course in 18:50, ripping 26 seconds off the old record. Shortly behind them in third place was Tom Dedarian, whose time of 19:05 was also well under the old record.

Completing the shutout by finishing fourth and fifth for the Little Redmen were Larry Paulsen and Bob Benshimol.

Coach Ken O'Brien was pleased with the team's performance and is looking forward to next Tuesday's meet with Rhode Island. The meet will begin at 3:30 p.m. behind the Women's Physical Education Building.

Cross-country Bows When Rally Flops

A tremendous comeback over the last half of the race fell barely short as UConn's cross-country team nipped the Redmen, 27-28, at Amherst Friday. The pace-setter was UMass's Charley Lang.

St. Anselm's was a distant third in the tri-meet with 80 points. The defeat was the first in two years against Yan-Con foes for Coach Bill Footrick's forces.

Trailing by as much as 10 points through the first half of the 4.6 mile course, many of the UM runners rallied to pass UC opponents, and both Greg Bowman and Dave Evans made last-ditch efforts from far behind, only to fall just short.

The expected duel for first place between soph star Vitale of Connecticut and Lang materialized shortly after the race began. Both runners moved quickly to the front and at the mile mark Vitale led Lang by five yards.

It was exactly the same after two miles with the two holding a substantial lead over third place Paul Hoss of UM. About three miles out, however, the UC soph began to weaken. Lang moved quickly to a 25-yd. lead and increased it to nearly 200 yards at the finish.

Meanwhile, Hoss rallied from far behind to edge Vitale, also. Both Lang and Hoss broke the old course record of 26:19. Lang ran it in 25:35 and Hoss 26:07.

The next Redman, Co-captain Greg Bowman, however, did not check in until 7th place. It was the rapidly improving co-captain, Greg Bowman. Behind him in 8th place was the other co-captain, Marc Gelinas, who was recovering from a back injury. In 10th place was Dave Evans.

Ronding out the top seven for the Redmen were vastly-improved Sam Berry in 11th place and Ron Ryan 13th. Others were Diego Gonzales 14th, Bill Donaldson 15th and Dennis Hogue 19th.

Tomorrow's meet against URI begins at 3:30 behind the Women's Phys Ed Building.

2,000 Homecoming Tickets Stolen

AMHERST .... The theft of 2,000 tickets valued at $5,500 for Homecoming concert Saturday at the University of Massachusetts has caused a headache for Homecoming officials.

The tickets were stolen from a car, belonging to Homecoming Committee Chairman Michael Garjian Wednesday. The car, which was being used by another student, was parked in North Amherst at the time of the theft.

Garjian said, "The stolen tickets will not be honored at the performance. Anyone knowing of the private sale of the tickets is requested to notify the UMass Campus Police."

Any tickets for the 7 p.m. show purchased before last Friday must be exchanged for new tickets. Acording to Garjian, the stolen tickets were colored green and included numbers 2501 to 4500. Now all tickets must be exchanged for white ones.

However, green tickets within Nos. 1-10 will be honored, the committee chairman said. These tickets have been distributed by WHYN radio station.

Although the stolen tickets will not be honored, Garjian wants them returned. He said that he will not file a formal police complaint until today at 5 p.m.

Anyone who wants to return the tickets can do so by telephoning him at 665-2620 in Sunderland or 545-2351 in Amherst, said Garjian.

The tickets were for the first performance of the Saturday night concert starring Mich Ryder. The Box Tops, The Blues Magoos, the Boys from New York and the Happenings.

The second concert, at 10:30, is open only to the campus community.

Sunday afternoon there will be another concert featuring the English star Donovan, Stan Getz and Janice Ian.

Class of '69 Exec Council Discusses Trip to Washington, D.C.; Winter Carni

By Ron LaBrecque
News Editor

Winter Carnival plans, a class trip to Washington, and the appointment of a President's Council were among the items on the agenda at the Class of '69 Executive Council meeting last Sunday night.

It was unanimously voted by the council to offer a trip open to the class of '69 to Washington D.C. A determining factor in the decision of the council was the success of the recent class trip to New York City in which over 200 members of the class participated. Wayne Thomas, President of the class of '69, recently received a letter from the Hotel New Yorker, where the group stayed, commending the conduct of the group.

The council voted to hold the trip during intercession. Thomas explained in a Daily Collegian interview today that this would "give each and every person in the class a fair chance to go, as there would be no conflicts such as exams at this time."

Thomas went on to say that the trip would be an educational one. Being planned at this time is a private guided tour of the White House, along with tours of the Capital and Smithstonian Institute.

"The trip will be three to four days and we are trying to keep the cost under thirty dollars. "Thomas added that a major airline was being contacted for a possible arrangement of chartered jet flights.

Second on the agenda of the meeting was the naming of the Winter Carnival Executive Cabinet. The chairman of the committees are as follows: Snow Sculpture and Outdoor Color — Jack King; Concert Chairman, Peter Lewenberg; Queens, Phil Lefebvre, vice-chairman—Candy Ahearn; Publicity and Advertising, Jay Concannon; Winter Carni Booklet Editor, Jack Dean; Theme and Atmosphere, Carol Robinson; Olympics, Dan Barnat; Friday Night Club, Chip Wilds; Wednesday Activities, Jeff Tim; Thursday Activities, Enid Salamoff; Ski Trip, Sue Finneran.

It was announced that the theme of Winter Carni '68 will be "recollections of a good old-fashioned winter". It was emphasized that anyone in the class of '69 wishing to participate on a Winter Carni committee should contact Patty Aspinwall, Secretary of the Class of '69.

Innovations to Winter Carnival this year will be the requirement of the use of color in Snow Sculptures and the sale of souveniers including Winter Carnival mugs.

Named to the President's Council at the meeting were Peter Lewenberg, Jack King, Phil Lefebvre, and Sue Finneran. Thomas explained that the President's council is to act on behalf of the Executive Council on matters when it is not feasible to bring together the entire Council.

Joan Baez Arrested At Berkeley Teach-In

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP)—Massed police broke up a blockade of the Oakland Army Induction Center with 69 arrests Monday as assorted antiwar groups opened a planned series of disturbances on both sides of San Francisco Bay.

County supervisors meanwhile asked the Superior Court to enjoin use of the University of California campus in adjoining Berkeley for an anti-Vietnam war "teach-in." The meeting was scheduled to run all night.

A march from the campus to the induction center to "close it down" was scheduled for Tuesday morning.

In San Francisco — across the bay from Oakland 235 young men put documents in a basket and tried to present it to U.S. Dist. Atty. Cecil Poole at the front steps of the Federal Building.

When he made no move, they dumped the basket in front of him. As Poole reentered the building the youths yelled: "hand in your license to kill." A newsman counted 235 documents in the basket, of which 180 were draft cards.

The Monday demonstration in Oakland failed to prevent entry of several bus loads of draftees from throughout Northern California.

Among those arrested for blocking entrances was folksinger Joan Baez, who was hustled into a patrol wagon while leading a handclapping group in chanting, "Want My Freedom Now."

The demonstrators, estimated by police and onlookers at up to 800, attempted to prevent entry by sitting in the three doorways of the induction center -and marching in front of the building.

The group included shaggy-haired hippie characters; teenage youngsters—both white and Negro; gray-haired elderly women, and middle-aged men.

Some draftees were momentarily blocked by pickets, but police then formed a double column through which the draftees walked peacefully into the building for their physical examinations .

Wife of UMass Employee Shot

By BILL DICKINSON

A University employee is being held following the murder of his wife. Bernard Gannon is being held by Southampton police, but as of press time no charges had been filed.

Mrs. Gannon, a mother of four, was found in her home on Helen Drive Monday. Mrs Gannon was killed by two bullets, according to the results of an autopsy. The medical examiner ruled the death a murder. Police refused to give other details.

Gannon is employed by the University maintenance department.

Peace Demonstration Held in Northampton

By BILL DICKINSON

"We ask you to resign." This was the rallying cry of a group of peace marchers demonstrating in front of the Northampton office of the Selective Service last night.

The marchers, about 65 strong, represented several local peace organizations: Students for a Democratic Society, Amherst and Northampton Vigils, and the UMass Students for Political Action.

Spokesmen for the marchers had planned to present a letter to the five members of the board, but the board, meeting in executive session, would not allow the demonstrators to enter its office. When the board members left for the night they refused to meet with them.

The letter to the board contended that"...51% of the people in this area wanted the U.S. to halt all military involvement in Vietnam." They quoted a Channel 3 poll on the war to support this statement.

The marchers, who were orderly, received a lot of verbal harassment from a crowd of about a hundred onlookers.

One of the marchers, when asked why they were picketing the board, replied, "The draft board is the Achilles heel of the Pentagon. If we can get one guy to resign, they can't function. We will end the war in Hampshire county."

After the board members refused to see them, the group announced its intention to return and march on the Northampton Town Hall Tuesday at noon.

Dr. Gage Calls AP Drug Release "Irresponsible Reporting"

By GERALD W. VIGEANT

"The recent Associated Press release about drug usage in the four-college area reflects the inevitable but regrettable taking of isolated observations which happen to be newsworthy and the drawing of conclusions from these few observations which may or may not be valid," said Dr. Robert W. Gage, Director of Health Services at the University, in an interview with the Daily Collegian Friday.

In addition, he stressed that UMass has less trouble with drugs than most schools its size.

Calling the AP story a "rather blowing report" and "irresponsible reporting',' Dr. Gage compared the research done for the story to a student research project based only on casual observations.

This story was printed, Dr. Gage said, because it is sensational, sounds lurid and attracts attention. It is regrettable that the story was "based on one person's unqualified, unsupported and uncontrolled observations," he said.

"I don't say that there's no usage of drugs on this campus," Dr. Gage continued. "I'm not that naive . . . However, I personally think that there is but a very small amount of serious drug usage here.

"The students we see at the Health Center with drug problems provide a very inaccurate measure of the extent of drug usage at the University," Dr. Gage said. He explained that very few students come to the infirmary because of drug problems.

"I would carefully distinguish between those who try drugs and can take them or leave them, and those who satisfy some personal need through drugs," said Dr. Gage.

Those who find that drugs help them to express themselves may take drugs with some regularity, Dr. Gage said. "The drug experience for them is more rewarding than it is disappointing," he explained. Unless such people get into legal trouble they are not disabled, they function well and they succeed with their studies.

A third group of drug users receive tremendous satisfaction from drugs and can't control themselves. Dr. Gage said, "These people cannot function properly, they cannot succeed with their studies, and they usually flunk out." It is this small number who would come to the infirmary for help, he said.

"While I therefore really have no solid and reliable way of thoughtfully estimating the extent of drug use at the University," Dr. Gage said, "I'm sure that we don't have the same magnitude of problem as schools of comparable size. We especially don't have nearly the trouble that schools in urban centers have.

Students Meet Challenge Of Limited Nursing Program

By PRISCILLA MULLEN

A four-year nursing program is following the trend of greater college enrollment but the UMass School of Nursing can accept only 90 freshmen each year.

"It's more of a challenge," according to Dean Mahar, than the traditional three-year program. While a three-year diploma school provides the education necessary to qualify as a registered nurse, following successful passage of state examinations, the four-year program, such as UMass offers, has much more, the dean said. Included in the bachelor of science degree program are two years of liberal arts courses as well as comprehensive nursing courses and clinical training, she said.

For the four-year student, this means competing—and living — with others pursuing a variety of majors. The diploma school student competes only with other nursing students. The opportunity for direct patient care in a variety of settings is offered but the nursing major remains a full-time college student.

The School of Nursing at the same time, keeps its identity and close contact with its students by staying small: only 90 freshmen are accepted each year. Total school enrollment is 286. The lack of clinical facilities in this part of the state, Dean Mahar added, also restricts the number the School can admit. Most of the neighboring hospitals are directly responsible to their own diploma nursing schools, leaving less room for college nursing students.

As for the four-year program's popularity, Dean Mahar feels this is explained in "the college trend itself". An increasing number of young people want not only a college education but the experience in living that goes with it.

The degree in science in no way restricts the graduate nurse to administrative or educational work, she emphasized. If the graduate wants direct patient contact, she'll have it.

A recent survey of UMass graduates indicated that more than 80 per cent were employed as staff members in hosptials.

What may eventually force the nurse with the B.S. to the desk, however, is money: pay for a nurse practitioner, in the area of $6,000 a year, is bare compensation for her work, said the dean.

Massachusetts Increases State Education Support

Massachusetts has the fifth largest increase in state support of higher education in an eight year period. In the past two years it has had an 80 per cent increase, but it still trails every other state in per capita support of higher education, the proportion of residents to whom public higher education is available, and the proportion of high school graduates who go on to college.

Indiana University professor, M. M. Chambers, who watches legislatures and their treatment of higher education, says that state appropriations for operating colleges and universities have increased 214 per cent in eight years—from $1.5 billion in 1959-60 to $4.4 billion this year.

Chambers and the Office of Institutional Research (OIR) director, Edwin Crawford, warn that in spite of the big increases many states will have to appropriate even greater sums to meet the increasing demands of higher education.

Population growth, enrollment growth, increased graduate study, inflation, rising faculty salaries, and expensive new equipment are listed as reasons for the increases.

These factors resulted in the large increases in appropriations over the last eight years and will continue to require states to step up their support of higher education.

Enrollment in colleges and universities total 6.5 million this year but are expected to increase another three million by 1975. And state institutions are expected to continue to have bigger enrollment increases than the private schools.

Despite increases, state funds are declining as a percentage of the income of many public universities, as the federal share rises. Crawford says that state tax dollars actually provide an average of only 40 per cent of "state" university budgets.

Chambers says that the future of further support is optimistic because some increases "come automatically from economic growth without changes in taxation." And state revenue systems could be overhauled to produce three times as much revenue as they do now.

NEW — FIND SCHOLARSHIPS BY COMPUTER

Last year $30 million in college scholarships went unclaimed — because no qualified persons applied . . . because no qualified persons knew of them. • Now ECS engineers and educators have programmed a high-speed computer with 700,000 items of scholastic aid, worth over $500 million, to permit students to easily and quickly locate scholarships for which they qualify. • The student fills out a detailed, confidential questionnaire and returns it to ECS, with a one-time computer-processing fee of $15. In seconds the computer compares his qualifications against requirements of grants set up by foundations, business, civic, fraternal, religious, and government organizations, and prints a personalized report to the student telling him where and when to apply for grants for which he qualifies. Thousands of these do not depend on scholastic standing or financial need.

Examine: Don't Censor

A recommendation sponsored by Senators Steve Nault and Frederic Hartwell will be brought before the Student Senate on Wednesday of this week. This proposal states that the Senate opposes any censorship of window signs. However, there is a faction in the Senate that is trying to attach a rider to the bill which would allow censorship on the House Council level.

We oppose this rider and believe that the bill should be passed in its present form.

As stated by David Aronow in a letter to yesterday's Collegienne, to provide for House Councils to review signs is just as bad as having Whitmore review them.

Many supporting the rider "reason" that some of the signs are objectionable to a "great majority of the students and public." The system of national government that we are supposedly using is not one of pure majority rule, for the individual is protected by the Constitution.

Because a majority might object to a sign has no bearing on the relative merits of the display, for our society may be better than most, but is in no way optimum! The individual should not be made to accept the mores and dictums that pour from the leaders of our miniature Great Society simply because they are popular.

Finally, it was the Administration who decided that a "problem" existed, not the students. Yet they have the gall to say that it is up to the students to find a solution for a situation that most students enjoy and the remainder tolerate.

In other words, the authorities are saying, "We are going to censor signs, but we thought we would give you the opportunity to show us your responsibility as young adults and do the dirty work !"

As a reaction to the presupposition that the Administration will act regardless of the feeling of the students, many Senators have decided to cop out by adding the "House Council" rider.

They are afraid to face what they fear is the actual impotency of the Student Senate, and thus they are trying to avoid a direct confrontation with the powers which will show this fact. The Student Senate does not have power; the only thing that the Student Senate can do is recommend action by the Administration.

Therefore, we must realize that the only influence that the Student Senate holds is that of a forum for student needs. In order to make the Senate speak with the voice, we urge all students to contact their Senators before Wednesday and make known their views.

Secondly, in order to give the Senate a real basis of power we feel that it would be desirable for the student body to demonstrate its views on the display of signs in a manner that the Administration will recognize as being the opinion of the mass of students.

Study Break

Now that the University is approaching the size of a medium city, it seems to be in need of an establishment that will be found in most medium size cities, an all night coffee shop.

Last year the Student Senate asked the administration about the possibility of having an all night snack bar on campus. Therefore, the Dean of Students, William Field; the director of Food Services, Joel Stoneham; Director of the Student Union, Mark Noffsinger and other administrators met to discuss the possibilities of having an all night snack bar.

The committee decided that the Student Union would be the most centrally located, and therefore the most profitable location for such a place. However, after some study they concluded that the difficulties in getting a staff and the probable small demand would not warrant the expense of a night spot.

However, this took place last year. There are 1,500 more students on campus this year. Therefore, it would seem worthwhile to look into the matter again and possibly have a trial period to see if a night snack bar would be profitable.

Sam Spark Speaks Out

The Policeman is Your Friend

I was curious to find out the real story behind the arrest of the two UMass students, so I went to the police station and had a nice chat with the Captain.

"Captain, why did you haul in the two UMass students last Thursday night?" I asked.

The Captain looked at me with shocked indignation as he replied, "Because one of them was hiding behind a tree and the other was laughing at him—out loud!"

"Horrors!" I exclaimed. "That's in direct violation of the city ordinance prohibiting hiding behind trees and laughing after midnight."

"You bet it is," he replied. "But that isn't all. They both admitted to drinking Firepower. Do you realize that the two of them, together, guzzled almost five glasses of beer".

"And were they still standing when you got to them?'

"Hardly. But we got them into the jail by having four of my best men drag them to the car and into the station. They obviously couldn't have made it under their own power."

"Obviously. However, they both claimed they were being denied their constitutional rights, such as a telephone call, having a bail set, and immediate informing of the charges brought against them. Also, they claimed you failed to give them any kind of a sobriety test, whatsoever."

"Constitution. Smonstitution. You have to forsake a few silly little rights when you're dealing with two hardened criminals like those two."

I heartily agreed. "But there's another point that bothered me. They both said that the conditions of the cell were deplorable. A solid steel sheet constituted a bed. One of them was given no blanket. The other was forced to share a cell with another derelict of society, thus necessitating his trying to sleep on the floor."

"Also, they complained that the faucet in the sink beside their cells was constantly running during the entire nine hours they were confined," I concluded.

The Captain was laughing so hard at the thought of it, he was in near hysteria. "Well, I admit the design of the bed and putting two guys in one cell was my idea. But all the credit for the water torture trick belongs to the Sergeant Chiang over there," he said.

The Sergeant was standing in the corner blushing with pride. I gazed at him in complete admiration and wondered how long the force could retain his young creative genius as a mere sergeant.

I was satisfied. "Thank you, sir," I said shaking the Captain's hand. "Our talk has certainly opened my eyes."

I left the police station thankful that I could sleep just a little safer each night knowing that the righteous upholders of justice, the Amherst Police Department, were on the job.

We dissent from the opinion expressed in today's policy editorial.

Both of us feel that each house government should determine what is proper for that house.

Obligation to News

To the editor:

What is La Resistance? It is an underground paper, not recognized by R.S.O. Its policy is to have no policy. But it appears to me that its policy is also to hide the real truth and substitute it with one that sounds better to its authors.

Anyone has the right to publish their views and opinions on a subject. But when they assume the role of a newspaper, they must assume the responsibility of presenting the truth to readers. La Resistance has failed to do this, for the last four paragraphs of the paper that appeared last Thursday are false. The word of censorship has not infiltrated the Collegian and W M U A.

The paper contends that the radio station was "mum," and that the Collegian waited three days before printing a "deliberately simplified" story.

But I was at the radio station when the first unconfirmed report of a suicide came in by phone. I heard it broadcast, as it was until noon the next day.

WMUA extended its broadcasting time by one hour that night, awaiting further news. The Collegian, which does not publish on weekends, did not print the story until Tuesday due to a printing error. Mistakes, not related in any way to the Administration, can happen.

The authors of the paper ask why the story was so "incomplete." Do they wonder why a detailed analysis of the person's mind was not printed? Were they wondering why a description of the body was not printed? I ask these people who have assumed the responsibility of journalism to think.

Perhaps they would then learn the wisdom of discretion and taste.

I would also ask them to name themselves, since they have nothing to fear, except criticism.

I too disagree with the Collegian viewpoint concerning screening the Towers. And I disagree with anyone that calls La Resistance a responsible attempt to print the truth.

To the editor:

As a candidate for the president of class of 1971, I feel it is my obligation to tell you of the duties of this important office. The president is responsible for the organization and activity of the freshman class. He must take charge and lead active freshmen groups in both social and political affairs.

I believe that the president should inform his class of all issues and events concerning it. He must be willing and able to discuss the issues with his classmates and work in their behalf. Finally, the president should be a man of ability, action, and integrity.

Being a class officer in high school and having served vigorously on the committee to rewrite my school student council constitution, has given me much experience in the ways of student government. Given the opportunity to serve the freshman class, I will employ this experience for the good of the class.

I wish that you would consider me your choice for the office of president of the class of 1971, in the primary election, October 19, 1967, and hopefully in the election on October 26.

Thank you,
Tom Carroll

To the editor:

RIIIP!! echoes through the room as another attempt goes into file 13. How I get myself into these situations is the foremost question in my mind at the moment. The answer is all too clear. I love to get involved in elections, class activities, and student government. Now that brings another question to mind . . . What am I going to write for the Collegian? How am I going to tell the freshmen of UMass about what I can offer them?

I suppose that I could begin with past experience. I could tell them that at General Arnold High I was elected secretary of the junior class and vice-president of the senior class. Hmmm . . . maybe I could list the things that I did in my senior year alone other than being v.p. I coud start with Inter-Club Council, Publicity chairman, Homecoming chairman, Senior Ball chairman, Student Council Representative, Co-editor-in-chief of the newspaper and many others.

But I don't want to do that. Maybe I should tell them what I have to offer other than the all important enthusiasm and experience. I should tell them that I can offer them fresh ideas which I gained from living from the last three years in Wiesbaden, Germany and through extensive travels. Perhaps, I should tell them that I learned a lot from the hundreds of people with whom I came in contact during my high school career.

Heavens! I don't know what to tell them! Maybe the freshman class would like to know what my platform is. Well, it is based on hard work and devotion. I intend to put this energy to work by performing the vital duties of a secretary and a member of the class of 1971 if I am elected.

Well, now that I've considered just about everything, I should start writing . . . Let's see . . . how about: I, BONNIE JACKSON . . .

Bonnie Jackson

To the editor:

My name is Mimi Johnson and I am very interested in representing the Class of '71 as Secretary. The office of Secretary, although not an easy job, is one with which I am familiar.

I have served as Secretary of my church group and am acquainted with the problems which arise in trying to accomplish the duties of an elected office. I have also served for two consecutive years as President of the Norwood Senior High School French Club which provided the opportunity of overseeing the operations of elected officials.

Here at the University, I am majoring in English and I intend to teach secondary English upon graduation. Like everyone else here, I have fallen in love with the University and I would like to do as much as I can to serve the Freshman Class.

Please vote for me, Mimi Johnson, for Secretary of the Class of '71. I promise to devote all my time and efforts to fulfill the obligations of Secretary.

Mimi Johnson

To the editor:

My name is Pam Klein and I am running for Treasurer of the Class of 1971. I come from Bellingham, Massachusetts, a small town on the Rhode Island border. Last June I graduated from Bellingham Memorial Junior-Senior High School.

During my four years at Bellingham High, I was an active member of the Math Club, the Drama Club and was elected to serve two years as Treasurer of the Future Teachers of America Club. One of my major enjoyments during my four years of high school was being a cheerleader for the various athletic events of our schools. I also participated in our town Youth Council where I again served as an officer.

I realize the enormous size of our Freshman Class and the problem of trying to know everyone, but I feel that if I am elected as Treasurer I will have the chance to meet as many of our class as possible. I am also very interested in making our class the best one ever and in fairly representing the Class of '71.

With the experience I have had in the past and my present enthusiasm, I feel confident that I shall be able to perform the duties of Treasurer with efficiency and ability.

Exams Cramp Homecoming

To the editor:

As a student of UMass I was under the impression that Homecoming Weekend was meant for the enjoyment of the students.

The German 107 midterm examination is set for the Monday following Homecoming. Perhaps the German Department thinks this weekend is a study holiday and that we come home to our books.

I'm sure some students would enjoy studying for the German 107 Exam, but the majority would enjoy even more being able to attend the more festive functions of homecoming.

We realize the students cannot force the German department to change it's policy, but they can ask for consideration. Please reschedule the exam at a time when the students' abilities can be fairly examined.

German 107 students

(Editor's note: After receiving the above letter, we contacted the chairman of the German department, Wolfgang Paulsen. As of press time today, the information given to the Daily Collegian is that the department will have the exam rescheduled. Other departments holding (evening) examinations are now being contacted by the Student Senate Academic Affairs Committee — with a request that they reschedule also.

The chairman of Academic Affairs, Chris McGahan, has indicated to the Daily Collegian that his committee will attempt to publicize the social calendar before dates for examinations are set in the future.)

Debate Series Starts Tonight

MICHAEL TUGENDHAT

Tonight, the University Forensic Society starts its campus public debate series which is open to the five college community.

The topic tonight will be on the relevance of a small nation's opinion in world affairs.

Taking the affirmative will be A. Stephen Daggett, a sophomore varsity debater, who last year captured first place at the Morgan State Debate Tournament in Baltimore, Maryland. His partner, Marlene Fine, also a sophomore varsity debater, is credited with winning the tournament at CCNY last year.

Taking the negative will be two outstanding debaters from Great Britain. E. William Smyth, who is now studying law in Dublin and who has received the Irish Times International Debate Trophy, will be paired with Michael Tugendhat. Mr. Tugendhat, a graduate of Gonville and Caius College of Cambridge, England, was Secretary of the Cambridge University Society and President of the Cambridge University Inner Temple Society.

Leading tonight's debate will be John E. Putnam, President of the University Forensic Society. The debate will take place in Hasbrouck 20 at 8:00 p.m.

E. WILLIAM SMYTH

The Arab-American Club will sponsor a lecture tonight by Ibrahim Othman at 7:30 p.m. in Baker House. The topic will be the Arab-Israeli conflict. Refreshments will be served and all are invited.

Geology Lecture To Be Given

Frank Press, professor of geophysics and chairman of the department of geology and geophysics at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, will present the first Five-College Geology Lecture of the year "The Internal Structure of the Earth: Results," on October 18 at 8:15 p.m. in the Mead Auditorium at Amherst College.

The lecture will be a companion to his presentation Tuesday evening at Williams College outlining a new method for determining internal structure.

Garret Speaks on Graduate Study in Recreation

By MARY ELLEN FOX

University of Illinois Professor Maxwell R. Garret will be the speaker at an evening presentation Thursday, Oct. 19 at 7:30 in the Student Union Council Chambers, announced Dr. William E. Randall, Head of the UMass. Department of Recreation. On sabbatical leave from the University of Illinois Department of Recreation and Municipal Park Administration, Professor, Garret is making a study of recreation field work and internship programs at colleges and universities throughout the country.

Dr. Randall said that the program Thursday will be concerned mainly with opportunities for graduate study in the field of recreation at the University of Illinois. Among the advantages that the University offers are its prominent Recreation and Park Field Service, Survey and Consultant Service to Municipalities, and a strong co-operation with the University Extension Service.

Graduate degrees are given on both the Masters and Doctoral levels. The Recreation Graduate School at Illinois offers options in five fields: Therapeutic Recreation, Outdoor Recreation, Research, Park Management, and General Recreation which includes voluntary and municipal services. There are several graduate fellowships available.

As well as being prominent as an educator in Recreation, Professor Garret is active in other areas related to recreation. He is known to be one of the top fencing coaches in the country. "He also operates a successful private day camp and will be discussing this with the Recreation Management class," Dr. Randall disclosed.

Mideast Extensively Discussed

The United States dropped a tight veil of secrecy Monday, over its role in the intensive discussions on a Middle East settlement.

U.S. sources confirmed that Arthur J. Goldberg, the chief U.S. delegate to the United Nations, was meeting with Egyptian Foreign Minister Mahmoud Riad, but they also told reporters that nothing would be made public on the substance of the conversation.

In another key development, Deputy Foreign Minister Vasily V. Kuznetsov flew to New York from Moscow. Diplomats said it was apparent his main purpose was to participate in the Middle East talks.

The backstage Middle East talks, which have been going on for several weeks, were focused at the moment on a possible resolution for the U.N. Security Council.

It was understood one approach that had wide support was for the council to set down general principles for a settlement and authorize Secretary-General U Thant to name a special representative to work out details between the Arabs and the Israelis.

Those principles would include Israeli withdrawal from the Egyptian, Jordanian and Syrian territory it occupied in the six-day war in June. This would be coupled with Arab recognition of Israeli's sovereignty and right to exist as a nation and an end to the 20-year Arab state of belligerency against Israel.

Both British and American sources, asked whether they expected a council meeting on the Middle East this week, replied that unusually rapid progress would have to be made.

The current session of the General Assembly has the Middle East problem on its agenda as a matter of high priority, but it has deferred its debate on the question, pending the outcome of the talks behind the scenes.

Dames to Hear Civic Speakers

New Role For Toilet Paper

Float Parade Friday Night

By MARGARET MITH

Instructions were hurriedly reviewed under a steadily drizzling sky. "Dirty Jane, your group take Southwest. Sulli's bunch, storm the hill. We'll hit the quad. Got your suitcases? Okay, split!"

Masked by wide-brimmed rain hats and trench coats, the girls faded unobtrusively into the night. The callous coeds accomplished their mission as the innocent campus slept.

Morning brought anguished cries of despair from the stricken areas. "'It's gone! It's all gone! There's no toilet paper left in the dorm!"

What sadistic motive could have prompted the incident just described?

The answer lies in the fact that this is the week before Homecoming. Hundreds of feet of chicken wire have to be stuffed and readied for float construction and toilet paper has proven to be the most pliable, "economical" material available.

Attaining the necessary toilet paper is only one of the problems plaguing the float builders this week. Trucks have to be rented, drivers found, lumber bought, workers recruited and themes developed.

Not all of the problems will be solved with the intrigue and daring that accompanied the paper caper. Nevertheless, many students will be spending a great deal of time working on their dorm or fraternity float.

Will the ends justify the means and the effort involved? That question can be answered by the judges and crowds viewing the float parade on Friday night.

Red China Charges Collusion In U.S. Decision

TOKYO (AP)—Red China's official Peking People's Daily asserted Monday the U.S. decision to build an antiballistics missile system was made in collusion with the Soviet Union.

An article broadcast by Radio Peking recalled that Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara announced last month that the United States planned an IBM system to thwart possible attacks from Red China.

"It is clear that China's possession of nuclear weapons and missiles has sent a chill down the spine of the U.S. imperialists, ferocious as they are," People's Daily said.

Afro-Clubs Increasing On Campus

A trend among Negroes in colleges to rebel against interracial conformity and reject white guidance was outlined today in a national magazine.

Writing in the current issue of Look, Ernest Dunbar, a Look senior editor, cited "the birth of 'Afro' or all-black clubs and societies" as a manifestation of black militancy on campus.

The "Afro" clubs serve as a focal point for black students' views, cultural activities, and efforts to influence the college administration.

Factors which give rise to these clubs, wrote Dunbar, include the growing number of ghetto-bred and other Negroes in prestige colleges; a new desire "to invest their energies in the black communities"; a recognition of black values, and—specifically at strife-torn Berkeley—a tendency to "avoid white advisers."

An increase in mental difficulties among Negro students has resulted from the pressures they face today, the article indicates.

Dunbar reported on black societies at Columbia, Princeton, Harvard and Radcliffe, Yale, Dartmouth, Wellesley, Berkeley, Merritt College, and San Francisco State.

While some schools do not permit organizations to discriminate on a basis of race, he pointed out, the content of meetings—including phrases like "my black brothers" — discourages curious whites from joining.

Dunbar concluded: "While all the results . . . are hard to foresee, it is obvious that students, administrators, faculty and parents are in for a kind of education that few expected.

"Our Liberty depends on freedom of the press and that cannot be limited without being Lost."

Soviet Spymaster Defects; Helps Smash Two Rings

BONN, Germany (AP)—A Soviet spymaster has defected to the United States, leading to the smashing of two spy rings, officials said Monday.

They declined to identify the Russian. But a State Department spokesman in Washington said he was Lt. Col. Runge, of the KGB, the Soviet security and espionage agency.

Informants reported that Runge, now in the United States, approached U.S. authorities in Germany a week or 10 days ago.

In defecting, Runge tipped off German authorities on the two spy rings he had operated in West Germany. Authorities said the second spy ring operated in the French Embassy.

West German officials said the two rings, operating independently, were smashed with the arrest of four Germans.

Officials in this West German capital were reluctant to assess the importance of documents accessible to the accused spies. But Martin said the two rings had supplied the Russians with secrets "of a high order."

A Foreign Ministry spokesman said Mrs. Suetterlin, the secretary, had been employed by the ministry since 1955 and that her last job was that of a secretary in the personnel department.

Martin said Mrs. Suetterlin brought home documents which her husband photographed and turned over to the Russians.

UMass Commuters Club To Sponsor Lunch-In

The Commuters Club will hold a Lunch-In tomorrow at Memorial Hall Auditorium. All commuters are invited to come and bring a lunch to meet with their fellow commuters and also with the eight Student Senators representing the commuters.

The occasion should provide for a number of gripes to come to the surface for the senators to work on according to the president of the Club, John Tibbetts.

Invited to be on hand were Dean of Women Helen Curtis and William H. Richards, an assistant dean of men. Richards has been a member of the President's ad hoc committee on parking which completed its report this past year.

The commuter senators will be holding their regular committee meeting this afternoon at 4:30 p.m. in the Norfolk Room of the Student Union. Interested students are welcome to be on the committee of the Senate or to observe its proceedings or bring matters to its attention.

Commuter senators may be reached at the Student Senate office, 545-2832 or 549-0241 or at their homes:

STEADY EDDIE—UMass' Ed Sherman kicks conversion point against Connecticut during the Redmen's 35-14 victory. Ball appears over cross-bar and outstretched arms of UConn's Vic Canzani (24) and Henry Palasek (65).

'We Wondered When Landry Would Explode,' Says Toner

By TOM FITZGERALD
Sports Editor

While the rest of his backfield playmates certainly enjoyed themselves Saturday at U Conn, Greg Landry had a ball.

The senior quarterback wasn't aware that he was close to a career offensive record, but it took him exactly six minutes to make Jerry Whelchel the second best yardage-gatherer in the record book.

JOHN TONER

Landry needed 32 yards to match Whelchel's 3426 piled up in 1964. He gained five just after Marty Scheralis had smothered a U-Conn fumble, and two plays later he slipped past the Huskies and Whelchel on a 34-yard touchdown sweep around left end.

During the afternoon, he attempted only nine passes, completing just three to Bill Carty. He was having too much fun on the ground, finishing with an even 200 yards rushing. Coach Fusia's stable of running backs almost equalled Landry's success with 189 more yards.

Jerry Grasso, Bruce Cochrane and Tim Driscoll started but John Tutino, Ed Sarno, John Decembrele and Fred Hairston all saw plenty of action. They no doubt represent the deepest backfield Fusia and backfield coach Jack Delaney have had at UMass.

The crowning touch for the Redmen was Landry's 73-yard scamper with four minutes to play. He rolled right, cut back to the middle and disappeared faster than those two thousand Homecoming tickets.

"We knew he was great," said UConn Coach John Toner later in the locker room. "We were just wondering when he was going to explode."

Fusia, back to his Maine game smile, extolled the team's "character" in coming back from the crushing loss to Dartmouth two weeks ago. As for Landry's record, he said, "I don't think he cares about it and I don't."

Redmen Rantings — Tutino, a 5'9-176 lb. junior college transfer from Brooklyn, must get the quickest jump in the Yankee Conference. He was second in the rushing department for U-Mass with 63 yards in 14 carries. Landry's 200 yards were made in 21 attempts, almost 10 yards a time. Decembrele was third with 33 yards in 11 tries . . .

Fusia was impressed by U-C's stellar pass combination of Pete Petrillo and John Crisp. Petrillo gained 82 yards in 18 rushes and completed eight of 19 passes for 75 yards. The 6'4 Crisp nabbed four passes for 47 yards.

Crisp entered UConn on a basketball scholarship. UMass had tried to recruit him when he was a high school quarterback in Lexington, but according to Fusia, "He didn't want a football scholarship."

Impish halfback Bill DiYeso, who had only two runs from scrimmage in UConn's first two games, was the Huskies' leading ground-gainer with 102 yards in 12 carries. He would have had an 83-yard touchdown run in the second period but for the speed of Ernie Smith and Paul Campbell, who both caught up with him at the UMass 18 . . .

Perhaps the biggest play of the game was DiYeso's failure to make a first down on a fourth-and-one situation at the UMass 14 with the Redmen leading, 28-14, halfway through the fourth quarter . . .

UMass kicker Ed Sherman made his ninth conversion in his 10 attempts so far this season, succeeding the last eight times. The UMass record for consecutive placements in 23, held by Whelchel in 1965 and John Bamberry, present assistant coach, in 1962 . . .

In the fourth quarter, the officials had put the ball in play at the UMass 30 following a UConn punt. While the Huskies replaced their punting team by their defensive unit, the Redmen quickly lined up in front of the ball, but the officials called a time-out, letting UConn set up its defense . . . Decembrele's touchdown in the third quarter came at least 15 seconds after the period had ended on the unofficial scoreboard clock. The time of the score was listed as 15:00.

UMass punter Nick Warnock averaged 35.8 yards in five efforts, well below his pre-game mark of 42.8 . . . Safety Steve Rogers dove to bat away two straight endzone pass attempts by Petrillo in the third quarter, one to Crisp and the other to DiYeso . . . Nick Warnock would have caught a 42-yard touchdown pass from Landry in the first quarter if UConn's Ron Grinage head not leaped high to knock it down . . . End Tom York and tackle Scheralis made their presence felt on defense. They were replacing Bruno Debiak and Doug Faucette . . . Husky Mike Boryczewski quick-kicked a 59-yarder in the first quarter . . . Steve Parnell, who Fusia calls the best kickoff return man he has had at UMass, ripped off a 57-yard jaunt in the third quarter . . . Guard Bob Santucci played another stand-out game although he had nursed a virus most of the week . . . Don Glogowski started at the other guard position as Smith performed strictly at linebacker this time.

Frosh Drop Another Close One, 14-7

BOSTON—In the shadow of Fenway Park, another local favorite tasted defeat as the frosh were defeated, 14-7, by the B. U. frosh last Thursday. It was the second defeat in as many games for the Little Redmen. The Terrior Pups stand at 2-0.

The game was loosely played and there were many penalties on both sides. During the game, roars were heard from Fenway Park, scarcely a half mile away, transistor radios blared, and the World Series score was announced about every 10 minutes.

Both teams scored in the second period. BU registered first, and drove deep into UM territory soon thereafter. The Pups tried a field goal from the UM 35. Bill Barne blew in and blocked it, and "Monster" Mike Kostanski picked it up to charge 65 yards for the Little Redmen's equalizer.

In the third period BU marched 75 yards to take the lead. Massachusetts couldn't retaliate, but came close in the final seconds. A fourth - down pass from the BU eight barely missed in the end zone. The ball had been brought deep in BU territory on a 60 - yard reception by Nick McGarry.

Coach Dave Kelley cited three reasons for the poor showing at BU—lack of sufficient practice time after the Army game (only two days), the heartbreaking defeat to the Plebes and the distractions of the World Series.

QTV Takes Trojan Title

With the benefit of an extra first-down to its credit, QTV edged Kappa Sig, 13-12, last night for the championship of the Trojan Division of the fraternity league.

Both teams were undefeated going into the fray, and the result of the duel was what may be the most talked - about game of the intramural season. In case of a tie game, the winner is determined by the number of first downs it has, and QTV had the edge in that department. The game was tied, 12-12 at the final whistle.

Also in the Trojan Division, PSD's DelSesto scored one touchdown, passed for another and scored both conversions to help beat SAM, 20-0. PSK rode Dawson's three touchdown passes to bury PLP, 32-0.

ASP beat TKE, 20-13, as Carrata completed 15 of 20 passes.

In the South Tower Division of the dorm league, the Washington Terrors extended their undefeated streak by smearing the Monuments, 22-0. The Bulldozers silenced the Senators, 14-7, and the Huskies nipped the Crushers, 7-6.

TKE won the fraternity tug-o-war, followed by TC, KS and QTV.

Leaman Pleased with Practice

Coach Jack Leaman welcomed 16 basketball players at the team's first practice session last night at the Cage.

Four players missed the practice to take exams and junior Ron Nowakowski was out with illness, but the coach was pleased with the practice and the condition of his charges.

An interesting battle for the center position may be shaping up between 6'9 junior Pete Gayeska and junior college transfer Jim Sulesky.

No Curfew System

Women Students Respond Favorably

By SHAREN GALLANT
Staff Reporter

Self-respect and a sense of responsibility—these are the fruits of the UMass no-curfew system, according to Dean of Women Helen Curtis.

Asked by the Collegian to review the first year under the new system for upperclass women, Miss Curtis reported favorable reactions from administration, parents and students.

"It's my impression that, on the whole, women students have responded to this plan very well," stated Miss Curtis. "Some students have told me that it gives them a new self-respect to be treated like adults. The University wants to expect responsible judgment and standards from all students. I believe that this is an appropriate plan for today."

Parents, too, have been quite receptive to the no-curfew plan, the dean said. Miss Curtis recalled that at summer orientation sessions, parents were concerned mainly with residence hall plans, counseling services, as well as the University philosophy concerning the plan. Most parents agree, she said, that when students were old enough to go away to school they were also old enough to assume adult responsibilities.

Miss Curtis stated: "It's harder to assume responsibility for one's own decisions and to carry them out than to have someone else tell you what to do." She believes that part of a student's educational process lies in becoming responsible for personal and social areas as well as for academic work, because, as she put it, "Education should mean intellectual living."

Dean of Women Helen Curtis says both parents and students are pleased with the way the elimination of curfews for upperclass women has worked out.

Gannon Charged with Murder; Case Continued Until Oct. 27

The case of a UMass employee charged with the murder of his wife was continued until Oct. 27 in Northampton District Court yesterday.

Bernard C. Gannon of Southampton, a grounds worker, was charged with first degree murder, but the case was continued because the defendant lacked counsel.

Mrs. Gannon was found dead in their Southampton home Monday. Shortly afterward Gannon was picked up and taken to the Southampton police station for questioning. After six hours of questioning by detectives from the district attorney's office, he was booked on a homicide charge.

According to an autopsy conducted by Dr. George Katsas, state pathologist, Mrs. Gannon's death was caused by two gunshot wounds.

Gannon has been employed by the University since September 1965.

LBJ's Renomination Opposed By Various Groups Throughout Country

NEW YORK (AP) — Grass roots movements designed to block renomination of President Johnson in 1968, or to persuade him to abandon the race, are taking shape today in a number of states, coast to coast.

Opposition to the President's policies in Vietnam motivates most of the dissident groups.

Some, as in New York, Illinois, Oregon and New Hampshire, are trying to promote Sen. Robert E. Kennedy of New York for the Democratic nomination, although Kennedy repeatedly has disavowed their efforts.

Others, backing no specific candidate, plan to challenge Johnson by various methods in presidential primary elections next year. By entering anti-Johnson slates of delegates, they say, they will offer voters the opportunity to register disapproval. Or, in Wisconsin they can simply vote "no" opposite Johnson's name.

The total size and strength of the "dump Johnson" groups is unclear. The largest, however, appear to be in California and New York.

The California Democratic Council, with 33,000 volunteer members, voted recently to oppose pro-Johnson delegates in the 1968 primary with a slate of delegates pledged to make peace in Vietnam.

Dr. Martin Shepard of New York City, national co-chairman of Citizens for Kennedy in '68 said his organization has drives under way in California, Colorado, Illinois, New Hampshire, New York, Nevada, Oregon, South Dakota, and Washington State.

In New York City last week, 500 dissident Democrats attended the organizational rally of the Coalition for a Democratic Alternative. Their aim is to elect an anti-Johnson slate of delegates in the New York primary next June.

Leaders of the anti-Johnson groups in some states acknowledge that Democratic party chiefs "are ignoring us," indicating that the regulars are not attaching any great importance to the dissidents at this time.

Said John Burns, chairman of the New York State Democratic Committee, "They will not be large in numbers. All the major party leaders will be working hard for Johnson's re-election."

The Citizens for Kennedy in '68 in New Hampshire is headed by Eugene Daniell Jr., former mayor of Franklin, who asserts that a Kennedy victory in his state's primary next March 12—the nation's first-will "persuade" Johnson not to seek renomination.

Eighty Parade Entries Registered To Kick Off Homecoming Activities

Kicking off Homecoming 1967 will be the annual Homecoming float parade. Over 80 entries are registered to participate in the event and an expected crowd of over 35,000 will view the show, according to homecoming officials.

The parade will start at 6 p.m. Friday evening. Assembly time for entries is set at 5 p.m. Assembly will take place in the School of Business Administration parking lot, next to Whitmore Hall.

University Landscape Architect William Lambert has given the Homecoming committee special permission to open the North Pleasant St. as well as the Lincoln Ave., entrance to the lot for easier access to the assembly point by the floats.

The parade will proceed from the parking lot down Lincoln Ave. to Amity St. where it will head east to the center of town. From there it will head north on North Pleasant St. and will wind up at the Student Union. The reviewing stand, which will hold campus dignitaries, will be located at the corner of North Pleasant St. and Phillips St.

In addition to the floats, the Flying Redmen and other groups will appear in the parade. Each float is required to have someone behind it picking up loose debris according to the Homecoming committee.

At the end of the parade at the Student Union there will be the traditional bonfire and rally, and the winners of the float parade will be announced.

SYMBOL OF THE HIPPY CULT, Donovan, will perform at the Sunday Homecoming concert. See page five for the plans for the rest of the weekend.

Should Know Information In Handbook

By JOHN GRAIFF
Staff Reporter

"Students are to be held responsible for having a knowledge of Student Handbook regulations," according to Robin Brooks, assistant to the dean of students.

The 1967-68 handbook was designed to inform the student of the most important aspects of the University. Simplicity was a main factor in drawing up the 63 page handbook. The authors have avoided detailed description.

For example, description of clubs and activities are no longer included. "This information can be obtained just about anywhere," Brooks said.

Among two major additions which cannot be found anywhere else are the explanation of the judicial system, drawn up by the Student Life Committee appointed by the Dean of Students, and the code of conduct assembled by the Student Affairs Committee of the Faculty Senate.

The 4½ by 6 inch handbook was not distributed at registration because it was not printed in time. Because of the late printing, the handbook was distributed at the residential units.

Brooks explained that he wanted to be sure all students received the handbook because of its importance. The book which includes a map of the campus, was also distributed to the faculty and professional members of the University so they would be properly advised.

Educational Psychology?

Dr. Schumer's Humorous 'Method'

By ALAN SPONBURGH
Staff Reporter

Going to classes can be educational!

Almost as educational as "Plato" parietals.

Consider an enthusiastic class on Monday afternoon in Bartlett Auditorium, a Monday after a "long" weekend to be more exact. The course is Educational Psychology, taught by Dr. Harry Schumer. While discussing the behaviorist theories of psychologist B. F. Skinner, Dr. Schumer apparently struck a sensitive area by making the offhand remark that students seem to be more concerned with "booze and parietal hours" than with academic issues.

Several students were eager to answer this challenge. Though the class is normally lecture-oriented because of its enrollment of several hundred, Dr. Schumer was willing to abandon Skinner to discuss his position.

The students who responded disagreed with his statement, claiming that it was unfounded. One student suggested that he take a poll. He laughingly pointed out the impossibility of getting unbiased results because of the discussion that had already taken place. However, Dr. Schumer offered to take the poll in another class.

Humor is Dr. Schumer's most effective way of getting across what he has to say. In a typical flare of enthusiasm, he shouted Monday that students should have the parietal hours, so they can get together "for a quiet discussion of Plato". He said also that they "should have the right to drink and have gut courses".

All this, he was careful to point out, was strictly "tongue in cheek".

The discussion was concluded as Dr. Schumer tried to demonstrate why academic issues are of less concern than drinking and parietals. The student cannot relate easily to such things as wanting good teachers and demanding better courses, he said. However, the student can readily relate drinking or parietals to his immediate needs and satisfactions. Such "freedoms" are basic and necessary, said Dr. Schumer.

Thus B. F. Skinner will have to wait until next class.

Anti-Viet Rally Permit Issued

By DICK BOUCHER
Staff Reporter

Latest indications are that the permits for an anti-Vietnam rally to be held in Washington on Oct. 21, will be issued by the government, according to Michael Idoine, coordinator of the Valley Peace Center.

According to an article in the Collegian of Oct. 11, the government had refused to issue permits for the rally. The National Mobilization Committee to end the War in Vietnam had planned to go ahead with the rally without the permit. This will no longer be necessary.

"Round trip bus tickets will be on sale on campus for the rest of this week" says Idoine, "through the Students for Political Action."

Interested students may call Joyce Shortt at 586-0922 or Mr. Idoine at 253-3502.

Buses will leave from Amherst common at 11:30 p.m. Friday evening and will return from Washington at 11:00 p.m. Saturday. They will arrive in Amherst around 7:00 a.m. Sunday morning.

Speakers will include Dave Dellinger, chairman of Mobilization Committee; Dr. Benjamin Spock; Donald Duncan, former Master Sgt., Green Berets; Rev. William Sloane Coffin, chaplain, Yale University.

Phil Ochs, the Jefferson Airplane and the Fugs will be among the entertainers.

Peking's Stand on Peace Precludes Stability in Asia

Red China's official Communist party newspaper, People's Daily, says there can be no peace with the United States even if American forces are withdrawn from Formosa, Chiang Kai-shek's Nationlist stronghold.

The policy, evidently the expression of foreign policy of the supporters of Chairman Mao Tse-tung, appears to knock the props from under the argument, often advanced in Peking in the past, that only the U.S. military presence in the area blocks peace in the Pacific.

The newspaper made the statement in an article Monday to discredit an earlier statement by Mao's chief foe in the current purge movement called "the cultural revolution" that "once U.S. imperialism withdrew its troops from Formosa, China would develop friendly relations with it."

That statement, by the now disgraced President Liu Shaechi, was pictured by People's Daily as a betrayal of "proletarian internationalism," and as giving the impression that Red China thought only of its own territorial interests.

The theory of the Maoists is that communism can win in the world only through "people's war." The Mao doctrine is that the war in Vietnam is a testing ground for his theory and that there must be other Vietnams which China will support.

Thus, the paper appeared to make it official that the Mao foreign policy had prevailed in the current purge struggle.

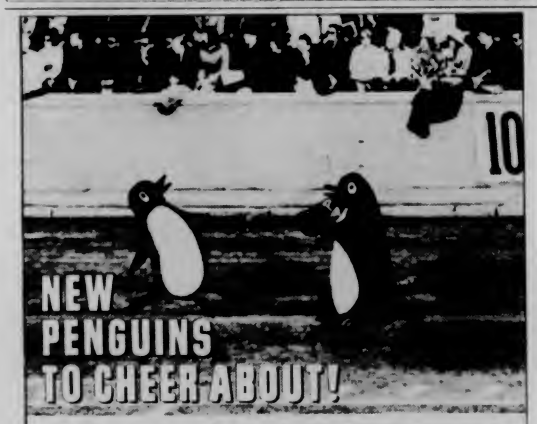
"The Chinese people," the papetr said, "will resolutely adhere to the general line of the foreign policy laid down by Chairman Mao, unite with all oppressed people and nations of the world, form the broadest possible united front against U.S. imperialism and frustrate all its aggressive and war plans."

Eisenhower Admitted to Walter Reed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former President Dwight D. Eisenhower was admitted to Walter Reed Army Hospital Tuesday suffering an undiagnosed ailment of the urinary tract.

His condition was described as good.

A spokesman said Eisenhower developed symptoms — which have not been disclosed—at his home in Gettysburg, Pa., on Monday.



He was flown here by helicopter for medical evaluation upon the advice of his physician.

UMass Enrolling Applicants For N.E. Newspaper Fellow

Applications are now being accepted from New England newspapers that wish to enroll a journalist as a New England Newspaper Fellow at the University of Massachusetts.

This year's fellows will be the fourth group of journalists to be enrolled in the program sponsored by the University in cooperation with the New England Society of Newspaper Editors. The initial session in a two-day opening program will be held at 7 p.m., Friday, Oct. 17, at the University.

Director of the fellowship program is Dr. Arthur Musgrave, professor of English and journalistic studies and a former Nieman Fellow in journalism.

Journalists who complete the program, which consists of three courses given over a two-year period for graduate or undergraduate credit, receive nine credits and a certificate awarded jointly by the University and the NESNE. Qualified graduate students may apply the nine credits toward a master's degree.

The first course consists of 45 hours of seminars held on five weekends starting on the last Friday in October and ending in May. The second course is held in the summer, with the third being held, like the first, on five weekends between October and May.

In addition to the group who will start the first course this year, a second group, consisting of all newspaper men and women who were enrolled last year, will start the final course in the two-year program on Oct. 27.

Thomas W. Gerber of the Concord (N.H.) Monitor is president of NESNE and K. R. Fall of the Berkshire Eagle is chairman of the society's education committee, which serves in an advisory role to the University faculty committee that conducts the fellowship program.

DR. DRUM TO BE INTERVIEWED ON WMUA

Dr. Ryan Drum, the controversial professor responsible for psychedelic Botany 101, will be the guest on the premiere of WMUA's "Meet the Campus Newsmakers" series tomorrow evening at 7:00 p.m.

Personally, I regard learning, the accumulation of data and synthesis of concepts, an act of endless pleasure, and I think everyone should be allowed to learn as a pleasurable experience . . .

WMUA Program Director Glenn Spatola will question Dr. Drum further concerning his ideas on education.

Illinois' Professor Wallace To Lecture on 'The Speech Act'

"The Speech Act" will be the topic of a lecture by Prof. Karl R. Wallace, chairman of the University of Illinois department of speech, Thursday, Oct. 19, at 8 p.m., in the Middlesex room of the University of Massachusetts Student Union.

Dr. Wallace is past president of the Speech Association of America and past editor of the Quarterly Journal of Speech. He is author of "Francis Bacon on Communication" and has just completed a second book on Bacon. He is co-author of "Fundamentals of Public Speaking," editor of "History of Speech Education in America," and co-editor of "An Historical Anthology of Select British Speeches."

Some of his most influential articles have been: "The Substance and Ideas in the Teaching sons," "The Primacy of Substance and Idas in the Teaching of Practical Discourse," and "An Ethical Basis of Communication."

The public is invited to attend the lecture.

Student Senate Will Meet In Dining Commons No. 7 Tonight

The Student Senate will meet in Southwest Dining Commons 7 this Wednesday at 8:00. The regular weekly meeting of the Student Senate will be called to order in the north end of the dining commons. It is hoped that many of the students living in the Southwest area will take this opportunity to attend a Student Senate session and see how the central government of the students conducts its business. The entire meeting will be open to the University Community.

Of interest to all students, but especially to Southwest students, will be consideration of bills concerning the present dispute over window signs and concerning dining commons policy in the Southwest Area. In both cases, the Senate legislative proposals have taken careful consideration of the student views expressed in last Thursday's Senate inquiry on signs and lines held in the lounge of Patterson Residence Hall. One specific issue that is sure to arise is the question of total freedom as opposed to limited restrictions in relation to window signs in campus residence halls.

Also discussed will be proposed legislation concerning the disbursement of complimentary tickets at Homecoming and other major University social events.

Anti-Draft Demonstration Dispersed

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP)—Police, using clubs and tear gas against some 3,500 antidraft demonstrators, cleared the way Tuesday for nine buses bringing draftees to the Armed Services Induction Center.

Twenty of the shouting and singing crowd — mostly young people—were taken to hospital for treatment of cuts and bruises. Scores of others suffered lesser injuries.

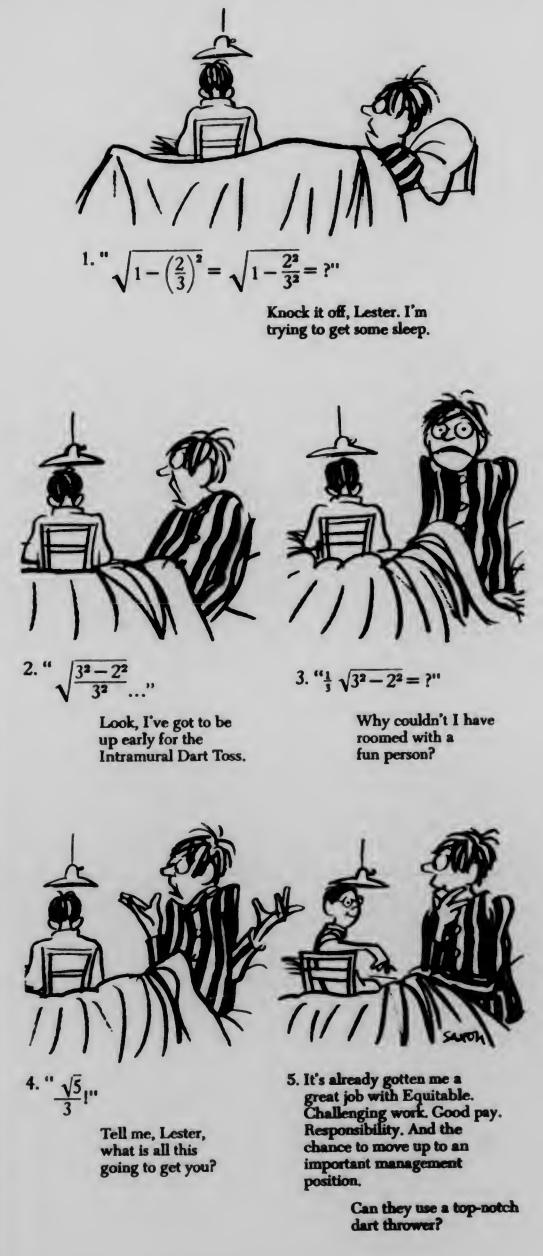
Don't Panic!

Homecoming Dates Can Be Captured

Girls, muster your forces! Three days remain to capture your Homecoming date. Don't panic; here are some suggestions before you wave the white flag.

First, make an official declaration of war and commit yourself to your cause. Be merciless; any male who has held out this long deserves no pity. Don't waste time studying, unless it's with your handsome lab partner. An 'A' on your botany exam won't keep you from becoming a wallflower on Saturday night.

Budget your time. Stick to a schedule. Proper timing may mean the difference between victory and defeat.



Begin each day by carefully dressing to kill. A sloppy soldier commands no respect from the enemy. Rise early and plan surprise attacks. Spend no fewer than six hours each day in the Hatch. Never sit still; keep them guessing. Move from table to table, on the outlook for vulnerable faces.

Take side trips to the Libe smoking room, the Student Union lobby, and the Infirmary. Lurk behind trees; overlook no possibilities.

Don't waste meal time. Weak, hungry males can be victimized. Try a different Commons, stand in a long, congenial line, and sit alone.

Spend the evening on the telephone. Call every friend you've ever had and casually mention that you're free for the weekend. You can always use aid from other quarters. Don't forget the Hatch at nine for the study break.

When you've exhausted every approach, change your strategy. Break down a little, become a soft, affectionate female again, pick up the phone, and call your high-school sweetheart. After all, he hasn't heard from you in a long while, and he'd just love to come up for Homecoming. Remember, all's fair in love and war, and this isn't love.

The Sign Syndrome—Part II

The administration and some students feel that if the window signs go uncensored, problems will arise which will force reaction.

First, censorship robs the individual of his responsibility, and identity. He cannot say or post what he thinks. Censorship thwarts the educational process which is the reason for the existence of this University.

Second, objectionability is totally impossible to define or fairly apply as can be seen in the proceedings of the Supreme Court. How can we expect to accomplish this?

In a memo to the Southwest Heads of Residence and their respective House Councils, Drs. Shute and Brubacher tried their best. All signs must be "presentable to any reasonable member of the University or public" and no sign can contain any "outright" or "implied" obscenity, they said.

Implied and outright obscenity would seem to include all sex and excretory functions as objectionable. Sex is a man-woman relationship, thus a sign stating "I like girls" would have to be removed. Defacation is the end process of digestion, thus "I like to eat food" would be similarly obscene.

To resolve this absurdity many try to place a demarcation point somewhere in these processes of sex and excretion. How can someone condone the man-woman relationship by sponsoring dances and yet refuse to accept its psychological consequences.

The statement "presentable to any reasonable member of the campus" is riddled with ambiguity. Is the average Massachusetts taxpayer reasonable? He may look at a sign and want it removed. To allow signs to be censored by this criterion is absurd in three ways:

- Almost every sign would be objectionable to someone.
- Removing a sign does not erase its cause.
- Suppression of an opinion makes the belief either more ingrained or the suppression creates a non-thinking complier.

There is no reason to warp reality in order to make it palatable to some who cannot cope with it.

Yet if the administration decides to accept this line, why should they stop at windows. Sex is apparently disturbing to many, thus we had better stop ethics and physiology classes in their discussions on these topics.

God and religion is dear to the hearts of many good Americans, so stop the questioning of God in philosophy classes.

To say that subjects covered in classes are not fit for humor is just hypocrisy.

Not A Day For Drakes

To the editor:

A funny thing happened to me on my way home from the Drake about a year ago. I hope no one else at UMass will ever be so treated by remorseless fate. Relentlessly and ruthlessly pursued from tavern to tavern by the men in blue: this has been my poor harassed life from then to now.

It all began, as I say, about a year ago when I met a large white rabbit. I had just entered the Drake on this, my 21st birthday. Friday the 13th—my parent's lucky day but not mine. Since this wasn't the Playboy Club I wondered if I should not drink at all that night. He came over to me, however, and said his name was Harvey. He called me Elwood. I bought him a beer or two, and we had a good talk.

We were coming out of the Drake and I was crawling across the street just to show my age. Harvey, after having helped me up and propped me up against an elm, said, "Good night, sot!" Well, after that it must have been our laughter that alerted the men in blue. I dove behind the tree (police records indicating that I fell are absolutely untrue) in exercising my constitutional right to assemble where I please. My constitutional right to petition was overrun indifferently with this one. "Please don't arrest me!" I petitioned. They did not listen, Mr. Editor!

Well, I didn't have any idea what they were arresting me for. They asked me, "How many drinks did you have?" I answered, "Two—one for Harvey and one for me." But there I stopped. It must have been the yeast (I've been allergic to yeast since then). My mind was spinning and Harvey was gone. I was so bad, Mr. Editor, that I wasn't even able to resist arrest! From then to the cell my mind is blank except I remember saying over and over again, quite distinctly, "Offiza, offiza, I'm az sober az you."

I awoke in a cell too small for two people. Yet — Harvey was there—and without a blanket! He said they had given him no carrots or phone service, either. "They just better not charge us," he said. I said we wouldn't pay for such quarters. I was released on personal recognizance but had to leave Harvey. They dragged me away from the desk sobbing.

Since then my life has been one of utter misery and terrible loneliness. I have hunted every tavern for that rabbit, in season and out, without success. Only recently I heard a rumor which I seized with joy that Harvey had become editor of a campus newspaper. Such are the circumstances of this writing:

Oh, if there is a god in Heaven, please bless and protect Harvey. And if you are truly the editor, dear pookah, keep well and stay out of the Drake!

The Campus Pond

To the editor:

Can't anything be done to clean up that quagmire of filth located in the center of campus. It would be a shame to have those beautiful swans die by suffocation, strangled by creeping algæ. Besides it looks awful (and the beer bottles might be worth some money).

John R. Kelley III '69
Easthampton

(Editor's Note: An explanation of why the University is letting nature take its course in the campus pond was recently given by UM landscape architect William A. Lambert.

Two reasons for not using chemical controls, he said, stand out. The first reason is the heavy use of the pond as an outdoor classroom; for example, by entomology students.

The second reason for not using chemicals is that permission would have to be obtained from all the other authorities that have jurisdiction over the water areas (from here to the Connecticut Rv.) that are fed by the water which passes through the pond. Such permission would not be likely, Lambert indicated.

He also explained that the pond is polluted largely because of the bacteria which the water picks up in its 360-acre trip to the campus. While heavy rain alleviates the problem, there has been "almost none in Amherst" this August and September.

Lambert pointed out that the University rakes out as much of the debris that it can, but campus-wide labor demands make it impossible to give the raking job greater attention. As to the charge that swans might die because of the algae, he explained that our particular type of swans actually live off the algae.

Lambert went on to say that an addition of about ten swans to the two now living in the pond would keep the algae situation near equilibrium (the swans also make it possible for the algae to continue growing).

Swans go for about $150, the campus landscape architect said. We suggest that the Class of 1968 investigate the feasibility of a "lively" class gift.)

No Botanist He

To the editor:

In reference to the "Viewpoint" on Dr. Drum, Mr. Story mentioned briefly that he wasn't "on hand to see the rat lose its head." Evidently he wasn't "on hand" to hear of some of the latest developments in the fight against cancer. Are things such as the eradication of 98.5% of cancerous tumors so trivial?

How can he say that the truly inspirational lectures such as the ones given on the natural rhythms of life or on feelings and emotions aren't related to Botany?

Just how ridiculous are lectures on the life cycles of leaves or the human problems that are encountered in the space program?

As for the educational process in which he questions the use of lights and music, since when are new teaching methods taboo? I am not taking this course as a requirement, but as an educational experience. Each time I leave that class I have a feeling of enlightenment which is something that I can't say I derive from all my classes.

I doubt very much if each of Dr. Drum's lectures are packed by students who are profoundly interested in learning all about irrelevencies. Who in their right mind would sacrifice a World Series game to hear "bunk"? It's about time someone started letting the student learn instead of having to be taught!

The BOYS FROM NEW YORK CITY, a very energetic group, are on the bill for Saturday evening's Homecoming concert. The group, which "gets the audience completely involved," has had a million-seller "Twelfth Night."

Sunday . . .

Surrealistic Beauty

The Sunday concert at 2 P.M. will provide a good variety of top entertainers. Featured in the two hour concert will be Stan Getz and his Orchestra, Janice Ian, and the British singer Donovan.

Since his first hit, "To Catch the Wind," Donovan has become one of the biggest international popular singers and the symbol of the hippy cult.

Donovan is best known for his albums. His songs stress surrealistic beauty over harsh reality.

Donovan described his style, "My songs are merely dreams visiting to my mind," in the song Celeste on the Mellow Yellow album.

The 42 year old musician Stan Getz has been recording hits for over twenty years. He can claim being a part of almost every major musical craze since the '40's.

Getz began his career with the Big Band era. He was part of Benny Goodman's, Stan Kenton's and Jimmy Dorsey's bands as well as many others.

He traveled around the country and the world as a saxophone player. Benny Goodman maintains that Getz is the finest sax player that he has ever heard.

When the Big Band era faded, Getz formed his own Quartets and Quintets. He maintained his popularity when he pushed the Bossa Nova craze in 1962.

Getz's most recent hit was, "The Girl from Ipanima." Presently touring the country, Getz considers himself, "Just a melody maker".

Although only 16, Janice Ian has run into some big complications with her singing. When she tried to get a record company to cut her hit single, "Society's Child," Ian found most company's shunned the song.

Everywhere she went, the young singer found that the companies were afraid of the implications that might result from a song that dealt with such a touchy point—mixed marriages. Ian eventually cut the single and it was a hit.

Saturday Night . . .

Happenings Headline Show

Now that the Homecoming Committee has recovered from the theft of 2,000 tickets for the Saturday concert, tickets for the 7 p.m. show are on sale to the campus. There are also tickets left for the 10:30 show.

Featured during the two performances are Mitch Ryder, The Box Tops, The Blues Magoos, The Happenings, the Virginians, and the Boys from New York City.

There aren't many white Americans who can sing the blues, but Mitch Ryder is quite an exception. Born William Levise, Jr. in 1945, the singer was an early enthusiast of blues.

He changed his name to Mitch Ryder when he was with the Detroit Wheels. Then he went on his own. Presently, Ryder has a complete show with ten accompanists and numerous special effects equipment.

His latest single, "Sock It To Me Baby," has been on the top charts for sometime. Ryder is renowned for becoming completely involved in his act.

Perhaps the best way to describe Ryder is to compare him to the Negro blues singer James Brown.

The Virginians travel with Mitch Ryder and begin his show. They have a refined quality similar to the Lettermen.

Some groups have the ability to make all their singles hits. The Happenings are one of these types of groups. They have made hits with "Mame," "I've Got Rhythm", and "See You In September." All these singles have been million dollar hits.

They have a refined style and put on a show rather than an unrehearsed group of songs. They are considered to have the polish of the Beach Boys but a quality all their own.

The Box Tops have a similar style. However, their single, "The Letter", which is now on the top fifty charts, is the best description of the group.

Unlike these refined groups, the Blues Magoos are considered to be the originators of the psychedelic sound that is the latest rock craze.

The Blues Magoos started in Greenwich Village, New York City. Now the five man group is on continual tour, literally electrifying audiences.

Among other things they wear clothes that are woven with electrical wiring, resulting in a luminous appearance. They also use visual light images and projectors.

However, The Boys from New York City exceed even the Magoos. The Boys are an energy group. They put on a show that usually gets the audience completely involved.

As part of their performance they frequently jump off the stage and toss their instruments around stage. They have had one hit single, "Twelfth Light", that has sold over a million copies.

Saturday evening's concert should prove to be equal to, if not more energy packed, than the Wonder-Pickett concert of three weeks ago.

Friday Night . . .

Psychedelic Time

The Friday dance following the parade and rally will be unusual to anyone's mind. The dance will include the group, The Proof Of the Pudding, and the light and sound show, "After the Third World Raspberry," under the direction of Al Rubin.

There will be two 50 minute shows put on by Rubin during the evening. Mats will be spread on the floor as seats.

Rubin is a 23 year old artist from Boston who became interested in the Psychedelic light and sound shows that became popular last year.

The show includes five slide projectors, three motion picture projectors, five 12 foot high screens, a 30 foot wide stage, and the New York group, The New Life.

Rubin's production has received praise from almost every critic where the show has appeared. It is considered to have more depth and imagination than Andy Warhol's numerous light and sound shows.

The basic intention of a psychedelic show is total use of lights and sounds to convey feelings. In order to do this, the entire barrage of effects has to be synchronized.

The Boston artist is accredited with the most related show of this type. The audience is virtually controlled by the tension created by the visual and vocal assaults of the show.

Between the two shows, there will be dancing in the Ballroom. The Proof of The Pudding — formerly The Shakers—will play at the dance.

The Illinois based group has received increasing support from critics in the past few months. They presently are about to release their first single record.

The Friday night show is not something that should be attended by neurotic people. The tension created by the lights and the deafening sound is enough to unnerve even the football team.

UMass Plans Seminars At Three European Universities

By FRANCIS CLINES
Staff Reporter

Caution. Plans now underway on campus could radically affect your diet next summer. An anti-pasta mafia diligently works in Arnold. Yorkshire pudding and paella groups have headquarters in Bartlett.

Watch out. You could spend the summer of '68 feeding your intellect at one of three European Universities. Notices will soon be posted around campus. The plotters could entice you away from your usual summer rituals and whisk you off to Bologna, Oxford or Madrid.

The plans are for University of Massachusetts sponsored seminars abroad. Students select two three-credit courses from a delicious assortment. Further enticements include lecture series, theatre performances, planned tours and independent travel time.

Armed with two previous years of success, the Bologna programmers set their sights on qualified upperclassmen and graduate students. Dr. Howard H. Quint, 133 Arnold House, Bologna Seminar Director, announced that the 65 selected students will arrive in Milan on June 20 and return home August 29. Classes end August 12.

Courses will include Renaissance Art, Roman History, Modern Italian Literature (in translation) and Renaissance History. Classes are held four days a week for seven weeks in the air conditioned John Hopkins School for Advanced International Studies.

Bologna side dishes are as tempting as the main courses. Students live in pensiones or apartments close to the University of Bologna, the oldest university in Europe. Week end field trips and a mid-term break to Rome are part of the program. Students, said Dr. Quint, pick up a good deal of Italian simply by associating with the residents of non-touristy Bologna.

The approximate cost, including room and board for the first seven weeks, for Massachusetts residents is $850., for non-residents $880. Applications will be available in Dr. Quint's office after this week. The deadline for applying is March 1.

The Oxford Seminar is directed by Dr. Ernest H. Hofer, 106 Bartlett Hall. Use caution if your have taken 15 or more English courses and have averaged "B" or better in them. You could be punting down the Charwell during a study break next summer.

Courses, all under Oxford dons, include Chaucer, Milton, Shakespeare, Modern Novel, Modern Drama, Johnson, Swift and Dickens. Independent graduate research is encouraged.

The 65 graduates and 65 undergraduates who arrive in London on June 24 will live at St. Hilda's College, Oxford, from July 2 to August 14. Independent travel time includes the 1st week and an optional period from August 14 to September 5.

Oxford Seminar members have Bodelian Library privileges. They can visit the other colleges of Oxford as well as the museum, parks, and pubs.

The $800. fee includes transportation, room, board, theatre tickets, planned tours, a guest lecture series and two nights in London. For those sufficiently enticed, the deadline for applications is December 1. Applications are now available in Dr. Hofer's office.

Graduate students and '69 seniors majoring in Spanish should be on the look out for Dr. Robert Bancroft. He directs the Madrid Summer Seminar, now in its second year.

45 qualified candidates will head for Madrid on June 20 and return August 14. Seminrs, led by Spanish writers, scholars and professors, will meet from June 24 until August 4. An optional tour of southern Spain is scheduled for August 5-13.

Literature seminars, an undergraduate art and architecture course and supervised graduate study projects are offered.

The Madrid program offers endless attractions for Spanish majors. Seminar members can elect to live with families or in pensiones. A summer festival takes place in el Plaza Meyor in July. Week end trips are an integral part of the program.

The cost, not including the last optional tour, has decreased this year to $875. for Massachusetts residents and $905. for others. The deadline for applying is February 1.

Take care. These programs could change your life in ways you least expect. Operas might never again have the impact of the one you see at the Verona Colisseum or at Covent Gardens. You might get nervous when you do not have to pack a suitcase every few weeks.

You could come back from England calling telephone booths "kiosks," from Spain wanting sangria with diner, from Italy wishing all the art courses you take could be near the Museo Circeo and Palazzo Accurseo.

More importantly, Your summer will be spent working closely with distinguished faculty members and satisfying a growing intellectual appetite.

Further warning: These programs are not content to recruit UMass. students alone. O no. Qualified students from all over the country apply. You may be bicycling down the Broad toward the Bodelian with a Dartmouth student next summer, visiting Florence with a Mt. Holyoke girl, or sharing pan and vino with a Berkeley grad.

So please be careful. Make sure you apply for the program for which you are qualified. Apply soon to be sure that you get the courses you want. Your summer diet, if it usually consists of hamburgers at the beach or even steak and cocktails paid for by your employer, might be improved.

Private Phones Hopeful for Some

By BARBARA CAMEAU
Staff Reporter

Revealed last Wednesday by Robert N. Brooks, Assistant to the Dean of Students, were several new details in the plans for the private student telephone service.

According to Brooks, the availability of "funds" for installation and "the capability of the telephone company to provide lines" are important factors in deciding whether or not a dormitory will have private student telephones.

Brooks explained that all of the newer dormitories have been built with the physical facilities for private telephones, but older dormitories would require the expensive installation of a pipe to carry telephone wiring throughout the building.

Brooks further explained that some of the 15 dormitories without private telephones will "never" have them "because of technical billing problems" caused by the education block, and "to provide an alternative" for students who can't afford, or don't want, the service.

House Comm. Approves Raise For Servicemen

By ROBERT A. HUNT

Without a dissenting vote, the House Armed Services Committee approved a pay raise for 3.5 million servicemen Tuesday designed to keep pace with a pending three-stage boost for federal civilian employes.

It could cost $2.7 billion a year in 1969.

The committee, in a 40 to 0 show of strength, also took action to see that the military gets comparable increases granted classified employes in the future.

The bill provides a 4.5 per cent increase for servicemen in the current fiscal year which actually translates into a 5.6 per cent boost in basic pay. The balance would be distributed among such things as allowances, re-enlistment bonuses and separation pay. It would be retroactive to Oct. 1.

The first-year cost is estimated at more than $600 million.

It would be the fifth year in a row that men and women in the armed forces got a pay raise. A $1.2 billion one was voted in 1963, a $207 million 1964, $1 billion in 1965 and $356.6 million last year.

Rivers, who said he plans to seek House consideration "as soon as possible," took note of the administration's support for a three-stage pay boost for federal employes but only a 4.5 per cent increase for the military.

Rivers said he hopes a Defense Department study now under way will result in recommendations that will enable Congress to carry out the President's view that "as civilian pay goes up, so should the pay of the armed services."

But Rivers said he is reluctant to "ignore the possibility that future military pay increases might somehow become the victim of executive branch bureaucracy."

It is for this reason, he said, that the committee included language to insure that, if for one reason or another, either the President or the Congress fails to act affirmatively on additional military pay increases comparable to that provided civilian workers the armed forces would be insured an automatic and equivalent adjustment in compensation.

Leaman Undertakes Hoop Youth Movement

Coach Jack Leaman, starting his second year as UMass head basketball coach, has a young squad with only two returning lettermen from last year's team. Capt. Bill Tindall, 6'5 forward, and junior Joe DiSarcina, 5'11 guard, were the returnees.

Tindall, who is on his way to setting many of the Redmen scoring and rebounding records, was chosen first team All Yankee

TINDALL DiSARCINA

Conference and first team All New England in 1966-67. He led UMass with 430 points for a 17.2 average and was second with 273 rebounds.

DiSarcina, an outstanding ballhandler and playmaker, broke the UMass record for assists with 154.

Other members of last year's team who reported were seniors Greg Rand, 6'5 center; Rick Perkins, 6'3 guard; Gary Gasperack, 6'4 forward; and Jim Girotti, 6'4 forward; and juniors Ron Nowakowski, 6'4 forward; Peter Gayeska, 6'9 center; and John Dreyer, 6'6 center.

Sophomores included Jack Gallagher, 6'4 forward; Ray Ellerbrook, 6'1 guard; Dick Samuelson, 6'6 center; and John Shockro, 6'2 guard. Shockro missed all of last season with a broken jaw and was a standout on the 1965-66 frosh team.

Two junior college newcomers were 6'5 center Jim Sulesky from St. Gregory's Jr. College in Shawnee, Oklahoma, and 6'4 forward Rich Crowley from Kendall Jr. College in Illinois.

Math Major Cellilli Figures of Soccer Title

By JOEL FOX
Staff Reporter

"He is a controlled-type ball player who thinks under pressure," says soccer coach Larry Briggs of Co-captain Jerry Cellilli.

The senior left wing, who led UMass in scoring last year, set up two of the Redmen's three goals in the opener at Maine.

Cellilli has "matured" as a team player since last year, according to Briggs, partially because of the fact that he was elected captain.

Cellilli, who was "very honored to be chosen a co-captain by the team," finds that his main duty as captain is to keep up the team's spirit.

His soccer career began at Ludlow High, where he played on a perennial Western Massachusetts soccer power. In his senior year at Ludlow, he led his team to the first annual state soccer championship.

A math major, Cellilli plans to enter business or teaching upon graduation if he decides not to go to graduate school. But for now, he is thinking about soccer.

On the Redmen's chances in the Yankee Conference this season, he said, "We have a great chance. We beat Connecticut over the weekend in a big game.

"That means that the biggest game probably will be with Vermont and we'll play them at home this year. Last season we played up at Vermont in the big game for the title and they won, 1-0."

But this year is a different story, and if Cellilli's optimism is any indication, the Conference soccer crown just may return to UMass.

'M' Club Honors Landry, McArdle

Greg Landry and Mike McArdle have won recognition from the Varsity "M" Club for their play in Saturday's 35-14 victory over Connecticut.

Landry gained 200 yards rushing and 41 yards passing to set a new UMass career total yardage record of 3518, eclipsing Jerry Whelchel's old mark of 3426, set in 1964.

McArdle stood out in the defensive secondary, contributing several tackles.

Defensive tackle Kent Stevens was named to the weekly ECAC All-East eleevn.

Fusia's Reactions To UConn Films: 'Mixed Emotions'

By TOM FITZGERALD
Sports Editor

Coach Vic Fusia had a disturbing afterthought on the UConn game. "We watched the films with mixed emotions," he said. "We were pleased with the performances of some but unhappy with the performances of others."

Whether or not he hoped the comment would keep the team on its toes for Saturday's confrontation with Rhode Island, his talk was serious: "There are still some who we feel must come up to their potential."

But quicker than you can say "Oh Dad, Poor . . ." his frown softened as he called the victory the Redmen's "best team performance to date."

Fusia pointed out that linebacker Ernie Smith had tackled UConn quarterback Pete Petrillo before chasing Bill DiYeso, who had penetrated the UMass secondary on a seond period sweep. Smith, along with Paul Campbell, caught up with DiYeso at the UMass 15, momentarilly saving a Connecticut touchdown.

Plenty of credit was dished out by the coach to the defensive unit. Middle guard Bruce Gombar is "showing signs of his old self," said Fusia, who also praised the play of tackle Kent Stevens, ends Tom York and Paul Milnar and cornerbacks Mike McArdle and Bill Frye.

York and tackle Marty Scheralis will start again Saturday against Rhode Island, Fusia said. On offense, Jim Tutino, who looked so sharp against the Huskies, will replace Tim Driscoll at tailback.

Besides Tutino, the coach commended signal-caller Greg Landry, halfback Fred Hairston, fullback Bruce Cochrane and guards Bob Santucci and Don Glogowski for their offensive work. "We don't hear too much about Glogowski," he said, "but here's a fellow who always gets the job done."

Frosh Booters Bow to Amherst

The UMass freshman soccer team dropped a 3-2 heartbreaker to the Amherst frosh on the lower athletic field.

Coach Pete Broaca's Little Redmen outshot the Lord Jeffs, 34-20, but many shots hit the goal post and what would have been the tying goal in the fourth quarter was nullified by a penalty.

Rich Matwecyczak scored the first goal for UMass in the second period, and the team's leading scorer, Duane Brown, tallied in the fourth quarter. But two of the Amherst goals came on penalty kicks, and although the Little Redmen looked stronger, the Lord Jeffs finished on top.

It was the first loss for UMass in two games. The Little Redmen opened the season last Saturday by bombing the Tufts freshmen 8-0. Brown scored the hat trick in that one, and added to his goal yesterday, he now has four scores on the season.

Lang, Cross-country Team Rip Rhody

By GLENN BRIERE
Assistant Sports Editor

Taking four of the first five places, the UMass cross-country team breezed past Rhode Island, 19-36, in a dual home meet yesterday.

Junior Charley Lang won his second consecutive race, and although his time of 26:01 was nowhere near his course record of 25:35.5, set last Friday, he found the going easy after the first three miles of the 4.9 mile course.

Paul Hoss grabbed second for UMass with a time of 26:10 and Co-captains Marc Gelinas and Greg Bowman wrapped it up with fourth and fifth place finishes.

Throughout the first half of the race, Lang ran neck-and-neck with Rhode Island's ace, senior Charlie McGinnis. But as they approached the three-mile mark, Lang pulled ahead to stay.

Hoss, also a junior, passed the tiring McGinnis at the four-mile mark. McGinnis finished third for URI with a time of 26:36, while Gelinas was clocked in 27:09 and Bowman in 27:26.

Rounding out the top five for UMass was sophomore Dave Evans, who placed sixth with a time of 27:58. Other Redmen finishers were Diego Gonzales, 11th, and Ron Ryan, 12th.

Coach Bill Footrick was pleased with the team's performance, the Redmen's third win in five tries. Footrick had praise for his one-two punch of Lang and Hoss, but added, "Gelinas and Bowman made the difference."

The Rams have failed to win in five meets to date. UMass' next meet is Saturday at Boston College.

The UMass freshman harriers dropped a 28-30 meet to the Rhode Island frosh before yesterday's varsity meet. The Little Redmen's sensational duo of Ron Wayne and Leo Duart again tied for first place with a time of 19:00 over the 3.6 mile course.

But only one UMass runner, Tom Derderian, managed to break into the next seven places. He ended up fifth. oCach Ken O'Brien's frosh are now one-two on the season and also travel to Boston College Saturday for a meet against the B.C. freshmen.

Booters Eye Third in Row

Looking for its third straight victory of the young season, the UMass soccer team travels to Hartford today to meet Trinity College at 3:30 p.m.

The Redmen will have the added incentive of revenge as Trinity beat them last year, 4-0. Two of Trinity's goals, however, came on freak shots.

Trinity has another strong team this year. The Bantams are undefeated having beat MIT, Union and Tufts. UMass coach Larry Briggs calls Trinity "one of the best coached teams in the East".

Briggs plans a few lineup changes. Steve Kramer will start in goal and either Frank Howard or Dave Jekanoski will play at right fullback. Gery Cellilli is a doubtful starter due to an injury suffered Monday.

University Photo Center

TOO SMALL? — Many informed observers predict that with UMass' increasing enrollment, Alumni Stadium will not be able to accomodate enough spectators with just 22,000 seats.

Stadium Expansion Still Far Off

By WALT STACHURA
Staff Reporter

Expansion of Alumni Stadium is just in the early planning stages. While the 2-year old stadium's seating capacity of 22,000 is adequate now, University officials realize more room will be needed in the years ahead, according to Sports Information Director Dick Page.

Reasons for the planned expansion, he said, are a growing student body and increasing season ticket sales.

Early expansion has not been considered seriously because the stadium has yet to be filled. The top crowd was 18,700 for the BU Homecoming game last year.

Page said that the stadium's capacity has not been reached because of a lack of support by the general public.

Parking, in the beginning, was another problem. The addition of University Drive, however, helped relieve the problem by providing additional access.

The closing of the Route 116 bridge proved a new problem this fall. But, Page said once the traffic pattern settles down, parking will be no problem.

Page pointed out that there is not a bad seat in the stadium. Even from the far corners of the end sections, the action can be seen clearly.

During its Sept. 30 visit, the American Broadcasting Co. camera crew praised the stadium facilities. One sportscaster remarked about the fine playing condition of the field despite heavy rain the day before.

Page said that the press facilities are among the best in the East. The 146-ft. long press box will accomodate 75.

The Stadium, which cost $1,400,000, was built by the UMass Building Authority at no cost to the taxpayers.

Construction began Aug. 27, 1964, by the H. P. Madone Co., Inc. It was completed in Sept. 1965, just in time for the Redmen's home opener against AIC.

The dedication took place Oct. 16, 1965, a Homecoming game against Rhode Island.

Team rosters are due Oct. 23 for intramural bowling, which opens Oct. 30. All teams will be fighting for unit points toward the Stephen Davis Award, the Olympus, President's and Provost's Cups.

This year's defending champs are the James Comanchees, dorms, and Phi Mu Delta, fraternities. The Comanchees won the campus title. Last year's individual winners were Ronald Tiberio of the Grayson Aces, high average, and Richard D'Andrea of the Greenough Grants, high single and high three.

UMass Redmen and the Rhode Island Rams will clash at Alumni Stadium Saturday, as part of annual Homecoming Activities.

Homecoming Festivities To Welcome Alumni

Football, floats, fall foliage and folk music will share the spotlight this weekend October 20-22 at the University of Massachusetts as returning alumni and students join in a myriad of homecoming festivities.

The graduates, 5000 strong, will be returning to UMass for a weekend of activities replete with dances, dinners, concerts, a parade, a football game and the annual meeting of the UMass Associate Alumni.

The weekend's main attraction will be the Yankee Conference football game between Vic Fusia's Redmen and the University of Rhode Island Rams at 1:30 p.m., Saturday on University of Massachusetts Alumni Field. The Redmen are undefeated against Yankee Conference competition and are seeking to repeat as conference champions.

The 1967 Homecoming Queen, who will reign over the weekend, and her court, will be introduced to spectators at halftime of the football game.

Kick-off for the weekend will be Friday night with the traditional float parade starting at 6 p.m., followed by a rally. The parade, with about 60 floats, the Precisionettes and the Flying Redmen, will start from the Whitmore Administration Building parking lot, move along Lincoln Avenue and Amity Street to North Pleasant Street to the Student Union via Ellis Drive.

A homecoming rally, bonfire and psychedelic light and sound show featuring "After The Third World Raspberry," will follow the parade on the Student Union south terrace.

The annual meeting of the UMass Associate Alumni will be held at 10 a.m. on Saturday at Memorial Hall.

A fantasy of fall foliage colors will provide the backdrop for this year's tailgate picnics before the football game in the north parking lot of the stadium. About 2000 alumni are expected to gather for lunch and to swap stories of their UMass days.

Following the football game, an alumni-faculty social hour will be held in Memorial Hall at 6 p.m.

Two concerts are scheduled for Saturday evening at 7 and 10:30 p.m. in Curry Hicks Cage, featuring the Box Tops, the Mitch Ryder Show, the Blues Magoos and the Boys from New York City. The concert is open to the public and tickets may be obtained at the Student Union box office.

Two dances will be held the same evening, the Homecoming Dance at 8 p.m. in the Student Union ballroom, and a faculty-alumni dance at 9 p.m. in Memorial Hall.

Jazz musician Stan Getz and folk singers Donavan and Janis Ian will close the homecoming weekend with a concert Sunday afternoon in the Cage at 2 p.m. the concert is open to the public and tickets are on sale at the Student Union box office.

Two Open Houses This Weekend

By PAT FRANCIS
Staff Reporter

"Every house on campus may have two open houses this weekend." So stated Associate Dean of Students Mark Noffsinger last night at a discussion in Southwest Dining Commons No. 5.

The discussion, sponsored by John Adams Middle centered mainly on student, faculty and administration opinions on the open house policy on campus.

Noffsinger's statement came in the course of answering a question about bypassing channels to obtain quicker results for a change in the open house policy now standing.

He stated that he had on his desk a petition from John Adams Upper House informing the administration that, as of November 1, that house will have one open house per week. He also stated that he had a petition from Grayson House, to inform him of the fact that they were having two open houses this weekend. Noffsinger met with President Lederle and received permission to allow the open houses.

Noffsinger stated that he considers the request very reasonable, and that the extension will apply to every house on campus. Whether the decision is made by house councils or by house vote, is left up to the houses to decide.

Other members of the faculty panel were Donald Tepper, Staff Assistant in the Dean of Men's Southwest Office; Sidney Wexler, a member of the Faculty Senate from the Spanish Dept.; John Adams Middle Head of Residence, John P., and Mrs Sawyer; Mrs. Norma Bialas, Head of Residence of John Quincy Adams Middle.

Also, Clarence Shute, Master of the Southwest Residential Complex, Fresia Bradford of the Spanish Dept.; Robert Pope of History Dept.; and Donald N. Maynard, Chairman of the Faculty Senate Student Affairs Committee.

Maynard will present the Open House proposal to the Faculty Senate when it comes up for action.

Moderator for the discussion was Steve Camara, Faculty Fellow Chairman of John Adams Middle. He opened by stating "No one is in favor of the current Open House policy. I think I can safely say that". He set the keynote for the forum as a means for students and faculty to find out how both feel about the question of open houses, how the present policy should be changed and the mechanics of the change.

The faculty and administration representatives fielded questions from the floor, composed of about 150 students, the great majority of whom were men.

Some attention was centered on the fact that so much red tape had to be used to pass the proposal. The question of whether a direct petition to President Lederle and the Board of Trustees could be made was raised, but Noffsinger suggested that it was inadvisable, since it could hurt the cause more than help it.

Eric Goldman, a resident of John Adams Middle, inquired about inviting the Board of Trustees to a future program, to ascertain their views on the Open House question. He requested permission to state that Noffsinger urged their acceptance of the invitation. Noffsinger agreed to the request, and offered to help get the invitation through the proper channels, to facilitate matters.

The main complaint of those present seemed to be that it was difficult to get straight answers about who made decisions regarding open houses, and why there was so much diversity of policy regarding doors, hours, etc.

The following were among points made:

Door policy differences in

Rusk Cautions Congress On Import Reprecussions

WASHINGTON (AP)—Secretary of State Dean Rusk cautioned Wednesday that a drive in Congress to curb imports can bring appalling repercussions on the national economy and harsh reprisals on its export industries.

Rusk led off the testimony of four Cabinet officers. The Johnson administration wheeled its big guns into a jam-packed hearing room on Capitol Hill to counter the threat of an omnibus import quota bill. It is spearheaded by Senate Republican Leader Everett M. Dirksen of Illinois.

The secretaries — Stewart L. Udall of Interior, Orville L. Freeman of Agriculture, Alexander B. Trowbridge of Commerce, and Rusk — forecast a global trade war if, as they described it, America reverses a 33-year-old expansionist trade policy.

But Dirksen ran into opposition among his Senate Finance Committee colleagues to Dirksen's announced plan to attach the quota amendments to the popular Social Security bill, to avoid a presidential veto.

Sen. George A. Smathers, D-Fla., started off with the opinion the rider would be unwise. Sen. Abraham Ribicoff, D-Conn., who is co-sponsor of some quota legislation, called it "the height of irresponsibility."

House Passes Bill To Cut Federal Spending

WASHINGTON (AP)— The House Wednesday night passed a bill designed to cut government spending an estimated $7 billion in the year ending June 30.

Fighting to hold down proposed cuts in Pres. Johnson's budget, administration supporters were defeated again and again in a complex struggle that ended with Republicans and Southern Democrats triumphant.

Nailed into a measure to continue emergency financing for departments whose appropriations are still pending—and which will be out of money next Monday unless Congress acts — were two massive spending limitations.

One would require that spending this year be held at the level of the previous year—except the Vietnam war and certain other specified activities.

This provision was sponsored by Rep. Jamie L. Whitten, D-Miss.

Added to it was another limitation that was backed solidly by Republicans, headed by Rep. Frank T. Bow of Ohio. It would set what Bow called an absolute ceiling of $131.5 billion on spending this year—a cut of not less than $5 billion, but estimated by some Democrats as much higher.

Whitten told the House his measure would mean about a $7 billion cut.

The bill now goes to the Senate which is expected to modify sharply if not delete the limitations. This would leave the issue to be fought out in a Senate-House conference.

Lost in the struggle was a painfully worked out measure the House Appropriations Com. had offered. This aimed at a $2.85 billion budget reduction, including a $1.4 billion cut in present spending, through a combination of payroll reductions and slashes in research funds.

The House debated the bill for hours, amended it extensively, then abruptly junked it by a 238-164 vote and substituted the combined Whitten and Bow measures.

Roman Catholics Urge Pope to Ease Birth Control

ROME (AP) — The first Roman Catholic World Laity Congress in 10 years ended Wednesday night with a blunt and dramatic appeal to Pope Paul VI to let couples decide about birth control for themselves.

The appeal introduced a powerful new element in the Church's birth control picture. The forceful message was the first from lay leaders of the half-billion-member Church to the pontiff to change the Churches rules on contraception.

A resolution containing the stand on birth control was formally approved at the plenary session of the congress.

The meeting climaxed a hectic week in which the 2,500 delegates debated some of the most pressing problems in the present day Church.

A wide range of other resolutions were also approved, including one condemning racism and another calling on the Church to give greater rights to women.

None of the resolutions required a vote of the full congress.

They had been approved by the congress's executive body of delegation heads and no delegate rose to question them when the president for Wednesday, Jose Alvarez-Icaza of Mexico, banged his gavel and proclaimed them the official position of the group.

The statement on women's rights included an appeal that women be included on all pontifical commissions. This caused a considerable buzz among the 100 bishops and cardinals, many from the synod, seated in the front rows of the hall as observers.

OPEN HOUSE RULES . . .

men's and women's dorms result from the separate jurisdiction of those deans.

The current open house policy (one per month) was an arbitrary decision made in 1965, with others, including curfew changes. It is now coming out as an issue in its own right.

More time was alloted for Open Houses last year because of an error stating the hours in the handbook, but this year, the intended original policy has been returned.

Several of the students commented that, as long as they have to live under these rules, they should be the ones to make them. One student also noted that, if fear of the taxpayers is a reason for hesitancy, it should be remembered that students are taxpayers, since they do work, and hence, should still have the most say about what happens to them.

An unidentified girl ended the comments by remarking "The faculty aren't really prudes at all—they are a bunch of people, and want to help us; so I say let them help".

College of Arts and Sciences Opens Information Center

By JOYCE ROTH
Staff Reporter

The sign on the door in South College read "CASIAC", and thinking it was a new abbreviation for "Cashier's Office", the student entered. It was not until he asked for his paycheck that he discovered that CASIAC distributes not money but information.

The ex-cashier's office is now the home of the College of Arts and Sciences Information and Advisory Center — or CASIAC. After a year of research and organization, the new program opened its doors on September 12.

CASIAC has been planned to serve a dual purpose. As an information center, it will provide readily accessible, accurate, up-to-date facts for the benefit of all arts and science students. At present, students may refer to CASIAC for knowledge of course requirements and available electives.

Next spring the program will take an added significance as a reference center for the new pass-fail grading system to begin in February. According to Associate Dean Robert Wagner, a member of CASIAC's Board of Directors, the pass-fail system itself is "not yet clearly defined, but CASIAC will distribute accurate information as soon as we receive it."

The second function of CASIAC is its role as advisor to freshmen who prefer not to choose a major immediately upon entering the University. The faculty members who comprise CASIAC's staff have taken this year's indecisive freshmen as their advisees. These 185 students representing about ⅛ of the Class of 1971 have until their second semester sophomore year to make up their minds. Until this time they take the basic arts and sciences requirements common to all departments in the college, and are temporarily listed as "CAS" majors!

The reason behind this newly available convenience for freshmen has some interesting statistics. The freshman class which entered the University in September, 1964 enacted enough major changes to represent 40% of their class!

Not to be beaten, the sophomore class of that same year completed "Change of Major" cards also amounting to 40% of their class population! CASIAC's freshman advisory function has been conceived to eliminate or at least to reduce the tremendous strain that these changes put on the Registrar's Office.

As a pioneer of CASIAC at the University, Dean Wagner gives credit to other large schools where the idea behind CASIAC was hatched. "The Universities of Michigan, Wisconsin, and Washington all have workable systems similar to CASIAC. We compared notes with these schools in preparation for our own program," he said. The Dean also noted that our own School of Engineering has successfully employed a similar program for several years now.

Still in a developing stage, CASIAC presently involves about 30 arts and sciences faculty members who are screened by a Board of Directors before they may participate in the program. The Board consists of Associate Dean Wagner and Assistant Deans Savereid, MacFarland and Rollason.

Although the program is in its initial stages, it does show promise for the future. An information and advisory center for liberal arts students should attract questions from a majority of the UMass student population.

Four College Council News

A booklet offering a complete listing of the courses open to all students in the Four College area was among the discussion topics at the Four College Council meeting held in the Student Union Tuesday night.

Plans are being made to set up committees which will gather information to be used in a booklet distributed to the Four Colleges. The booklet will describe courses open to students from colleges other than the one it is being offered at.

Kit Armstrong, a Smith College sophomore, proposed the opening to the Four College area of unique extra-curricular activities. She cited as an example the UMass skydiving club.

A fund raising proposal was offered by the UMass representatives, Rebecca Steaman, Steve Weisman, Glenn Mangurian, and Bruce Balboni. It was decided that a silent film show would be run on each of the campuses this semester. Exact dates for the showings on each campus will be advertised.

Also discussed was the problem of Four College transportation. The Four College Council was influential in setting up the Four College bus last year.

Security Guard Assaulted At Hills North by Youth

By JAN CURLEY
News Day Editor

The Security Guard at Hills North was assaulted early Wednesday morning by a young man who entered the dorm with four companions.

According to the guard, who wishes not to be named at this time, he was on duty at Hills North at 2:15 a.m. when five young men came down the hall from the direction of Hills South.

The boys requested a directory from the guard to locate the address of a friend. The guard informed them that they should not be in the dorm since it was after midnight and, they were not residents. He offered to look up the address and told them they would have to leave the dorm to make the call.

In the course of the conversation the youths revealed that they were from Boston. After the guard located the address, the boys asked to use the intercom but were refused. As the companions walked down the corridor to the side door, the guard stated he followed them.

The guard then stated that the boys hesitated at the door. Four of them left, the guard asked the fifth member to leave, whereupon the boy grasped his right arm and struck him several times. In the course of the fracas, the security guard's glasses were knocked to the floor.

The guard stated that there was "no reason" for the attack, and that they were "looking for trouble, no doubt about that."

The police are continuing the searth for the assailant and his companions.

Juillard String Quartet to Give Chamber Music Concert in Bowker

The renowned Juilliard String Quartet will present a chamber music concert at the University of Massachusetts on Monday, October 23, at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

The concert is sponsored by the UMass department of music and is open to the public without charge.

Established in 1946, the Juilliard Quartet is considered the First Family of Chamber Music in the U.S. since its appointment as Quartet-in-Residence of the Library of Congress in 1962.

Entirely American - trained, they have carried the impact of American music-making into the world. They are champions of American composers, bringing before an ever increasing public works by Copland, Schuman, Piston, Sessions and Carter. Europe in particular has hailed the Juilliard Quartet for its interpretation of its very own masters. They have built up a repertoire of 135 works, ranging from the classics — Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert—to the moderns—Bartok, Webern, Schoenberg.

At the 1958 Bartok Festival in Budapest, the artists were enthusiastically acclaimed for their performance of the Hungarian composer's works; their Beethoven and Haydn took Germany, Vienna and the Salzburg Festival by storm. European tours have taken them all over the continent, this side and beyond the Iron Curtain. They have performed in 11 Far Eastern countries—Laos, Java, etc.

Among the highlights of their tours in '67-'68 is the complete cycle of all Beethoven Quartets in five concerts, two appearances at Hunter Coll.; a series each at UConn in Storrs, UMass (4 concerts) and UCLA.

Numerous recordings of the Juilliard String Quartet have been released by Columbia, Epic, and RCA Victor.

In matters of repertory, the Quartet claims "we are always happily united behind the principle which we adopted in 1946: to serve all music while retaining a special interest in modern works."

All concerts by the Juilliard String Quartet will be held in Bowker Auditorium in Stockbridge Hall at UMass. There is no admission charge for any of the concerts.

Mig Interceptor Shot Down by U.S. Fighter

SAIGON (AP)—A U.S. Air Force fighter-bomber shot down a MIG intercepter above Hanoi on Wednesday while other American warplanes pounded Haiphong and its outskirts and ranged close to Red China for a second straight day, U.S. Military headquarters said Thursday.

In South Vietnam, U.S. B52 bombers and artillery rained explosives Wednesday into suspected enemy positions in jungles northwest of Saigon after a day-long battle between America and Viet Cong infantrymen that took a heavy toll on both sides.

An Air Force F105 Thunderchief pilot brought down the challenging MIG 17 with 20mm cannon fire while his fellow pilots bombed a railroad bypass bridge only 19 miles northwest of Hanoi.

Tryouts Will Be Held Monday For Second Theatre Production

Open tryouts for Enrico IV, the second of this season's UT productions, will be held Monday and Tuesday evenings, Oct. 23-24, in 124 Bartlett starting at 7 p.m. Any grad or undergrad student may try out, whether he has had previous theatre experience or not.

Enrico IV is under the direction of Jim Young, Director of the UM Theatre, and will be presented in Bowker Auditorium December 6, 7, 8 and 9.

Many scholars and critics feel that Enrico IV is the most outstanding of the several fine plays created by Luigi Pirandello. It concerns a man in our own time who has allegedly become insane and manifests his insanity by pretending to be Henry IV of Germany, a headstrong leader who embroiled himself in conflict with the Church.

Through the introduction of well-meaning friends who hope to break "Henry" of his fantasy, Pirandello develops intricate paradoxes of illusion and reality and leaves the audience wondering whether it is madness or wisdom that impels the protagonist to pursue his anachronistic

The student in the Seminar program stays 2-8 weeks with a family in the Scandinavian country of his choice, using the language daily and sharing in the activities of the community. For the major part of the year he lives and studies among Scandinavians at a Folk High School —a residential school for young adults.

He is completely separated from his fellow American students throughout the Seminar year except during the periods of intensive language instruction and during the three general courses conducted under the supervision of the Seminar's American director, Dr. Adolph G. Fine Arts Center

Again, this year, the University asked the legislature for money for additional planning and construction phases of the Fine Arts Teaching Center. And again, it was turned down—this time in the House Ways and Means Committee—despite the recommendation of Governor Volpe. Next year, we will ask again.

This center has been planned for several years. Architect Kevin Roche has completed sketches of the building although some of the detailed planning remains to be done. Even if the legislature grants the money next year, it will still be the fall of 1969 before actual construction can begin.

Each year, approximately $60 million dollars is divided between mental health and higher education. Most of this money comes from the cigarette tax by which the state borrows money against future tobacco sales. Tuition is not used directly by UMass since it is turned over to the state. The legislature then gives the University an operational budget and a capital outlay.

Massachusetts now has one of the lowest rates per capita for the support of state institutions of higher education. This could possibly be a result of the large number of private schools in our state.

But perhaps we have depended too long on these schools for our centers of learning in art, music and drama. It is now time for the legislature to help UMass to become fully involved in this field.

The Fine Arts Center will contain an art museum, symphony hall and a theatre but, primarily it will be a teaching center. It will provide excellent facilities for the Art, Music and Drama Departments. It will also add to the unity of the entire Fine Arts Department by establishing a central location for offices and studies.

We cannot let the Arts continue to be the last on the priority list. The legislature must realize the need for and importance of this Fine Arts Teaching Center and appropriate the required money next year.

Haves and Have-Nots

By KENT BARCLAY
Editorial Staff

Today there are five members of the nuclear club: the United States, the Soviet Union, France, England, and the newest member, Red China. How many more will there be tomorrow? Based on the number of research and power reactors in operation or being installed in major countries not now possessing the bomb, the grim likelihood is that between now and 1975 today's nuclear have-nots will have the overall capacity for making 1000 bombs a year. Israel, India, Canada, Sweden, West Germany, Japan, Egypt, and South Africa in that order all could possess nuclear weapons and an effective delivery system in only 5-8 years.

They got into this posture by being supplied with nuclear reactors under the Atoms for Peace program, the wisdom of which has long been questioned. The consensus now is that the idea of flooding the world with "research reactors" as a form of nuclear security blanket for the have-nots may well have boomeranged.

More and more countries are being provided with the capability of producing nuclear weapons with controls that are often doubtful. Perhaps the most egregious example of this is Red China. The Soviets gave her material aid and technicians toward building the bomb until 1959, when the deepening ideological rift between the two Communist giants resulted in an abrupt and complete shutoff of Russian aid. By then, the Chinese had been given a powerful impetus toward their ultimate goal. They achieved it in Oct. 1964—a time five years before the earliest possible date set by Western experts.

The Russians thus have had reason to regret their aid: The Chinese are nuclear beginners now, but Def. Sec. McNamara recently told a meeting of NATO ministers that she may have medium-range nuclear missles in two years. Within 5 years she may threaten Western Europe, as well as broadening the threat to India, Vietnam, Laos, and Thailand. Within 10 years she undoubtedly will have perfected her own ICBMs. The grave question of what the NATO countries should do to react to Peking's extension of political control in coming decades to Asia, Africa, and Latin America, and how this would affect the NATO countries, must be met by the combined resources of all the NATO governments.

New safeguards must be immediately instituted. The most obvious would be the immediate cessation of the distribution of so-called research reactors. Less rigorous measures would include the restriction of the buildup of conventional arms, especially in developing nations; the stoppage of deployment of anti-missile missiles on the part of both the US and the USSR; and the signing of a non-aggression pact between the NATO countries and the nations of the Warsaw Treaty Organization, the Communist equivalent of NATO.

It is clear that the US can and must take the lead in halting the nuclear race. This is made doubly urgent by the fact that, thanks to contemporary technique, there is presently an enormity of the nuclear presence so great that the world's atomic stockpile contains the equivalent of 10 tons of TNT for each man, woman, and child on the globe.

Freedom . . . For What?

There's a lot of talk going around about student freedoms. Being a believer in student rights, I had a thing about self-regulated open houses all typed and proofread, ready to drop onto the editor's desk in the Collegian office. But a lecture in Ed. Psych made me think. It doesn't matter much whether or not someone talks about students wanting and deserving freedom here at the University. Most people think student freedom is a Good Thing. Exactly what, though, do we want freedom for?

In Ed. Psych, Dr. Schumer said, "Poll students on what issues are important to them. The majority are concerned with open houses and booze." Are we? We are concerned with social matters, and working toward a freer campus.

Last week, the Student Senate opposed "any restriction of freedom of expression as reflected in window signs," after hearing discussion and debate on the subject. Students in Southwest picketed the Dining Commons, and got some action on problems there. Women's affairs held a caucus on freshmen sign-out procedures. Students should be, and are, concerned with social problems.

Someone wrote in the Southwest Newsletter, "If people want to study, smoke grass, read Freud, make love, or otherwise do their thing in the rooms, it's not the administration's problem. I suggest they more than have their hands full working on our education, without trying to mess with our lives." It sounded right to me when I read it.

It is right except—why should the administration be "working on our education," anymore than it should be telling us what do with our private lives? Aren't the courses we take, the instructors we learn from, the grades we get, as important to our lives as our long waits for bad meals at the dining commons?

Are we really, as Dr. Schumer seemed to suggest, overly interested in social freedom, and neglectful of academic matters? Why is it that the academic affairs committee (there must be one, however little publicity it has), does not have more student support? The new Pass-fail system which will go into effect next semester is a freedom. Have we thought about it as such? The student handbook says. "Any student has the right to be heard on academic matters." That's a right we don't even have to fight for. But how many of us ever thought about using that freedom?

Schumer suggested, "Why not have students sitting on every committee? Why aren't students on the Board of Trustees?" It made me think. Why aren't students more involved and more concerned with academic affairs? We don't want the administration "trying to mess with our lives," and it certinly sounds as if someone is messing with my life if I'm told what courses to take, how many to take, when to take them, and who should teach them to me.

Don't stop believing in student freedom or rights. But remember that freedom doesn't mean only that someone can put a "King Kong died for our sins" sign in his window. It also means being able to say "Zoology 200 is not important for what I want to do with my life," and doing something about it.

I could, really, live without a sign in my window, and without drinking in my room. But the question of an F in a required course, taught by a professor who doesn't like me, somehow seems more important to me.

A Poor Impression

To the editor:

On Fri., Oct. 6, 1967, one of our international visitors, a young man from the Republic of Malagasy in Africa, left his trench coat (which he had purchased only the day before) on one of the clothes racks located in the north corridor of the Student Union.

After the luncheon given by the University in honor of his international group (6 from Malagasy and 6 from Ivory Coast), he discovered that his coat was Coast), he discovered that his coat was missing. Several visits to the Lost and Found Department proved futile.

Our friend from Malagasy left on Sat., Oct. 7, 1967, to return to Africa with his colleagues. I have paid a daily visit to Lost and Found since that date. No trench coat. I can only conclude that the present illegal owner of the trench coat knew what he was doing when he made off with our visitor's property. I had hoped it was a cast of mistaken identity.

It is indeed regrettable that an international participant should leave our campus community, after 5 educationally fruitful and enjoyable weeks, with the unhappy memory that this University harbors at least one thief.

I cannot speak for our international friend who lost his coat, but I feel certain that his image of our University must be somewhat marred by his unfortunate experience.

If the thief should, perchance, see this letter to The Collegian, I would remind him that he stole not just a trench coat, but something even more valuable — an indeterminate measuse of goodwill and institutional integrity.

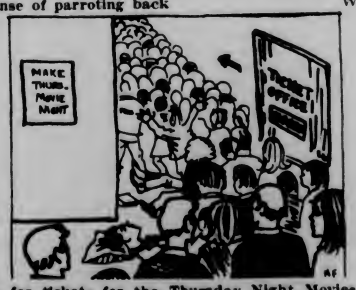
Why College?



To the editor:

It's hard for me to define what went on in side n... er reading Gena Corea's simple, but thought- and emotion-producing letter in Thursday's Collegian. She has put into a few words some of the deepest feelings that I and some of my friends have been brooding about this semester. She has put her finger on a frustration only too common today — repetition without thought or learning.

Why college? Admittedly, to acquire knowledge with which to formulate new ideas and to become productive to society. But what is the sense of parroting back virtually useless facts if the student is unable to advance HIMSELF? What is the sense of constricting minds solely to the assimilation of mountains of facts? Why not encourage free thought and the development of awareness within a student?

Dr. Drum has made a step toward this goal. He has put feeling into teaching — why can't this be the norm rather than the exception? If we can answer this then perhaps we can eliminate some of the frustrations that make real learning at this university so difficult.

Boss Tweeds Swing Into Third Big Year

By ALISSA GREENBERG
Staff Reporter

The Boss Tweeds, well-known to the whole campus by their numerous appearances at dances, fraternity parties, concerts, and other college functions, will celebrate their 3rd birthday on October 30th. Being one of the few musical combos to retain its original members over such a long period of time, the Boss Tweeds have played with such groups as the Beachboys, the Animals, Barry and the Romains, and Teddy and the Pandas.

Three members of the Boss Tweeds have attended or are attending UMass. Tex (Robert) LaMountain, a '67 graduate and the group's rhythm guitar player and lead singer, is currently employed at an empioyment agency. He is married, has a three year old son, and lives in Boston. Lee Souweine, a senior psychology major from Hyannis, plays base guitar. The drummer, Dave Thomkins, is a junior management major from Maynard, Mass.

The 4th member, Ron Fink from Easthampton, Mass., graduated from a business school in Holyoke. Besides being lead guitarist for the Tweeds, he also gives guitar instruction. He is also married.

Dave, Tex and Lee first organized the Boss Tweeds during the fall of 1964 appearing at many campus affairs and fraternity parties. That summer they played at Pittsfield, and Ron became a member of the group.

During the next few years the Boss Tweeds played the New England college circuit and appeared with the Beachboys at the John F. Kennedy Memorial Concert here at UMass, and with the Animals at Smith College. They played at the Rumpus Room in Provincetown the entire summer of 1966. And of course they continued to play at weekly dances, fraternity parties, and other concerts here on campus.

Anyone who has heard the Boss Tweeds play is aware that their style is modern, diverse, and adaptable to any mood or type of popular music. From the Beatles, to the Rolling Stones, to psychedelic music — the Boss Tweeds can play any style of music and play it well.

The future plans of the Boss Tweeds look very promising. All four of the members write music, and one song which they have written, "If", is due to be released by a girl vocalist. The group also plans to record their own records.

How long this remarkable group will stay together only time (and Uncle Sam) will tell. Meanwhile we at UMass, hope the Boss Tweeds will be around for a long time to come providing hours of enjoyment, pleasure, and "good listening".

Rifles are Proved To be Defective

WASHINGTON (AP)—House investigators singled out ammunition deficiencies Wednesday as the major contributor to malfunctions of the troubled M16 rifle. They declared Army handling of the problem "borders on criminal negligence."

As initially developed, the light-weight, rapid-firing rifle being used in Vietnam "was an excellent and reliable weapon," the report said. But the investigators contended the manner in which the Army rifle program has been mismanaged "is unbelievable."

The House Armed Services subcommittee headed by Rep Richard Ichord, D-Mo., in a hard-hitting report after lengthy hearins and a field trip to South Vietnam, also:

Called for government audits of both the Colt Firearms Co., maker of the rifle, and Olin Mathieson, producer of the powder used in ammunition for the M16.

WMUA is UMass' Hotspot For All Types of Music

By MARGARET EWING
Staff Reporter

If you've turned on your radio on a Sunday afternoon and tuned to 91.1 FM, the campus radio station WMUA, then you've probably heard the voice of a University junior asking for requests and playing the latest show tunes and soundtracks. Miss Karen Silverman is now in her second year of "dee-jaying" for WMUA, and is just as lively and enthusiastic about her job off the air as she is on the air.

This year Miss Silverman is news director for the studio, in addition to planning and producing two shows of her own. A folk enthusiast, Karen does two folk shows, called Folk Spotlight, every Tuesday and Thursday evening from 8:00 to 9:30, during which she features famous male and female vocalists, as well as popular folk groups.

On Sunday afternoons from 1:00 to 4:00 you can find Karen behind the mike doing her request show, "Showcase," in which she plays popular and feature albums, alternating with requests from the listening audience. It takes Karen almost as much time off the air as on to plan her shows and choose albums and records to use.

In addition to her present employment at the studio, Miss Silverman has also served as record librarian, and technical engineer for "talk show."

In describing the studio itself, Karen was very enthusiastic about the present and future facilities of the station. She described it as having a medium sized control room containing a transmitter and control board with two ampexes in which are two tape recorders, cartridge machines, and three turntables.

Studio 1 is mainly used for news and sorting teletype. Panel discussions are also held here. Studio 2 is being made into a production studio for educational shows which can be done without interrupting the other studio. In addition to these studios, Karen said there is also an observation room, technical department for repairs, and a record library containing thousands of albums.

Karen added that the station has programs of every nature—educational, which includes lectures given on campus, panel discussions, and shows featuring jazz, classical, rock, and folk music.

The studio functions on a purely voluntary basis, and Miss Silverman was very strong in stating that there are not enough people. She mentioned that anyone who is interested in working for the station can come in at anytime either now or during the open house the studio plans later on in the year. The studio is located in the engineering building.

Soviets Launch Space Probe

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — The man in charge of directing U.S. planetary probes complimented Soviet scientists Wednesday for Venus 4's "highly successful" mission.

Dr. William H. Pickering of the Jet Propulsion laboratory said it "appears to confirm the measurements made by the U.S. Mariner 2 flyby of Venus in 1962 that the planet is a very hot, inhospitable body."

Noting that Venus 4 "may have given us the first direct measurement" of the Venutian atmosphere, he said, "We expect that the data from Mariner 5 tomorrow will provide another measurement of the atmospheric density made by an entirely different technique."

Politicians Attitudes are Considered In Water Resource Management

How big a role do political decision-makers play in water resource management? A major role, according to Dr. Irving Howards, director of the University of Massachusetts Bureau of Government Research. Under $107,000 in federal, state and University grants, he has begun a study of politics and other factors that influence decisions on water resource management at various levels of local government.

"There is an immense amount of technical knowledge now available on water resource problems," Dr. Howards said. "We now have the physical, chemical, biological and economic techniques to reach optimum solutions to water problems; yet those who make the ultimate decisions on these problems do not always choose the optimum solution."

He will explore this gap between technical knowledge and implementation through a series of case studies of successful and unsuccessful water management projects. The studies are being made through the cooperation of the UMass Water Resources Research Center, directed by Prof. Bernard B. Berger.

According to Prof. Berger, the case studies will probe some of the complex sets of political and governmental issues that affect many decisions on water resource projects. "These issues, often obscure, may be rooted in subtle and not easily discerned attitudes and motivations that often do not surface during public debate," Prof. Berger said.

The project is financed through the UMass Water Resources Research Center with $53,600 from the U.S. Department of the Interior, $25,000 from the Massachusetts Department of Water Resources and the remainder from the University.

According to Dr. Berger: "The results of the case studies will provide a basis for defining principles of planning that will be generally applicable in water resource development. By utilizing this knowledge, the planner will be able to anticipate attitudes influencing the decision-making process, to employ methods for legitimately modifying such attitudes and to incorporate these attitudes appropriately as part of the comprehensive water resources development plan."

Governor Orders Halt Put To Teachers' Strike

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — A possible statewide teacher strike that would have closed down the public school system next Monday was averted Wednesday when Gov. Claude Kirk announced he would call a special session of the Florida Legislature.

The Florida Education Association, which represents about 55,000 teachers, had demanded the governor make the call before Sunday so the legislature could vote more money for education.

The association said Oct. 9 it had 31,424 resignations from its members. A rally was scheduled in an Orlando football stadium Sunday for a vote on whether to submit the quit notices.

The showdown had been brewing since the spring when the state association and its parent organization, the National Education Association, invoked sanctions against the state for what it called inadequate financial support of the schools.

Among the demands was a call for teacher pay raises.

Kirk denied the threat of mass resignations had forced him into making his decision.

"There's no such thing as victory for anybody . . . it's a victory for the children," Kirk said.

NOBEL PRIZE AWARDED FOR EYE RESEARCH

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Two Americans and a Swedish neurologist were awarded a Nobel Prize Wednesday for their discoveries on how the human eye works.

Haldan Keffer Hartline of New York's Rockefeller Institute, George Wald of Harvard University, and Ragnar Granit of Sweden shared the prize for physiology or medicine for their work on "The primary chemical and physiological visual processes in the eye."

The prize, awarded by Sweden's Royal Caroline Institute medical faculty, amounts to $62,000 to be shared equally among the three.

The medicine prize was the first of four Nobel Prize categories to be awarded this year. Thursday noon the Swedish Academy of Letters will announce the award for literature. The prizes for physics and chemistry will be awarded Oct. 30.

Webster's 'Readathon' Ends With "Layer"

The three-year-old Webster Dictionary Reading Marathon ended its four-day run last night at 6 on the word "layer".

The reading of the 2662 page Webster's Third New International Dictionary began Sunday at 6 p.m. Vincent T. DeAndrea, Instructor in economics and Associate Resident Faculty of Webster, started off the marathon on the word "heavy" (p. 1047).

After 97 freshmen and 234 pages, Dr. Luther A. Allen, Associate Professor of government and Resident Faculty, stopped on the word "layer". Surveying the mammoth work, Dr. Allen said, "We're not quite half way through."

The marathon—set up as a tribute to Noah Webster, American lexicographer and Webster's namesake—was first run on May 8, 1966, with Chet Weinerman ('68), now Collegian Editor-in-Chief, commencing on the letter "a".

BLIND DRIVERS

BOSTON (AP) — The House followed the recommendation of its Ways and Means Committee Wednesday and killed a bill that would require the Commission of the Blind to report the names and addresses of blind persons to the Registry of Motor Vehicles.

The proposal was part of Gov. John A. Volpe's highway safety message. Registry officials said some persons who are legally blind continue to renew their driving licenses automatically every two years.

This is your chance, Student #7026941. Drink Sprite and be somebody.

MR. BIG

Take heart. Take a dime. Then take a bottle of Sprite from the nearest pop machine.

Suddenly it's in your hand. Cold. Biting. Tart and tingling. You cackle fiendishly and rub your hands together. (You should; they're probably chilled to the bone by now.)

You tear off to a corner, alone, but within earshot of your fellows.

And then? And then? And then you unleash it.

SPRITE! It fizzes! It roars! It bubbles with good cheer!

Heads turn. Whisperings. "Who's that strangely fascinating student with the arch smile. And what's in that curious green bottle that's making such a racket?"

And you've arrived! The distinctive taste and ebullient character of Sprite has set you apart.

You're somebody, uh...uh, whoever-you-are.

Sprite

SPRITE. SO TART AND TINGLING, WE JUST COULDN'T KEEP IT QUIET.

SPRITE IS A REGISTERED TRADE MARK

THERE ARE NO BAD TEACHERS; THERE ARE ONLY BAD STUDENTS

The academic year has only just begun and already one thing is clear: you're not ready for college.

What, then, should you do? Should you throw up your hands and quit? I say no! I say you must attack, grapple, cope! I say America did not become the world's leader in motel construction and kidney transplants by running away from a fight!

To the question then: You say you're not ready for college. You're too green, too naive. You lack maturity.

Okay, the answer is simple: get mature. How? Well sir, to achieve maturity you need two things:

a) a probing mind;

b) a vest.

A probing mind will be quickly yours if you'll remember that education consists not of answers but of questions. Blindly accepting information and dumbly memorizing data is high school stuff. In college you don't just accept. You dispute, you push, you pry, you challenge. If, for instance, your physics prof says, "E equals mc squared," don't just write it down. Say to the prof, "Why?"

This will show him two things:

a) Your mind is a keen, thrusting instrument.

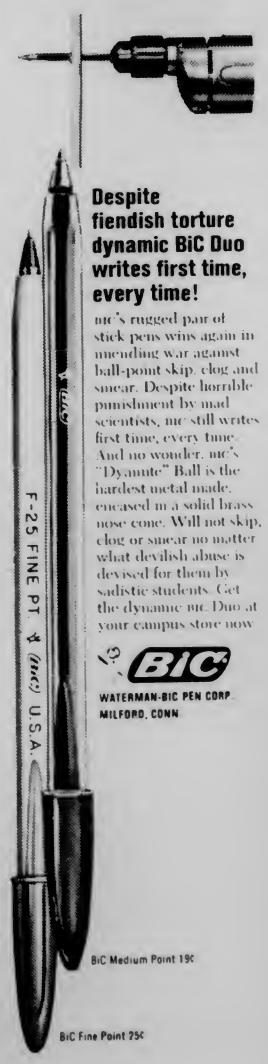
b) You are in the wrong major.

Ask questions, questions, and more questions. That is the essence of maturity, the heart and liver of education. Nothing will more quickly convince the teachers that you are of college calibre. And the tougher your questions, the better. Come to class with queries that dart and flash, that make unexpected sallies into uncharted territory. Ask things which have never been asked before, like "How tall was Nietzsche?" and "Did the Minotaur have ticks? If so, were they immortal?" and "How often did Pitt the Elder shave?"

(Incidentally, you may never know the complete answer to Pitt the Elder's shaving habits, but of one thing you can be positive: no matter how often he shaved and no matter what blades he used, he never enjoyed the shaving comfort that you do. I am assuming, of course, that you use Personna Super Stainless Steel Blades, a logical assumption to make when one is addressing college men—which is to say men of perspicacity, discrimination, wit, taste, cognizance, and shrewdness—for Personna is a blade to please the perspicacious, delight the discriminating, win the witty, tickle the tasteful, coddle the cognizer, and shave the shrewd.

(I bring up Personna Super Stainless Steel Blades because the makers of Personna Super Stainless Steel Blades pay me to write this column, and they are inclined to sulk if I omit to mention their product. I would not like to see them unhappy, the makers of Personna, for they are fine ruddy men, fond of morris dancing and home brewed root beer, and they make a blade that shaves closely and cleanly, nicklessly and hacklessly, and is sharp and gleaming and durable and available both in double-edge style and Injector style.

(And from these same bounteous blademakers comes Burma-Shave, regular or menthol, a lather that outlathers other lathers, brother. So if you'd rather lather better, and soak your whiskers wetter, Burma-Shave's your answer.)



But I digress. We have now solved the problem of maturity. In subsequent columns we'll take up other issues, equally burning. Since 1953 when this column first started running in your campus paper, we've tackled such thorny questions as "Can a student of 19 find happiness with an economics professor of 90?" and "Should capital punishment for pledges be abolished?" and "Are room-mates sanitary?" Be assured that in this, our 14th year, we will not be less bold.

Faculty enjoys participation in Newlywed Game sponsored by S.W. Patriots.

Southwest Patriots Sponsors Of Television Game Night

By KAREN FREEDMAN
Staff Reporter

The Southwest Patriots sponsored a program modeled after the television program "The Dating Game". The five Homecoming Queen candidates were the female participants while the males were chosen from the Southwest complex.

After some half-time entertainment by Head of Residence, Mrs. Walter Silva, singing "I Should Have Danced All Night", three Heads of Residence couples competed in "The Newlywed Game".

Door prizes were given out and prizes were also awarded to the winning couples. The event was rated as very successful both by the audience and the Patriots, who are considering holding a similar event on a campuswide basis.

Enrollment at Journalism Schools was up 16.3 percent in 1966 over 1965 (22,339 vs. 19,229) and up nearly 100 percent over 1960.

Advertising Not To Be Used For Cigarette Promotion

NEW YORK (AP)—The American Cancer Society's directors recommended Wednesday that all cigarette advertising be ended.

"Advertising is too persuasive, too valid and too vital a part of our American life to be used in the sale of such a lethal product as the cigarette," the directors said in a resolution.

The Tobacco Institute, a trade association representing major cigarette and cigar manufactures, said only that the recommendation "came somewhat as a surprise."

The American Newspaper Publishers Association declined comment.

The society said three-quarters of its board of 104, about half of them medical personnel, voted for the resolution.

The resolution added: "It is hoped that this goal will be achieved by voluntary self-regulation and that governmental action will not be necessary.

"Cigarette smoking is not the result of an advertising conspiracy but the elimination of cigarette advertising may do much to destroy the social acceptance of this dangerous habit. It will make giving up smoking easier for many and it will stop the constant media pressures on the young to start smoking.

The directors noted that some publishers and broadcasters already have banned cigarette advertising. They mentioned New Yorker magazine, Saturday Review and Reader's Digest.

Justice is Sought in Civil Rights Trial

MERIDIAN, Miss. (AP) — The case of 18 white men charged with conspiracy in what the government labeled "the midnight murders" of three young civil rights workers in 1964 headed into the hands of an all-white federal court jury Wednesday.

The panel of seven women and five men which heard testimony from 155 witnesses in nine days, was asked by the Justice Department to convict all but one of the defendants.

"What you 12 people do here today will be long remembered," said Asst. U.S. Atty. Gen. John Dear in final arguments. If you find these men are not guilty, you will declare the law of Neshoba County to be the law of Mississippi."

Dear said, however, he thought the panel should acquit Travis H. Barnette, 39, a Meridian garage owner, because "I don't think the evidence warrants us asking you to return a guilty verdict aaginst that individual."

U.S. Dist. Court Judge Harvid Cox held in reserve a ruling on a motion for a directed verdict of acquittal on five other defendants.

Mike Watkins, one of 12 defense attorneys, countered Dear's claims, telling the jury that "the government's theory is that here in Mississippi the society is so closed and so filled with hate that we murder outsiders."

Attorneys for both sides stressed that the men were not on trial for murder, but on charges they conspired to violate the civil rights of two white men, Michael Schwerner, 24, and Andrew Goodman, 20, both of New York, and a Negro, James Chaney, 22, of Meredian.

Conviction for violating the Reconstruction era federal statute under which the men were tried could mean a maximum sentence of 10 years in prison and a $5,000 fine. The state has never filed charges in the case.

The Justice Department contended the defendants, all white, participated in a Ku Klux Klan plot that led to the backwoods slaying of Schwerner, Goodman and Chaney near Philadelphia, Miss., during the racially troubled summer of 1964.

Neshoba County Sheriff Lawrence Rainey, 43, his chief deputy, Cecil Price; and the Democratic nominee for seriff, E. G. "Hep" Barnette, 47, all of the Philadelphia area, were among the defendants.

The government charged that Price arrested the workers June 21 and held them only long enough for the Klan band to capture them after their release that night.

New Greek Image Shown In Forthcoming INDEX

"Greek speaking," the attitudes of this year's Index staff reflect an innovational spirit. No longer will the Greeks represent stagnant tradition; fast-pacing change and growth will set tradition to motion.

Sophistication and creativeness will be the two main forces at work to create the new image. On each page, fraternity and sorority will abandon former group pictures of the individuals in the houses in favor of a unified composite.

The stream-of-consciousness description of the various houses will cease. Instead, individual, descriptive essays about the Greek year will insure complete thoughts of what someday might be vague recollections.

Lastly candid photographs of the Greek life of people, and events, will capture the spirit, flavor and fond memories of the entire Greek organization.

The Greek spirit of unity and identification will take on new dimensions in the 1968 Index.

Associated Press Names Winners In Fourth Annual Awards

CHICAGO (AP) — Sid Moody, Associated Press Newsfeatures writer, and J. Alvan Quinn, AP photographer in Detroit, were named Wednesday as winners of the fourth annual Associated Press Managing Editors APME awards.

The awards carry a $500 prize each for the top performance by an AP reporter and photographer during the past year. Presentations were made before some 500 managing editors attending the APME annual meeting.

The winning story and picture stemmed from coverage of the Detroit race riots. Moody's story, which appeared in Sunday newspapers, July 30, was a recapitulation of the costliest riot in American history.

Using anecdotes and vignettes, Moody presented a word picture of the tragedy and the people who lived through it.

Quinn's winning news photo showed hundreds of Negroes charging down 12th street in Detroit on July 23, 1967, throwing stones and bottles at store windows and looting the shops.

Satellite Serves As Aid in Solar Studies

CAPE KENNEDY, Fla. (AP)—A new American "sunshine satellite" rocketed into orbit Wednesday to help scientists develop a radiation warning system for astronauts and study how the sun disrupts air-to-ground communications.

OSO 4, the fourth orbiting solar observatory, was reported to be functioning normally by space agency officials after riding a fiery Delta rocket into an earth orbit about 350 miles high.

OSO 4 was equipped with nine experiments to study various forms of radiation emitted from the sun. The first of the experiments will be turned on Thursday by ground command.

The $85-million OSO project is part of an international program involving three U.S. agencies and earth-based scientific observatories in other nations—including Russia — aiming to learn more about "weather" on the sun's blazing hot surface.

Scientists eventually hope to predict solar flares in advance, so manned missions to the moon or in deep space will not be caught in hazardous radiation streams emitted from these eruptions on the sun.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration is especially interested because the year 1969, when this nation hopes to land men on the moon, is expected to be a time of peak solar flare activity.

Some scientists also fear that crewmen and passengers aboard high-attitude jet flights above the protective umbrella of the earth's atmosphere could be harmed by solar radiation.

'Tucaret' Performed in Amherst By Professional Theatre Group

Le Treteau de Paris, professional theatre company annually touring North America, will perform Alain Rene Lesage's 18th century social satire, "Turcaret", tonight at 8 o'clock at the Amherst Regional High School Auditorium, sponsored by the University of Massachusetts French Corridors.

"Turcaret" has been termed an 18th century comedy of manners whose characters are as modern as today. The plot concerns a Monsieur Turcaret, banker-financier posing as a widower, and the beautiful but penniless widow, the Baroness, who is determined to dupe him out of his fortune to finance her own romance with the gambler and establish her own social security. The two are properly outwitted by the Chevalier's valet, Frontin, and his lovely accomplice, the maid Lisette.

Le Treteau de Paris is the only professional French - speaking theatre to tour North America annually. Founded in 1952 by Jean de Rigault, a Frenchman who has since been dedicated to bringing fine productions of French plays as they are performed in France to this country, the Treteau is sponsored each year by the French government with the patronage of Mr. Edouard Morot-Sir, cultural counselor to the French Embassy.

Mr. de Rigault engages troup members for each tour in Paris. For this year's production of "Turcaret" he has chosen Guy Retore and his La Guilde company for their stylish and energetic production. Mr. Retore is managing director of Le Theatre de l'Est Parisien, the only complete cultural center facility in the immediate Paris area.

Rampaging Rams Eye Yan-Con Upset

Redmen-Rhody Square-off In Homecoming Showdown

By GLENN BRIERE
Assistant Sports Editor

Rhode Island's football team has not had a winning season in its last eight seasons. It has managed just three victories in its last two seasons. And Rhody has not beaten UMass since 1959, when Greg Landry was 13 years old.

Thus it is with a certain amount of amazement that New England college football observers notice that the Rams are unbeaten. Yes, the hapless Rhody Rams have a record of 3-0-1 going into this Saturday's Homecoming game with UMass at Alumni Stadium at 1:30.

URI is in second place in the Yankee Conference one-half behind the Redmen. So this Saturday's game will have a great amount of bearing on the Beanpot. And unlike other years, UMass will have to take the Rams seriously.

Last year Rhode Island was 1-7-1 despite having the most potent passing attack in the Conference. Coach Jack Zilly's squad has that same passing offense this year, and with an improved defense, URI has surprised a good number of people.

The Rams won their first three games over Delaware, Brown and New Hampshire, and last week held Bob Mitchell and the Vermont Catamounts to a scoreless tie. Although the underdog each time, Rhody has outscored its opposition, 53-31.

Heading Rhode Island's flashy aerial attack is junior quarterback Larry Caswell, a 190-pounder from nearby Pawtucket, R.I. Caswell has completed 44 of 106 passes for 527 yards, which is some 130 yards a game.

He'll be throwing to senior Frank Geiselman, a 6'1, 210-pound split end. Geiselman, who was an All-Yankee Conference selection last year, has 16 receptions for 281 yards. He is the Rams' long threat.

Caswell's other favorite target is flanker Henry Walker, a 6'0, 205 junior. Walker has grabbed 14 passes for a total of 133 yards.

The surprise of the backfield has been Bill Bjerke, a sophomore who has put All-Yankee Conference pick Brent Kaufman on the bench. Bjerke is Rhody's leading rusher with 165 yards for a 3.5 average.

Leading the offensive line at center is co-captain Howie Small, a 6'4, 242-pound senior. He can play anywhere on the line offensively and defensively, and last year Zilly played him primarily at defensive tackle. This year, however, Small has been moved to center.

Both offensive guards are returning as well as one of the tackles. Juniors Walt Drapala, 225, and John Lyons, 205, are holdovers from last year. The tackle is also a junior, 215-pounder Ben Kelly.

Rhode Island's biggest improvement has been on defense, as the Rams have allowed just one touchdown since their first game and none in the last two. The feature of this defense is an experienced defensive front wall that averages 225 pounds.

Like Connecticut, URI uses a six-man defensive line. The best of this line is All-Yankee Conference end Leon Spinney, a 6'3, 210-pound junior from Wimthrop.

Other returnees on the defensive line include guard Tom Ricci, a 220-pound senior, guard Dick Andrews, a 240-pound junior, and tackle Mike Borassi, a 216-pound junior.

Rhody's strongest position on defense appears to be at linebacker with 190-pound junior Ken Kuzman and 180-pound senior Ed Kassak. Both are outstanding.

The defensive backfield is led by co-captain Dave O'Donnell, an All-Conference nominee at safety last year. Also returning in the defensive backfield is junior Terry Hoag.

Last year UMass barely got past the Rams, 14-9, and although the Redmen will be favored this year, their pass defense will have to be sharp or they could be in for similar trouble on Saturday.

Redmen Ranking High In Stats

Greg Landry leads the Yankee Conference in rushing average with a 6.3 mark after the Redmen's first three games. Vermont's Bob Mitchell, however, has the most total rushing yardage with 389 yards after four games.

The UMass quarterback rates only sixth in passing percentage according to this week's figures, but is tied with Mitchell for the Conference lead in scoring with 30 points.

Soph Steve Parnell ranks second in both kickoff and punt returns. Nick Warnock leads the punters with a 40.3 average, and Ed Sherman is second among kicking specialists with 15 points.

QB Luncheon Now in Newman

Beginning next Tuesday, the weekly Varsity "M" Quarterback Luncheons will be held at the Newman Center on North Pleasant St., instead of Howard Johnson's Restaurant.

Besides food, the fare will consist of films of Saturday's football game. Tickets for the program, which lasts from 12 to 1 p.m., cost $1.50 each and are available at the Alumni Office, Athletic Department or at the door.

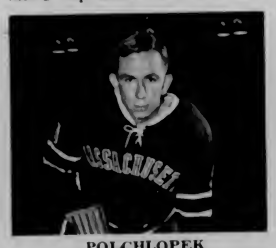
OUT OF SEASON—Football may be king, but tell it to these hearty heroes of the hardcourt who have been working out since Monday at the Cage. Underneath the sweat-soaked jerseys are (from left) seniors Gary Gasperack, Rick Perkins, Greg Rand, Jim Girrotti and Capt. Bill Tindall.

Booters Slip in Rain

HARTFORD, Conn. — In a game played in a heavy downpour, the UMass soccer team bowed to unbeaten Trinity, 3-1, here yesterday.

The weather conditions were terrible and the field was muddy but the two coaches decided to play the game anyway and the result was a sloppy contest.

Trinity jumped ahead in the first period, 2-0, on goals by Center and Hoji. Wilkie Ward came back to score the lone Redmen goal in the second quarter, and the halftime score was 2-1. The Bantams' Wiles wrapped it up in the third period when he tallied on a penalty kick.



UMass had plenty of chances to score, getting off some 30 shots and eight corner kicks. But Trinity got the best of the breaks in the wild affair.

Steve Kramer played a fine game in goal, turning away many Bantam shots. He was injured in the third period and replaced by Elliot Klein, but he should be able to start the next game. The Redmen, 2-1 on the season, meet Rhode Island at home on Saturday morning in an important game.

Frosh Hockey Has New Coach

Hockey coach John Canniff announced this week that former UMass hockey player Ed Polchlopek has been named freshman hockey coach.

Polchlopek, who was the Redmen's top scorer for the last three seasons, immediately called a meeting of all frosh candidates Monday at 6:30 p.m. in Room 253, Boyden Building.

POLCHLOPEK

Any student interested in becoming a manager for the hockey team, Canniff said, should contact his him at his office in Boyden Monday, Wednesday or Friday afternoon.

Students Riot at Univ. of Wisconsin In Wake of Anti-War Demonstration

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — University of Wisconsin officials backed up a new get tough policy against unruly protestors Thursday, expelling 13 leaders of Wednesday's bloody anti-war demonstration.

Hundreds of angry students began an immediate boycott of classes and set up chanting picket lines outside buildings on the 33,000-student campus.

Chancellor William H. Sewell planned to meet with faculty members regarding the future of on-campus job recruiting by Dow Chemical Co., maker of napalm for the war in Vietnam.

After Wednesday's outbursts, Sewell ordered a temporary halt to Dow recruitments.

Refusals of protestors to clear jammed corridors inside a building where Dow held its interviews triggered skull-thumping skirmishes between police and demonstrators Wednesday.

About 65 protestors and three policemen were treated for injuries, none of them believed serious, after helmeted police used riot sticks and tear gas to disperse jeering students who shouted slogans denouncing police, the war and President Johnson.

Sewell, who became chancellor this past summer, had vowed there would be no repeat of last February's anti-Dow demonstrations which led to 19 arrests.

"I deeply regret that it was necessary to bring police to the campus," said Sewell. "This was done only after our officers and staff found it impossible to maintain law and order."

Names of the expelled students were not immediately released. All have the right of appeal.

Sewell's speedy action against protest leaders came on the heels of sharp criticism by the state Legislature of campus disorders.

The Assembly, meeting only a mile from the scene of the disturbance, asked the university to reevaluate its policy of "excessive permissiveness" and called for expulsion of students "whenever necessary."

Kenneth Greenquist of Racine, president of the university's board of regents, issued a statement affirming the board's "complete confidence in President Fred Harrington and Chancellor Sewell to cope with the present crisis."

"Prompt, vigorous and effective disciplinary action in this case can in no sense be considered to be in derogation of academic freedoms," Greenquist said of the student ousters.

Atty. Gen. Bronson C. LaFollette, however, called for creation of a special committee to investigate the violence. He asked that police, the student body, the governor's office, the legislature and the attorney general's office be represented.

A crowd of about 1,500 students milled about the lawn outside Sewell's office building Thursday and rapped the university for calling in police to break the sit-in.

After numerous pep talks and speeches, the students broke into smaller groups and paraded with placards outside classrooms.

The signs said "Keep The Cops Off Campus," "Strike Classes, Not Students," and "Stop Police Brutality."

Leon Epstein, dean of the College of Letters and Sciences toured classrooms in an attempt to determine the impact of the strike and said it appeared the "overwhelming majority" of faculty and students were in classes.

Any student who believes he has been mistreated, falsely charged or wronged in any other way by the Amherst Police in the last year is urged to relate his story to the DAILY COLLEGIAN.

All information will be kept strictly confidential. No names or particular cases will ever be cited in the paper without the volunteer's consent. All confidences will be respected. But it is imperative that we know cases of mistreatment if the present conditions are to be rectified.

There will be an editor's meeting this Sunday at 6:30 p.m. in the DAILY COLLEGIAN office at which time information may be volunteered or come to the COLLEGIAN office anytime thereafter.

Please step forward. Your courage will be greatly appreciated and honored by the DAILY COLLEGIAN as well as by the community. — THE EDITORS

Requirements Redefined for Honors Program

A recent Collegian news article contained misinformation concerning the University's Honors Program. Everett H. Emerson, Director of Honors, makes the following corrections.

"Currently the Honors Program has two aspects: the colloquium program and the thesis program. The former is for outstanding students who may be freshmen, sophomores, juniors, or seniors.

Each semester members of the faculty lead discussions of important topics, disciplinary or interdisciplinary in nature, with groups of students, with five to twelve in a group. Regular assignments are made, and if a student participates regularly and well, he earns one academic credit for his work, but no grade is given.

The thesis program is for seniors, though the work may be said to begin at the end of the junior year. Students with outstanding records are encouraged to pursue a study in depth under the supervision of a member of the faculty in their department.

The result should be a substantial essay or other project, for which the student receives six semester hours credit, and, if his work is considered to be "A" or "B" quality, he is graduated with honors in his discipline."

Senate Takes Action On Student Petitions

By CAROL BELLIVEAU
Staff Reporter

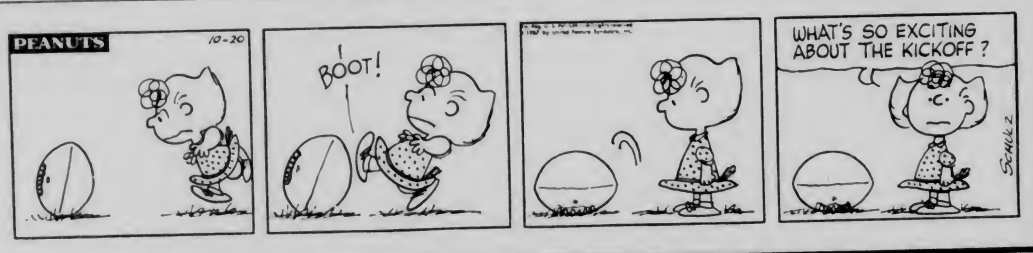
Following pickets and petitions of dining comons and the question of window signs in the Southwest area, the Student Senate set itself to the task of evaluating and solving these problems.

Last week the Senate held an open forum in Patterson House for student discussion and debate concerning signs and lengthy lines at meals. Senators Lew Smith and Cindy Olken, head of the committee concerned with lines, reported to the group their findings and future plans.

Along with Dining Commons managers they had begun clocking lines and noted the times of heaviest congestion. To alleviate some of this wait the Food Service installed new juice machines to avoid crowding in the serving areas and the lines were opened a few minutes earlier.

Suggestions from the floor to further reduce lines came at this forum and were referred to the Student Senate meeting held Wednesday night in Dining Commons #7.

According to Dr. Noffsinger, Associate Dean of Students the question of the exemption policy as it exists in other campus areas is not feasible because of economics. Exemptions would most probably cause an increase in board rates for residents of Southwest.



In place of the SW exemption bill which the Senate had proposed to discuss Wednesday, a new policy of inter-transferability of meal tickets was passed. This policy will allow SW ticket holders to eat at either commons in the area.

Senators, dining commons managers, and involved administrators feel that this new plan will further the idea of a residential college, they indicated. This Senate-approved bill concerning floating meal tickets will now go to the Food Services committee which will work out a feasible plan.

The Senate also took action on the controversial window sign problem. This topic was heavily debated at last week's forum and met with much discussion again Wednesday. The focus was on the total concept of freedom versus the idea of student responsibility.

The Senate finally ruled that it would uphold the idea that no body should have the right to restrict the freedom of student expression as reflected in window signs.

This suggests that house councils and administrators leave the decisions of good taste in the hands of the individual. The bill as recommended is subject to final administrative and Board of Trustees approval.

Paratroopers on Hand for Security As Demonstrators Head for Pentagon

The vanguard of an Army paratroop force that could reach 6,000 men flew to Washington Thursday as the Defense Department moved to protect the Pentagon against a massive anti-war demonstration planned for Saturday.

Sponsors hope to rally as many as 100,000 demonstrators for a march from the Lincoln Memorial to the huge department headquarters across the Potomac River.

The paratroopers would be charged with the security of the Pentagon while some 4,000 policemen and national guardsmen will be available to maintain order elsewhere.

The Defense Department refused to acknowledge that the paratroopers are being brought in because of the demonstration nor would they say what the force might total ultimately.

But an Air Force officer involved in the airlift from Ft. Bragg said that as many as 100 C130 flights can be made if necessary—and at 60 men to the plane that would mean a potential force of 6,000 of the highly trained troopers.

The 82nd Airborne provided units for controlling racial riots in Detroit last summer and it includes in its ranks many veterans of the Vietnam war at which the demonstration is aimed. The Pentagon has a weekday working force of some 27,000 but this dwindles to about 3,000 on Saturdays and even fewer on Sundays.

From Friday night to Monday morning no one is admitted to the building without a pass.

The Washington metropolitan police force is expected to have nearly half of its 2,700 members on duty Saturday while a 2,000-man force of National Guardsmen also will be on duty.

Members of the freshman class went to the polls yesterday to vote in their primary election. The turnout was small, but the spirit was high. For results see page 1.

Brahms and Beethoven Concert at Smith Tuesday

Music of Brahms and Beethoven will be presented at Smith College on Tuesday evening, October 24, by the Smith-Amherst Orchestra in its first performance of the season. Edwin London will conduct the symphonic ensemble at 8 o'clock in John M. Greene Hall. The public is invited to attend without charge.

Two familiar and popular major works will be on the program: Johannes Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Joseph Haydn, Opus 56a: and Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, the Eroica Symphony.

The Brahms piece is based on Haydn's setting of the St. Anthony Chorale whose composer is unknown. The Eroica, or "heroic" symphony, was Beethoven's first truly individual work, inspired by Napoleon with whom the composer later became disillusioned.

Founded in 1904, the Smith-Amherst Orchestra presents several concerts in the Northampton area each season. Its nearly 90 members are mostly students at Smith and neighboring colleges, and other musicians from Northampton and nearby towns. Edwin London of the Smith College music faculty became conductor of the orchestra in 1964.

Scheduled for Sunday evening, October 29, is the next musical event at Smith College: a program of chamber music, presented by department members Patricia Monk, John Sessions and Ernst Wallfisch.

Band Performance To Highlight Game

Marching UMass Band members will all be out in step on Saturday, as usual, at the big Homecoming Weekend football game.

This weekend, however, offers a double treat for the diligent band members.

Professor Larry Weed, assistant conductor of the marching band and a hard working one at that, said "this is a big weekend for the band members because it is their second home game this year and also the big Homecoming Weekend game." Weed also stated that the 110 UMass regulars will be joined by 30 to 40 alumni band members at the opening ceremonies of the game on Saturday.

The students at UMass are proud of the band's excellent performances and recognize the hard work and long hours of practice, which make the band one of the most outstanding and school-spirited groups on campus.

Under Penalty of Death

Should Massachusetts retain the death penalty? This question may seem irrelevant to the immediate interests of the ordinary citizen. However, each person who votes in the 1968 state elections may be asked to answer this vital question.

On October third, the State Senate proposed an amendment of Gov. Volpe's bill to set up a commission to study the deterrent value of capital punishment. The Senate version of the bill calls for a referendum. If this bill becomes law the Senate will be able to ease the burden of decision off its own shoulders onto those of the voting public.

The Boston Globe has predicted editorially that the results of such a public vote will favor retention of the death penalty.

Yet statistics indicate an opposite trend. The death penalty has already been abolished or drastically reduced in 13 states. In 1966 only one state, Oklahoma, carried out a death sentence. Within ten years the federal government has had only one execution. These facts suggest the gradual extinction of capital punishment in the United States.

Many explanations can be offered for this widespread reluctance to carry out the death penalty. More than once the question of the constitutionality of capital punishment has been raised. How can punishment by death be reconciled with an Eighth Amendment which forbids any form of punishment which is "cruel and unusual"?

Another question raised in regard to the effectiveness of capital punishment is this: Does the threat of the death penalty serve as a deterrent to criminals? This is the question Gov. Volpe hopes to answer by establishing a committee to study the issue. Statistics quoted in a recent issue of The Mentor, the Walpole State Prison newspaper, suggest that capital punishment has had no substantial deterrent value in the past few decades.

The article referred to "FBI statistics showing that the lowest murder rates in the country from the period 1930 through 1965 were in five states which have abolished capital punishment and the highest in five states which have retained the death penalty."

If facts fail to establish a positive correlation between the threat of the death sentence and the number of murders committed, then what possible justification is there for the retention of capital punishment? Can mere revenge be considered a rational motive for killing a man? Proponents of the "eye for an eye" code of justice belong back in the age of Odysseus and his system of Greek gods.

Massachusetts now has the opportunity to catch up with the times by eliminating this archaic mode of criminal punishment. If the proposed bill to hold a referendum passes, it will be the duty of every informed citizen to vote against capital punishment.

Open Houses Now

By JAMES G. COLLINS
President, Student Senate

During the last few weeks numerous individuals and residence halls have made known their dissatisfaction with the present open house policy, as defined in the 1967-68 Student Handbooks. Some houses have contemplated instituting their own policy without waiting for the University to revamp the existing rules pertaining to visiting hours and frequency.

I believe that such action can only be detrimental to the student cause, and I wish to offer an alternative method of attaining student desires.

Last Spring the Student Senate passed a bill stating that "Each residence hall government be allowed to determine its own unique policy on the frequency, duration, social conduct and door policy with respect to open houses."

The Student Government then agreed with faculty and administrators to discuss this issue in the joint student committees of Student Life and Student Affairs. But the students may well ask: why the delay? Why should they live by rules which they did not cooperate in forming? Are these bureaucratic channels only a "foot-dragging" device?

It is agreed that the motion will stand a far better chance of acceptance by the Board of Trustees if it has a strong rationale underlying it and the support of the other members of the University community, the faculty and administration.

At the beginning of this semester, the joint administration-student committee, Student Life, reported favorably on the proposed open house policy. These people dealt with and offered solutions to such problems as residence hall voting and ratification procedures and methods of implementation of open houses. The policy is further being discussed in the joint faculty-student committee, Student Affairs, a committee of the Faculty Senate. The committee is presently answering such questions as: what is the role of the University in relation to the students' morals and is an unlimited visiting policy in the educational-development interests of the student body. I have been told by the Committee that its members are striving to answer all the questions before it by the end of this semester.

Finally the policy will go before the Board of Trustees for action.

I ask students to support their representatives in these final stages of negotiation. While we can expect and rightfully demand reasonably quick action by faculty and administrators, we must also take the time to formulate the best policy possible. We are striving for more open houses, but most important, we are attempting to demonstrate that the students are capable of acting intelligently and reasonably in directing their social lives.

Campus Comment

At the Earliest Possible Time

To the editor:

Because of the continuing student interest in the matter of open house policy —their administration, frequency and extent—the Faculty Senate Committee on Student Affairs felt it was appropriate to indicate the extent of its involvement with this issue.

The Committee has as its charge from the Faculty Senate to "review and make recommendations on all non-academic rules and regulations" and to "consider and recommend policies and procedures pertaining to non-academic discipline, student rights (and) dormitory life . . .". The membership is eight Faculty members, the Dean of Students and nine undergraduates.

Among the many possible substantive agenda items for discussion suggested by this pervasive charge, the Committee voted to confine itself exclusively to discussion of open houses. The complexity of the issue and its many ramifications made it incumbent on us to consider all aspects of a change in the existing policy acknowledging both the social and educational aspects of this issue.

Our approach has been purposely deliberate for this is not an easily disposed of matter that readily commends itself to easy solutions. All available evidence, both in support of a change and for retention of the present rule is actively being sought and analyzed. Yet unanswered questions require our attention, however.

This report then is to advise those concerned with this issue of our active commitment to report out a definitive position and recommendations with regard to the open house policy at the earliest possible time and to urge interested and concerned students and others to cooperate with the Committee by offering advice and counsel to the end of promoting an acceptable and viable open house policy.

On Censoring

To the editor:

It has been brought to the attention of the University administration that offending signs are continually being placed in the windows of resident dorms. Consequently, the administration will issue a directive concerning this student misbehavior.

The most immediate solution to the problem is to declare it an offense to put any sign at all in one's window. This solution would provide a quick and easy method for eliminating a situation which is embarrassing to some of the residents and embarrassing for the University as a whole. This solution may seem somewhat harsh; but the University must retain a good public image, which is important for any reputable school.

In anticipation of such a University ruling, students are already protesting that their freedom of speech will be denied. Anyone who thinks over the problem cannot honestly say that the administration would be closing down a major facility of student communication. The student may responsibly express himself through the "Collegian", the "Caesura", the campus radio station WMUA, and through his dorm newsletters.

However, the administration could also choose an easier solution, but maybe at the cost of delayed action in removal of offending signs. This alternate method would be to delegate the responsibility for policing signs offensive and in bad taste to the individual dorms' house judiciary systems.

In that manner, not only is it the students' prerogative to determine what is offensive, but censorship is achieved by the students themselves. However, most important, another clash between administration and students is prevented and the students are given another opportunity for self government.

This Is a Matter for the Police . . .

To the Editor:

I am sure most people are aware of the recent arguments concerning the Amherst Police Department. I would like to go against the general trend and speak in defense of the police department.

I was recently arrested and kept in the cell overnight. Granted the housing conditions were .. he best, but what do you expect? Going to jail isn't a trend.

Concerning the business mentioned by the two youths arrested for drunkenness about their constitutional rights, I think the story is slightly overdone. When I was arrested I was immediately told of my rights and was only routinely frisked. I was informed of my bail within 30 minutes and was allowed to make my phone call at my own picked time. As a matter of fact, I was allowed to make three calls by the night man.

Now, I think it only fair to give credit where credit is due. The same men are on duty at night and I doubt they turned into dirty fuzz overnight. I must mention though that I was very fortunate to have my own cell. Perhaps I got picked up on an off night. Maybe I should complain that the police just picked on me.

My advice is take it like a man.

Drop Out of Reality

To the editor:

Out of the jumble and crumble of broken dreams, Miss Corea (real, or a creation of Al Capp?) has fashioned an apopemptic, self-indulgent wail. No, Virginia, life is not one long Coca-Cola advertisement; all of us mortals have to make compromises.

Yes, people do lie, connive, exploit and betray not only in the books which Miss Corea is suddenly so suspicious of (notwithstanding the use of several quotes and semi-quotes), but even in our day-to-day world.

She is dropping out of 'this world' of remaining students with a petulant, whimpering bang, but where could she be going? Home to the parental womb, where all the nasty shortcomings of the world can be avoided? Surely not into the 'real' world in which problems are a trifle less philosophical?

She has discovered McLuhan, death and a Dr. Ryan Drum, apparently a combination with telling effects. She has discovered that she has to do things which she doesn't want to (such as, gasp, learning a language). Wait till she discovers that money (snort, spit, scorn) is scarce enough that some people work to get it.

For the "first time" she asks why (this is, of course, the first time someone was discontented) and lo! not even Dr. Drum can descend to give her answers. She sees, she cries, she leaves (she says). Maybe if she hadn't cried, she wouldn't be leaving.

Temporary Roads To Be Built To Alleviate Traffic Problems

UMass will construct two temporary roads to alleviate heavy traffic patterns in the town of Amherst.

Robert W. Kittle, assistant to the treasurer, said today that a temporary road through the south lot by Whitmore Administration Building, emptying onto North Pleasant Street between the Baptist Church and the Newman Center, will be opened by this weekend, in time to accommodate heavy homecoming traffic.

"This should alleviate the heavy traffic congestion on Fearing St.," he said. A University traffic officer will be on duty at the North Pleasant St. entrance to the parking lot during the day, he added.

In the near future, a road that will divert traffic on the north side of campus from Old Town Road will be built. This road will empty traffic onto North Pleasant St. in the area of the proposed Graduate Research Center. A University traffic officer will also be on duty at that point.

"The decision to build these temporary roads," said Kittle, "came as a result of meetings with town officials. The University wants to cooperate with the town in solving University-generated traffic problems."

Case of Two UMass Seniors To Be Continued

The court appearance of Chester S. Weinerman and Stanley M. Levco, charged with drunkenness has been continued to Friday, Oct. 27.

The two UMass seniors were arrested by Amherst Police outside of the Village Inn last Friday. The two have called the incident a false arrest on charges of a "violation of constitutional rights."

Amherst Police Chief Francis Hart did not offer a specific comment on the incident when questioned by the Daily Collegian earlier in the week.

Governors Meet At Sea . . . The Debate Goes On

Democratic governors vowed Thursday to press for a resolution endorsing the Johnson administration's Vietnamese policy, despite a furor over a White House message that went astray and landed in Republican hands.

In another development, Gov. George Romney of Michigan said he might announce his candidacy for the GOP presidential nomination Nov. 15.

The wayward message was delivered by accident to Gov. Ronald Reagan of California aboard the liner Independence, where the governors were holding their 59th national conference while steaming toward the Virgin Islands.

It asked Price Daniel of Texas, administration liaison man with the governors, to question two Republicans — Govs. James A. Rhodes of Ohio and John H. Chaffee of Rhode Island—about their support of the President's war policy.

Yankee Conference Cites Players For Outstanding Performances

UMass quarterback Greg Landry, New Hampshire end Bill Vasilios and Maine quarterback Dave Wing have been chosen as the top offensive, defensive and sophomore players in the Yankee Conference for their performances last Saturday.

Landry scored three touchdowns, netted 200 yards rushing on 21 tries and led Massachusetts to a 35-14 Conference win over Connecticut. Landry broke the UMass career total offense record and now has gained 3,636 yards.

Vasilios, a senior, sparked New Hampshire to its first Conference win, 17-0, over Maine. He threw the Maine quarterback three times for big losses and returned a fumble recovery 46 yards to set up a UNH touchdown.

Wing, Maine's tricky sophomore, was a standout in a losing cause. He completed 18 of 35 passes for 174 yards as Maine lost to New Hampshire.

Other nominations were—offense — end Gene Benner (Maine), halfback Paul Couturier (New Hampshire), end Frank Geiselman (Rhode Island), fullback Jim Cohane (Vermont) and quarterback Pete Petrillo (Connecticut); defense—linebacker Pete Quakenbush (Maine), linebacker Bill Wolf (Vermont), cornerback Mike McArdle (Massachusetts), linebacker Ken Kuzman (Rhode Island) and tackle Steve Dixon (Connecticut); sophomores — halfback Bob Rudolph (New Hampshire), end Harry Canning (Vermont), flanker John Crisp (Connecticut) and defensive end Tom York (Massachusetts).

Rains Halt Hoop (?) Practice

Basketball practice was proceeding smoothly in its first week—until the rains came. Water leaking through the roof of the Curry Hicks Cage, UMass' glass menagerie, poured onto the court Wednesday during practice.

Coach Jack Leaman promptly decided to stop the workout which lasted only 45 minutes.

The freshman team, which normally practices after the varsity, worked out Wednesday in the Boyden gym.

Practice for both teams resumed at the Cage last night.

UMass Trackmen To Test Winning Ways Against BC

By JOEL FOX
Staff Reporter

The UMass cross-country team will try to continue their newly found winning ways against Boston College, in Boston, Saturday. The team rebounded from two consecutive losses by crushing Rhode Island, 19-36, on Tuesday.

Cross-country coach, Bill Footrick, asserts that his boys will continue their winning ways. "BC is a weak team this year. They lost their best runner, Norris, who graduated, and have been unable to win a meet thus far this year. We should be able to beat them handily."

Coach Footrick went on to say that he wanted his boys to run the BC course hard Saturday, for the New England championship is going to be held there this year, and he wants the team to be experienced at running a hard race on it.

Coach Footrick then switched his attention from the upcoming BC meet to the Yankee Conference. He attributed the team's one point loss to UConn last week to the "inexperience of our young runners." And although he feels that UConn will go undefeated against Yan-Con rivals, he believes that the Redmen can avenge their loss by topping UConn in the Yankee Conference league meet.

Charles Lang and Paul Hoss are strong runners who will finish very high in the league meet. Coach Footrick said that what will determine whether they win or not will be the team's depth. "Gelinas and Bowman will have a lot to say about the league champions. Also, our fifth man will be a determining factor." That position is up for grabs between a few boys now, the coach summed up.

All-East — Defense tackle Kent Stevens was named to the weekly ECAC All-East team. The 6'-215 pound senior from Plymouth will be back in action when the Redmen take on Rhode Island tomorrow.

FRESHMAN HOCKEY

Conference Lead at Stake

Rams Set to Test Redmen Defense

A major obstacle in the Redmen's defense of the Yankee Conference will be confronted Saturday when the Redmen host the undefeated Rhode Island Rams at Alumni Stadium. The Homecoming Day game will get underway at 1:30.

UMass takes a 2-0 Conference record into the game while the Rams are 1-0-1. Overall UMass is 2-1 and URI is 3-0-1.

The Rams, under Coach Jack Zilly, have maintained their always formidable passing attack while augmenting it with a sound and maturing defense.

Rhody in defeating Delaware, Brown and New Hampshire and tying Vermont, has allowed just one touchdown since opening game and none in the last two. The Rams have outscored the opposition 53-31, although they were the underdog each time.

The Redmen will be putting several streaks on the line Saturday. UMass has won 11 straight Conference games, six straight Homecoming games and has seven straight decisions over the Rams.

But URI has the weapons to end all three streaks and take possession of first place in the Conference. The Rams offense is paced by junior quarterback Larry Caswell, who has completed 44 of 106 passes for 527 yards. Chief targets are split end Frank Geiselman with 16 receptions for 281 yards and flanker Henry Walker with 14 catches for 133 yards.

Fusia expects the Rams to fill the air with pigskin. "They used to exploit Geiselman," he said, "but they're also throwing a lot to Walker this year.

Fullback Bill Bjerke is the leading rusher with 165 yards and a 3.5 average. Defensively the Rams average 225 pounds up front and have two outstanding linebackers in Ken Kuzman and Ed Kasack .

Rhode Island may be the biggest team UMass will face this season, according to Coach Vic Fusia, with a line that averages between 235 and 240 pounds.

UMass, meanwhile, came out of the 35-14 win over Connecticut in good shape, although minor injuries to tailback Tim Driscoll and second fullback Ed Sarno have hobbled them this week.

Key to the win over UConn was a powerful ground attack that piled up 389 yards with quarterback Greg Landry picking up 200 on 21 tries. Seven other backs gained yardage with tailbacks John Tutino and John Decembrele and wingbacks Jerry Grasso and Fred Hairston being the most impressive.

A solid effort by the defensive secondary of sidebacks Mike McArdle and Bill Frye and Safety Steve Rogers was pleasing to the coaching staff since Rhode Island's expected aerial fireworks will put the Redman under constant pressure.

NOT-SO-SMALL - SMALL — Senior center Howie Small, 6'3"-240 lb., will start for the Rams Saturday against UMass.

Opponents Scheduled Weekend Grid Action

All of UMass' opponents will see action this weekend. There are two other Yankee Conference games, and each of UMass' independent rivals is putting in a workout Saturday. Saturday.

In a key Yankee Conference clash, a highly regarded New Hampshire team plays host to their arch rival, the Vermont Catamounts at Durham, N. H.

Connecticut makes the long trek to Orono, Maine, hoping to inflict yet another loss on the hapless Maine Black Bears. Last year's game between these two was a real thriller with the Huskies coming out on top, 20 - 19.

Boston University takes on Holy Cross at Worcester in one of the top New England games. The Terriers won their first two games, but they have since taken three on the nose. After losing to Dartmouth two weeks ago, the Crusaders beat Colgate last week in their home opener.

A spirited Rutgers outfit rides into the valley of death when they invade West Point to do battle with a nationally ranked Army team. Last week the Scarlet Knights had trouble getting by lowly Delaware so it looks like a long ride home to New Brunswick.

Boston College is a touchdown favorite to get back on the winning track against Buffalo at Chestnut Hill. Last week's mauling by Penn State could have the Eagles down, whereas the Bulls have already beaten one Boston outfit.

Donovan Review

'The Magician He Sparkled'

By CHET WEINERMAN
Editor-in-Chief

He is a modern minstrel, a bard of beauty.

He is Donovan, and any attempts to label him anything else are injustice. The American press refers to him as the English Dylan, with whom Donovan is in rivalry Yet, anyone who has truly studied the music of the two men realizes that their brands of music are polar and antithetical. Dylan is Dylan. Donovan is Donovan.

I was with him for quite some time, both before and after the concert. He is a gentle person whose eyes boyishly emit love. This is why his songs communicate their message so effectively; he feels the love he sings of.

A battered Gibson J-45 is caressed by the 21 year old. "It's been with me a long time," he says as he snips off the old strings and prepares to put on the new La Bellas. "I've had it since Fairy Tale."

He began to warm up, playing a couple of his newer songs. "Don writes an average of two songs a week," said Nickie, a long time friend of Donovan.

Many critics claim that Donovan has left the pure folk. I do not believe he has been a traitor to folk, but rather his style has evolved into a fine combination of folk, jazz, and rock.

A new double record set will be released in December. In it, Donovan will sing 10 pure folk songs and 12 folk - jazz numbers. It will be a fancily boxed album, with artistic illustrations included. Despite the division in songs, there is only one Donovan.

He has not really changed his style; he has broadened his scope, and this is quite natural when one considers that his earlier music was written when he was 17 years old. He should not be condemned for the reflection in his music of his increased maturity and background.

I spoke with Nickie about the influence of marijuana upon music today. He erupted into laughter, remembering those who interpreted Mellow Yellow as being about banana smoking. "It's about some TV commercial in England," he said.

Nickie went on to tell how Don was opposed to the use of marijuana. "Some entertainers

ARTHUR SCHLESINGER

Pulitzer Prize winning historian Arthur Shlesinger will lecture on "The Dilemma in Vietnam" in the Student Union Ballroom, October 25 at 8 p.m.

Schlesinger to Lecture On Dilemma in Vietnam

As part of the series of Distinguished Visitors this year, Arthur Schlesinger will appear in the Student Union Ballroom to lecture on "The Dilemma in Vietnam".

Schlesinger "ranks among the foremost in the new generation of vigorous social thinkers," says The New York Times. In 1946, at the age of 28 he was the youngest historian ever to win the Pulitzer Prize when he received it for The Age Of Jackson. He is established as one of America's leading historians.

He has also been active in public affairs. As Special Assistant to Pres. Kennedy he traveled extensively in Europe and South America, sat in on policy meetings, and was intimately involved in many vital decisions. Out of his experiences in Washington came the book A Thousand Days, a Book of the Month Club selection, and a best-seller in this country, England, and the Netherlands. It is being translated and printed in France, Germany, Spain, Portugal, Denmark, Norway, Italy, Sweden, and Japan.

Mr. Schlesinger's third book, The Vital Center, a brilliant discussion of contemporary political and social problems, was published in 1949; The General And The President, an analysis of American foreign policy in terms of the issues raised by Pres. Truman's dismissal of Gen. MacArthur and written in collaboration with Richard Rovere, was issued in 1951; it was republiished in 1965 under the title, The MacArthur Controversy.

In 1961 Mr. Schlesinger went to Washington as Special Assistant to the President. In this capacity he served Pres. Kennedy until his death and thereafter, Pres. Johnson.

He left the White House in Mar., 1964 to write a book, A Thousand Days.

It won the Pulitzer Prize for History, as well as the National Book Award for 1966 and was on the best seller list for many months. At present, Dr. Schlesinger is Albert Schweitzer Prof. of Humanities at the City Univ. of N. Y., Graduate Division.

UMass Trustees Seek Record Budget From Governor and Legislature

AMHERST—UMass will present a budget request of $51,828,389 for fiscal 1969 to Governor John A. Volpe and the Budget Bureau.

The budget request, approved on Saturday, Oct. 21, by the University Board of Trustees, calls for an $11,726,747 increase over this year's requirements.

Most of the increase is directly related to the cost of enrolling an additional 2300 students at the Amherst and Boston campuses and an expanded summer school, the cost of operating new buildings, and long-term investments in library books, academic equipment and building renovations.

Of the $51,828,389 total, it is expected that $6,095,700, to be received in tuition and other income, will be returned to the Commonwealth, leaving a net cost to the Commonwealth of $45,733,689.

Major increases are attributable to necessary expansion of library holdings at both Amherst and Boston. A total of $1 million is requested for the Amherst library to maintain minimum accreditation standards for a university of 15,835 students. At Boston, $600,000 is requested for library acquisitions to develop a basic undergraduate library for that institution as it enters its fourth year.

In a statement accompanying the budget document, the Governor and Legislature are lauded for past financial support of faculty expansion and merit increases, and for finding new buildings to meet a growing enrollment. "In general the response of the University, the Governor, and the General Court to the enrollment problem has been exemplary and constitutes one of the finest records in the history of American education," says the statement.

The critical budget problems for the University, according to the document, are in what can be called "academic support" areas such as equipment, educational supplies, repairs and maintenance, where serious cutbacks in recent years have hampered university operations. For example, between 1964 and 1968, the University in Amherst has added 1500 students annually, the equivalent of a Williams College, and UMass-Boston has been opened and built to an enrollment of 2650 students.

During this five-year period, the personal services accounts for faculty salaries increased only 15 percent. The per student increase in the personal services accounts for that period amounts to an increase of 45 percent, whereas the "academic support" areas decreased 29 percent on a per student basis.

The statement notes that major portions of the budget for several years have been allocated for the acquisition of new faculty to accomodate a rapidly growing student body, and for merit increases for faculty. Under state law, the University apportioned a substantial part of last year's budget for non-profes-

Students March on Pentagon

By PATRICK FLAHERTY
Staff Reporter

The quiet peace march in Washington yesterday climaxed in a noisy demonstration outside the Pentagon. Despite the front page headlines awarded to the limited violence, non-violence was the tone of the day.

Three buses filled with 130 students and residents of the four-college area made the long, tiring trip to Washington. Twenty-five other people from Amherst drove down by car, thus adding to New England's good representation.

Soon after entering our nation's capital, we noticed how the White House towered over the surrounding slums. The streets were almost deserted in direct contrast to the large stream of traffic that followed later as the war protesters flooded into the city.

The white marbled Lincoln Memorial served as the convocation center for the milling gatherers. There the speaker's platform was set up for the National Mobilization Committee to end the War in Vietnam.

In 1848, Abraham Lincoln, as a senator, criticized President Polk's war policy with Mexico, thus the historic site had symbolic value for Vietnam war dissenters.

The scattered groups who arrived first turned into a wave of humanity as busloads and carloads of demonstrators continued to fill the swelling ranks of the movement. While people carried their peace signs, two children played mock war with their toy submachine gun. Due to the large size of the crowd, its mobility was effected; and the march was delayed several hours until 3 p.m. as a strategy meeting was held by leaders of the mobilization committee to determine the course of action.

Combined with the long trips and lack of available food, the long delay produced a quiet frustration in the participants. Once in a while the tinkling of hippie bells filled the air. This was one of the few sounds of gaity; the festive air of New York was missing. The people were more somber and serious in Washington.

Although the demonstrators were mostly students, this did not prevent a turnout that surpassed the expectations of both government and mobilization officials. With the perspective of by experience in New York's April mobilization and the view I had of the procession, this reported estimates a 150,000 attendance of marchers and the many who decided not to wait for the march to move scattered themselves along the planned route as spectators.

The march itself was very peaceful and was marred only once by a few swastika-wearing men who attacked. This occurred at the beginning; after the police arrested the agitators, the march proceeded unmolested.

Instructions over the loudspeaker were not always clear, so many people were confused when the march broke up before reaching their planned destination, the Pentagon. That strategy mapping may have determined that such a large crowd could not be handled at the Pentagon. Later the planned civil disobedience (CD) took place on the Pentagon steps, attendance there increased as more people were informed about its location.

At the Pentagon, the tempo of the protest picked up. Demonstrators were much more vocal. Approximately 10-15,000 remained to support the 1,200 seated on the Pentagon steps. The object of this civil disobedience war purportedly to block the operations of the "war machine" by barring entrance to the employees. To my knowledge about 8 UM students were among the CD's.

National papers have headlined the effort by 10-15 students to forcefully enter the Pentagon. This group didn't act in accordance with the Mobilization Committee's instructions. It stressed that no violence was to be used by the CD's; if the Pentagon doors were guarded, no efforts were to be made to gain entrance. This incident produced bloody results. The demonstrators had been informed before that the police would permit the sit-in.

The Pentagon crowd seemed aroused, thus one speaker warned them against getting "overexcited." Encouraged by CD's, spectators climbed up the front walls of the Pentagon with ropes to join them in their vigil. I saw one war vet, identified by his hat, join the predominantly student group. At one point several MP's removed their helmets and sat with the CD's.

Burning draft cards flickered in the oncoming darkness to the cheers and applause of thousands. I viewed 20 such incidents and there were reportedly many more. One unverified report was that 950 draft cards were turned in to the Attorney General of Washington.

Later between 7-8 p.m. 2 hours after the march had ended, "emergency" calls went out to demonstrators for "food, blankets, and water" for the CD's who pending police interference, planned to remain seated until Monday. As reports of tear gas being used against the CD's increased, requests were made for "wet handkerchiefs" for protection. These reports were verified to me by UM students on the scene; but one government official publicly maintained that the demonstrators used the tear gas, not the police.

Student Protestors Mauled; No Police Protection Given

By PAT PETOW
Editorial Chairman

The climax of a week of demonstrating in Northampton was an assault Friday on twenty-five anti-war protestors by a crowd of over 100 counter-demonstrators between noon and 1 p.m. as a special edition of The Amherst Student reported.

The reports in that newspaper charge the Northampton police with failing to give protection to the non-violent protestors. A Smith College drama instructor Edwin Felien was knocked to the ground and suffered facial cuts, the STUDENT said.

At a meeting yesterday at the Amherst Unitarian Church the ad-hoc group of demonstrators made plans for a stand today. One of the organizers of the group told the Daily Collegian last night:

"We will be out there at noon tomorrow as usual." Eric Bohman '70 of Amherst College went on to say that he expected a large increase in the numbers of people at the demonstration.

He explained that the group today would be in two segments: the anti-war group and a group supporting their right to express their views. The second group, said Bohman, is "very near us" but they don't necessarily share the same political leanings.

The special edition of the STUDENT on Saturday reported that ten to twelve Smith professors would be on hand today to see whether police protection would be available to the demonstrators. If not, the Smith faculty members themselves plan to protect the ad-hoc group of demonstrators on Tuesday.

A spokesman for the UMass Faculty Group on Peace and War also issued a statement to the Daily Collegian in support of the demonstrators. "The Faculty Group on Peace and War have deplored the violence which broke out in Friday's demonstration in Northampton and the failure of the police to protect the marchers."

The UMass professors urged that faculty members and students write to the Northampton mayor and police chief to protest "this failure of police protection."

The University will be represented by faculty members at the demonstration, said the spokesman, today and in the days following.

Bohman mentioned yesterday that the Sunday morning vigil, which is separately organized, attracted about 180 people yesterday in Northampton although usually only 35 people participate.

At the planning session yesterday, he said, there were about 120 people supporting the original group of 25 members.

The whole point of the demonstration, Bohman emphasized, is that, we make it known that the battle for people's minds cannot be won by force whether in Vietnam or Northampton.

"The thing that is very important is that we remain non-violent," he asserted, inviting people to support the demonstrators if they can maintain their non-violence.

Bohman explained that the protestors are organized on an ad-hoc basis while members are affiliated with other organizations also.

He described the basic feeling of the group as opposition to the draft as a system and expressed their view that honorable men should resign from association with the draft board.

In addition to their general opinion of draft board members, the group, he said, during last week has found specific complaints against James Faulkner, the chairman of the Northampton board.

Faulkner, Bohman charged has stated he would reclassify any demonstrators under his jurisdiction from 2S to 1A.

sional employee salary increases as a result of legislation that provided across-the-board raises for all state employees.

In presenting the budget to the Trustees for approval, UMass President John W. Lederle said, "Through the support of the Governor and Legislature we have been able to attract outstanding faculty in increasing numbers. Our salaries, although not high, are competitive.

"We must, however, find additional funds to support and enrich current programs if we are to become a great university. Our libraries at both campuses need major financial bolstering if they are to meet minimum requirements as university libraries.

"In addition to constantly improving undergraduate education, the University has a special responsibility in the Commonwealth to provide quality graduate education. This means there must be increased support for research facilities, supplies and equipment."

"I am confident that the Governor and Legislature, despite perennial revenue burdens and decisions, will do their utmost to meet the necessary long-term investment in the youth of the Commonwealth.

'Poor Dad' Leads Off New Theater Season

Arthur L. Kopit's intriguing play, "Oh Dad, Poor Dad, Mama's Hung You in the Closet and I'm Feeling So Sad" ended Saturday as part of the Sixth season of the University of Massachusetts Theatre.

The play projects the inner feelings of a young man being dominated by a mother who tries to deny him contact with the world outside.

The difficulty in using the convention of the Theatre of the Absurd was illustrated by the often confused and frowning audience. Such devices as noisy pirhana fish, growling Venus fly traps and a "lively" corpse left the audience in a bewildered unreal atmosphere.

Carolyn Miller's superb portrayal of Madame Rosepetal who arrives in Port Royal with her dead stuffed husband in a coffin captivated immediate attention and involvement on the part of the viewers. Her retarded son, Jonathan, played by Michael Prusky, over-dramatically kills the girl portrayed by Gail Herman who is about to make love to him.

The role of the aging Commodore Roseabove was played by Bill Anderson, who becomes easy prey for the domineering personality of Madame Rosepetal.

Six active bellboys clumsily made their entrances and exists in such a way as not to detract from the main action of the play.

The scenery and lighting of "Oh Dad, Poor Dad" fit well into the scheme of the Absurd Theatre, but various sound effects were emphasized to an unnecessary degree.

In order to properly judge the effect of "Oh Dad, Poor Dad" one important question must be answered. Did it attempt to express its sense of the senselessness of the state of man and a general failure of a rational approach by various disregard of rational thought and device?

If the answer to this question is yes, then "Oh Dad, Poor Dad" may indeed be considered a success. Otherwise, the production lost its meaning in a series of truly "absurd" and unreal events.

Volunteers Give Service To Mentally Retarded

By MARTIN F. GLENDON
Staff Reporter

Every Saturday at 1 p.m., a busload of UMass student volunteers leaves the North Commons Parking Lot destined for the Belchertown State School for the Mentally Retarded. Here they devote two hours of their afternoon to the tutoring and therapy of Belchertown patients.

The volunteer program, initiated in 1959, is sponsored by the RSO, which provides bus transportation for the students. Until last year, the Volunteers For Retarded Children had to provide their own transportation. RSO sponsorship makes it possible for more students to assist at Belchertown.

The 100 student volunteers operate under the supervision of Mrs. Doris Grover, head of the volunteer office at Belchertown. She said the volunteers are usually able to choose the age groups that they would like to work with. The patients range in age from three weeks to 86 years old.

Working closely with Mrs. Grover is volunteer co-ordinator Aline MacDonnell. Aline, a senior at UMass and a sister of Lambda Delta Phi, serves as president of the Volunteers for Retarded Children. She co-ordinates all phases of volunteer work including teaching, transportation and public relations. Her primary objective is to spark student interest in the program.

The volunteers work with the patients on a one-to-one ratio. This enables a bond of affection to develop between volunteer and patient—so necessary to successful therapy.

The many activities in which volunteers assist include record hops, play therapy, charm school, crafts, and outdoor activities such as hayrides and walks.

One of the unique contributions of the volunteers are the puppets of Leonard Radin. This imaginative volunteer produces weekly puppet shows and supplements them by teaching the children to make puppets. Some of the patients who hold day jobs outside the school receive tutoring from the volunteers in reading and arithmetic.

A great loss to the volunteer program came in the death last summer of Miss Nancy Abeles after an automobile accident. One of the most devoted of the student volunteers, Nancy had accumulated more than 120 hours of service at Belchertown from 1965 to 1967. Her work at the school has resulted in the establishment of the Nancy Abeles Fund. This is to be used for the Tadgell Nursery, where Nancy spent most of her time working with the little patients she loved so much.

In the opinion of Mrs. Grover, the performance of volunteers has been outstanding. Said she, "We cannot praise them highly enough; they are vital to our program and we need many more. The volunteers provide opportunities for activity that would otherwise be unavailable to our patients."

Applications Available For DVP Committee

The Distinguished Visitors Program committee will begin accepting applications for membership this week. The Distinguished Visitors Program is a unique organization founded, supported, and operated by students. Its function is to attract outstanding representatives from all fields to this campus.

DVP affords students the opportunity to hear and see prominent spokesmen in programs geared to supplement specific interests as well as to extend general awareness and knowledge.

This past year DVP has summoned Henry Steele Commager from as near as Amherst and Hugh MacDiarmid from as far as Edinburgh, Scotland. Topics have ranged from Miriam Williams and jazz to Robert Hutchins and education.

Programs for the current year include Arthur Schlesinger, Jr., Justice William Douglas, Andrei Voznesensky, and Linus Pauling.

The Distinguished Visitors Program Committee at this time is seeking students interested in planning and working for future events.

Applications will be available in the RSO office Thursday, October 26 and must be returned by Friday, November 3. Selections will be based on personal interviews beginning Wednesday, November 8.

We Are Shocked

While a number of area students were preparing to travel to Washington last Friday to participate in demonstrations against the War there, others continued the week-long protest in Northampton.

The marchers have been attempting to deliver a letter to the Northampton Draft Board calling for its resignation.

On Friday as a special edition of The Amherst Student reports, "Approximately twenty-five anti-War demonstrators were shoved and beaten by a crowd of over 100 counter-demonstrators . . . No arrest were made."

The actions of the crowd is frightening. The lack of action by public authorities, the mayor, the police, and the draft board head, can be understood although completely inexcusable. The police did not prevent the violence, the mayor did not order the police to their duty, and the chairman of the draft board has refused to discuss the draft with the protestors.

The draft board head, James Faulkner, when he was informed of the attack on a Smith instructor, commented: "Too bad they didn't break his damn neck."

The promise of the demonstrators to return to Northampton tomorrow is heartening. A group of a dozen or so Smith faculty members has decided to protect the marchers on Tuesday if there is a repeat of violence and lack of police action on Monday. This is also gratifying.

The reason for the protestors demanding the resignation of the draft board head was not given. But his statements following the Friday incident should cause every citizen to wonder why he should continue to hold his office.

We believe that Faulkner's attitude toward the demonstrators is unbecoming to his position.

We are saddened by the hecklers.

We believe in the right of citizens to demonstrate peaceable (adhering to the town's regulations).

We are simply shocked. Was it "public attitude" toward anti-war demonstrators that made it possible? We hope not. We hope that public attitude and the attitude of the academic community will prevent this from happening again.

For if opinions of the community preclude the right to express dissenting views, then perhaps we should stand with the ten or twelve Smith professors tomorrow and the next day. —THE EDITORS

Did You Say Talent?

It is a good thing that The Happenings happened. A last minute throw-in, this group saved the Saturday night concert from becoming a complete insult to the tastes of anyone past pre-adolescence.

Perhaps one novelty and/or psychedelic group could have been tolerated. But not three acts from the same gendre. The Boys From New York City were interesting for the first number, but interesting in the same way. Films of the Coconut Grove fire are interesting. To call the Magoos sound music for a college audience is absurd. Their appeal was high up there, but not too many in the audience could quite find it.

The Happenings were excellent but what made them great was the rubbish that preceded them. Two standing ovations were evidence enough that what UMass audiences really want is talent. Of that, The Happenings had plenty.

Can one honestly say that the other groups had genuine talent of any kind? Their appeal was at best to a limited group.

This was Homecoming Week-End, when parents and alumni come to the University for a week-end of entertainment to see how UMass college life is for 1967. What they saw at the Saturday Concert is not a true representation of the wishes of the majority on campus.

The answer to the problem may well be greater participation by students on the various concert committees throughout the year. More immediately, what is needed is a greater consciousness and conscience on the part of those who posses authority in the hiring of talent on campus.

When one considers the thousands and thousands of dollars that were spent on the Saturday concert, one wonders if the best possible talent was secured. Actually, we unanimously feel that, with one or two exceptions, no talent whatever was present in the Cage that night.

Senate Comment — Abbie M. O'Meara

The Theme of Student Responsibility

The meeting last week of the Student Senate saw one outstanding example of self-restraint and another act whose validity will depend on the self-restraint of the student body.

In the first case, the Senate passed a bill to alleviate the line situation at one of the Southwest Dining Commons. The device given approval allows SW students to eat in any line of the two dining commons.

But the student government by a close margin on a roll-call vote defeated an amendment which would have asked for an exemption policy for the SW residential area like that in effect for the rest of the campus.

The exemptions would have covered seniors, those over 21, and Greeks.

This defeated plan was first proposed by the Food Services Committee of the Senate, but it was shelved by them because (1) a better plan was worked out (the one described above) and (2) the original plan was not financially feasible.

The reason that exemptions are not financially feasible is that refunds made retroactively, as proposed, would mean that the University would not receive funds to cover the cost of the building bonds—those students not exempted in such a case would have to be charged more.

As pointed out in an editorial early this year, the University's required dining plans are long-ranged and it is too late to do much about them. The buildings have been built, the bonds floated, and so the students must pay for them.

At any rate many students would probably favor SW exemptions even if those required to buy meal tickets had to pay more. The logic might be that it would be better to pay more over three years and be exempt in the last year.

While such arguments for exemptions are not without merit they do not directly relate to the current line situation, when there is, in fact, other ways to tackle the problem. So the Senate resisted the attempt to attach the exemption rider in considering the lines.

The rider was termed "sneaky" by one Senator who indicated that it would have been acting in the bad faith that is sometimes charged of the administration.

The second area of Student action—demanding that there be no censorship whatever of window signs in the Southwest dorms — will require the self-restraint of the student body to be successful.

The act passed specifically prohibits House Councils from acting as censors in ordering removal or modification of signs.

The Senate by its explicitness has certainly offended some House Councils but if the act is not supported by the actions of the students, the Senate will also have alienated many officials of the University who must contend with the maturity of the students.

Offensive window signs, no one will deny, will and have been exhibited. If the students as individuals do not request their removal or modification and, if the sign-placers do not act on such requests, then there will be a void which, despite the hope of the Senate, may result in other action—through the administration or through the courts.

While such voids, perhaps, should be tolerated in the interests of freedom of expression, they are beyond the reach of the Student Senate.

As Markmann reminds us in The Noblest City, "No civil liberties victory ever stays won." Self-restraint and constant vigilance is what the Senate has asked of the student body.

"Inappropriate For A State University"

To the editor:

On October 20, the Student Union Ballroom was filled to capacity as students swarmed in to see the light-sound show, "After the Third World Rasberry". I believe everyone who was there found the show to be a pleasantly different experience.

The fact that part of the show featured a nude dancer did not seem to offend anyone. The second show, which I also saw, was slightly different from the first —the nude dancer had donned clothes.

While I did not know the reason for this, I figured that some student would jump to the conclusion that the show was censored by the University administration. I therefore made it my business to find out the true facts. In doing so, my worst fears were confirmed.

In the v of John Sdoucos, the group's mana.., a representative of the University administration "suggested" to him that the dancer wear clothes in the second show.

The dancer, Miss Jenni Dean, to whom I also spoke, was a bit more specific. She told me that she was approached by an administrator who told her she wouldn't be paid unless she wore clothes in the second show. Miss Dean herself called this incident a clear example of administrative censorship, and I must agree that it can't be interpreted in any other way.

I consider this act of censorship to be an outrage of the worst kind. The presence of a nude dancer in this show was not phornographic, lewd, or obscene and did not seem to offend anyone. (Anyone who was offended is invited to make his views known to the Daily Collegian.)

Although I do not know which administrative official was responsible for this decision, I challenge him, whomever he may be, to answer my charges of outright and unnecessary censorship of the artistically done "Third Rasberry" show.

Jeffrey Drucker

(Editor's Note: Gerald F. Scanlon, RSO Business Manager, identified himself as the administrative official who made the decision in this case and who spoke to the manager of the After the Third World Rasberry show. Scanlon said he spoke to the manager requesting that the dancer be clothed for the second show.

In answer to the manager's doubts as to how strong a stand Scanlon was taking, the RSO Business Manager said he told the manager that either the dancer would be clothed or there would be no show. He also said that he told the manager if the dancer went on nude for the second show, she would not be paid. Scanlon said, however, that he did not speak to the dancer herself.

Scanlon said that he consulted with members of the Homecoming Committee who were on hand and that he made his decision despite the objections of the Homecoming Committee chairman, Mike Garjian.

Scanlon said that, in his opinion, there was nothing wrong with the dancer nude for a nightclub audience, but he said that the show was "inappropriate for a state university" audience.

Scanlon said that the literature received described the dancer's costume and that he expected a costume that would have picked up lights for the light and sound show. He said that there was no lack of cooperation on the manager's part. The dancer apparently had a costume on hand for she appeared in the second show with clothes, he added.)

Friday Night

Light, Sound Show

By DON LEBLANC
Staff Reporter

A funny thing happened on the way to Saturday morning. It was Friday night's light-sound show, "After the Third World Raspberry" created by Al Rubin. Seen by a capacity crowd at the Student Union, the show has led to mixed reactions on the part of the students and the Administration.

After an hour and one half's delay the sound of sea gulls, a cuckoo clock, and a zither began the show. Faces, lines, statues, and abstract paintings were combined with "zooming" effects and focus changes to give the audience material to make the show "whatever they want it to be", according to Rubin.

The band with the show, "The New Life", played as the colors and ultraviolet lighting continued. The audience seemed quite pleased with the performance until a dancer came on clad in white levis and green fluorescent spots. After the initial surprise, there was a settling back to enjoy the show as the dancer walked across the stage doing deep-knee bends.

The slight surprise later turned to a shock when the dancer, Miss Jenni Dean, appeared clad only in green spots. A murmur of surprise arose as she did an energetic dance for 3 or 4 minutes. The audience, stunned, simply stared. Four girls left during the dance, which ended the show, and a small round of applause accompanied Miss Dean's exit from the stage.

Comments were varied. "Man, she was unreal", said a male student. One girl commented, "In art, anything goes", and another reflected, "At least she was wearing polka-dots".

The $25,000 show took 3 years to create. All the slides, films, and recordings in the show are Rubin's creation. Miss Dean, an accountant from New York, has never had dancing lessons. "I was born with rhythm", she said.

Between the first and second shows, Gerald Scanlon, Acting Co-ordinator of the Student Union, informed the shows manager, John Sdoucos, that Miss Dean would have to be dressed for the second show. He also told the manager that the group would not be paid if the dancer appeared naked. Miss Dean appeared in a white suit for the second show. She felt that "the clothing was hot, and it restricted my movements". Angered at the command to dress, Miss Dean said that the use of scanty costume "would make the dance seem obscene whereas appearing nude kept the scene as an art form."

Rubin said the show has been with Miss Dean in various stages of undress, and with some other changes that he made for the second show, he felt that it was much better than the first performance.

'Donovan Is Donovan'

may go through stages, but it's far better to cope with life as a real experience, and not escape it through drugs. This is not limited to marijuana, but to any drug. Hell, you can build up a dependance to aspirin or liquor. It's all no good.

None of Don's songs is inspired extraneously through false means. He'll be walking along and suddenly see something, or he'll hear a phrase and it will suggest something. He has developed a real appreciation of a real life."

Meanwhile, Donovan continued to warm up. One could see he didn't use bar chords, but instead utilized his thumb to cover the bass string. First he strummed with a pick, then without, then he finger picked. He went to the bathroom, came back to have a cup of coffee-milk, then changed into his performing robe. It was time to perform.

The soft-spoken Donovan captivated the audience with the opening smile of an innocent Leprechaun, and he held them with his magnetic voice for the entire length of the concert.

His vocal range was tremendous. Some of the songs he did were new and will probably appear on the December album. Others, like Sunny Goodge St., Catch the Wind, Mellow Yellow, and First There Is A Mountain were done with the same greatness that has made Donovan the epitome of meaningfulness that is folk music today. The smooth delicacy of Catch the Wind was exceptionally moving.

The pin-drop silence of the audience during his singing and the warm applause after each song indicated the success of his communication. He was a magician, and he sparkled with talent, "with love, love, love."

He is a love person, a product of this generation, a poet, a gentleman, a gentle man, a boy, and a talent for years to come.

He is, in a word, Donovan, and that word is beautiful.

Campus Fire Protection Outlined to Trustees

The University of Massachusetts "will continue to seek every means of maintaining high safety standards" in terms of fire protection, trustees have been told.

Kenneth W. Johnson, university treasurer, gave a detailed report on the administration's efforts to insure the best campus fire protection at the trustees' meeting Saturday.

Amherst Fire Chief John Doherty recently criticized the university for what he called slow progress in dealing with fire conditions on the campus.

Treasurer Johnson told the trustees that all University buildings, fraternities, sororities and all fire alarms are checked periodically by Edmund Goetzl, fire and safety officer. Goetzl instructs all students in residence halls, fraternities and sororities on fire drill and evacuation procedures.

The treasurer said that the University maintains a student fire department that has recently been expanded from 16 to 20 volunteers. Equipped with two-way radios to ensure immediate availability, the students have also received training from the Amherst fire chief.

A telephone network system for rapid emergency communications has been developed in the residence halls, the treasurer said, and all auxiliary generating equipment is tested weekly.

Other safety measures taken by the University include a recent survey of older residence halls by the fire insurance underwriter, the enlistment of fire protection engineer Rexford Wilson as a consultant on fire security, and establishment of procedures for the handling and storage of radioactive or hazardous materials by the committee on radiation use.

In addition, a highly trained force of 17 police officers, 11 night watchmen, eight residence halls fire and security guards and 17 parking control fire and security guards provide constant fire and safety protection to the campus in shifts that cover 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

In the area of cooperative efforts with town officials, the treasurer reported that the fire department is kept fully informed prior to any water shutdowns, and is presented in advance with detailed plans of controlled parking area changes and new road plans. The fire department, in addition, has been given keys to all elevators in the high rise residence halls. The fire chief has been provided with a report form to evaluate each call on campus and to make recommendations about fire safety.

Most Youth Back War, Soldier Writes Rusk

WASHINGTON (AP)—A soldier who said he spoke for a group of fighting men in Vietnam has told Secretary of State Dean Rusk, in effect: GIs over there favor "fighting for the freedom of these people" and believe stateside antiwar protestors do not speak for American youth.

Rusk was so pleased with the letter that he gave a copy to President Johnson. The enlisted man wrote that he was chosen by companions in his combat unit at Da Nang to voice the views of the group.

The letter, written well before this weekend's demonstration at the Pentagon, was mentioned last week in a background session for young corporation executives. The State Department made the letter public Sunday at a newsman's request but identities of the writer and his unit were withheld.

The serviceman told Rusk that antiwar actions of U.S. students and news accounts of them "caused great controversy over here and therefore we are writing you this letter."

"As you well know most of the GIs over here, of which there numbers over 400,000, are between the ages of 18 and 25," the serviceman wrote, saying he is in that age bracket.

"These people are Democrats and Republicans, liberals, and conservatives of all types of families," he said.

"Yet I've never talked to a single GI over here and I probably never will, who says 'get out of Vietnam.'

"We are fighting for the freedom of these people, as we once fought for our own. Of these thousands of young Americans over here we all take pride in fighting for the principles that made our country the greatest on earth.

"When our grandchildren read about Vietnam in history lessons we will be proud to tell them that we were part of that lesson. We will take our place in history with the Americans who fought for freedom in the Revolutionary War, both World Wars, and in Korea."

The GI said "there are thousands more in the states who share our feelings" and that only a minority of young Americans "sit in college classrooms, major in political science, and see fit to protest that which our government does."

Crewmen Now in Training For Far-off(?) Spring Schedule

To most sport fans, autumn is a season for football, soccer, and cross country. However, as those residents of Hadley and Northampton who live along the banks of the Connecticut River will attest, autumn is also the season for crew.

For a month now, the quiet of this peaceful river has been periodically shattered by the shouting of coxswains and the splash of oars as the UMass crew team goes through its fall workouts.

Although crew is primarily a spring sport, Coach Dave Clarke and his oarsmen have been working out four times a week as a part of his year-round training program. This program consists of fall crew, weight training during the winter months and a spring racing schedule.

Now in his third year as coach of UMass crew, Clarke has found welcome assistance in Mike Faherty, a former UMass oarsman who is now coaching the freshmen and third varsity crew.

Faherty's success in coaching allows Coach Clarke more time to devote to his varsity and junior varsity crews.

At present, Clarke is running his boys over a three-mile course on the river in preparation for the Head-of-the-Charles Regatta to be held in Boston October 29. It will be one of the major fall regattas in the country and will attract such schools as M.I.T., Wisconsin, Northeastern and Boston University, as well as UMass.

Last year, the oarsmen made several excellent showings, and Clarke is confident they will do even better this year. He now has an assistant coach, a new racing shell, and an excellent crop of newcomers to bolster his roster.

A severe setback has been the failure of the athletic department to give crew varsity recognition. Several prospective oarsmen were disillusioned and quit upon learning they would not receive gym credit for their efforts.

OARSMEN PRACTICE EARLY—One crew rows while another carries their shell at practice on the Connecticut River.

UMass Foes in Action This Week

Three UMass football opponents won their games Saturday while the other five were not as successful. The strongest showing was turned in by Dartmouth as the Big Green tuned up for next week's Ivy League showdown by plastering Brown, 41-6. Gene Ryzewicz, back at quarterback after an injury, tossed two touchdown passes.

In Yankee Conference action, New Hampshire took over second place with a 30-6 win over Vermont as halfback Bill Phillips scored two touchdowns. Connecticut shut out hapless Maine, 21-0, with two touchdowns in the second half.

Next week's UMass opponent, Boston University, dropped a 21-17 decision to powerful Holy Cross. The Crusaders rallied from a 17-7 deficit in the fourth quarter to overtake the Terriers despite a fine offensive showing by B.U.'s Bob Calascibetta.

Buffalo upset Boston College, 26-14, with fullback Lee Jones scoring three touchdowns for the Bulls. B.C.'s record is now 1-3. Rutgers put up a good fight against Army but their inability to score gave the Cadets the game, 14-3.

'M' Club Meeting

Beginning Tuesday, the weekly Varsity "M" Quarterback Luncheons will be held at the Newman Center on North Pleasant St., instead of Howard Johnson's Restaurant.

Besides food, the fare will consist of films of Saturday's football game. Tickets for the program, which lasts from 12 noon to 1 p.m., cost $1.50 each and are available at the Alumni Office, Athletic Department or at the door.

LOWERING THE BOOM—Sophomore defensive end Tom York jars URI quarterback Larry Caswell, causing the Ram ace to fumble. UMass won the game 28-24 at the stadium on Saturday.

Q:

What's a wild, new snack that takes 30 seconds to make, needs no refrigeration, comes complete with nothing to wash, and can be stored in a dormitory for 63 years?

Shake-A Pudd'n'-instant dessert mix. New from Royal.

A:

Shake-A Pudd'n. It's something else. Just put water and powder in the cup, snap the lid, shake for 30 seconds, let it set— and you've got pudding. In Chocolate, Vanilla, Butterscotch or Banana. Each Shake-A Pudd'n package comes complete with four puddings, spoons, lids, and throwaway shakers. Everything is disposable. But the best thing about Shake-A Pudd'n is that you can hide it away in your room until just the right moment— say 12 midnight, right before a big chemistry final. You might even call it food for thought

Smith Leads Soccer Team

Marty Smith scored two goals and assisted on another as the UMass soccer team bolstered its Yankee Conference hopes with a 3-1 Homecoming win over Rhode Island Saturday.

Smith, a senior who leads the team in scoring, scored his goals in the first and third periods as the Redmen extended their unblemished Conference mark to 3-0.

UMass opened the scoring with 6:05 gone in the game as Smith took a pass from senior Phil Bozenhard and put it past the URI goalie to make it 1-0. The game then turned into a good defensive battle as there was no scoring in the rest of the first half.

Rhody dominated much of the third quarter but was held off by the UMass defense. The Redmen made it 2-0 at 11:15 of the period as Smith scored his second goal.

The Rams came back to score their first goal with just four seconds remaining in the third quarter as Kirk Renn beat UMass goalie Tom Malone to make it 2-1.

The fourth quarter belonged to the Redmen as they completely shut the door on Rhode Island. With thirty seconds to go in the game, senior Dick Rosoff wrapped it up with a goal on an assist by Smith.

LANDRY KEYS 2nd HALF SURGE

Redmen Gain Stirring Comeback Win

URI Rams Defeated 28-24 Torrid Homecoming Game

By MIKE CURRAN
Staff Reporter

Greg Landry's 37-yard touchdown run gave the Redmen a 28-24 come-from-behind victory over the Rhode Island Rams Saturday before a homecoming crowd of 16,100 at Alumni Stadium.

The win gave UMass a 3-0 conference record, thereby putting them in the lead for the coveted beanpot. Rhody now has a 1-1 league chart and must hope for a Redmen defeat if they are to have any chance at the title.

Behind 24-10 going into the fourth quarter, UMass was in dire need of two touchdowns, which were soon provided by Landry and company. Starting from midfield the Redmen moved goalward behind Landry's sharpshooting and the running of John Tutino and Jerry Grasso. With 11:17 left to play, Grasso's 2-yard plunge and Ed Sherman's conversion pulled them to within three points of the Rams.

UMass, then, held Rhode Island and regained possession of the ball at midfield on a short punt. After moving to the 37, Landry went off left tackle, reversed direction, and outran three would-be defenders into the left corner of the end zone to culminate a sensational rally.

The game was not over, though, by any stretch of the imagination. It took a gutsy performance by the Redmen defense to finally nail down the hard-fought decision.

Paul Milnar and Kent Stevens came through with two of the greatest plays of their careers in the closing seconds of the contest, each throwing the Rams quarterback whiz Larry Caswell, for consecutive ten yard losses, after Rhody had moved down the field and a 1st and 10 at the UMass ten and a half.

To really appreciate the spirited fourth period Redmen defense, you must go back to the first half when Caswell filled the sky with passes, most of them complete.

On the very first play of the game, Caswell dropped back and hit All-Yankee Conference end Frank Geiselman on a spectacular 85-yard touchdown pass play which really shook up the Redmen. UMass recovered to block the extra point attempt, but Rhody was up 6-0 with only 20 seconds gone in the first period.

After an exchange of fumbles and a punt, the Rams marched 80 yards for their second score. Brent Kaufman and Bill Bjerke, two hard-running fullbacks sparked this drive as Caswell mixed his plays up superbly.

A picture pass play from Landry to Nick Warnock gave the Redmen their first score early in the second period. Sherman's conversion, the first of four, made it Rhode Island 13, UMass 7.

The Rams offense was not to be denied in the first half. They started from their own 22 after Sherman's kickoff and again marched the length of the field. On this drive Caswell went five for five with his accurate tosses.

The Redmen offense was also in high gear at this time. Landry's running featured their second touchdown march. On fourth and goal from the two Landry rolled right, then pitched back to Grasso who carried it in for the score.

Rhody came back with another long drive which ended with a 25-yard Bjerke field goal to make it 24-10 at halftime.

This was to be the last visitor score, however, as the UMass defense shut off the Rams in the second half while the offense came up with two big scores.

The Rams had a slight edge in shots on goal with 21 to the Redmen's 19. Both teams played well defensively, and Malone, a sophomore, stood out in goal for UMass with 17 saves. The URI goalie was called upon to make only seven saves but the Redmen made their shots count.

UMass, now 3-1 overall, travels to Worcester Wednesday to play WPI. The next home game is Saturday against Tufts. The Yankee Conference race now boils down to UMass and Vermont, and the showdown will take place at home on Saturday, November 4, as the Redmen and the Catamounts square off for what should decide the crown.

Harriers Shutout Boston College

By JOEL FOX
Staff Reporter

CHESTNUT HILL — The UMass cross country team scored its first shutout of the season and placed seven men in the top ten on the way to a 15-46 victory over Boston College here Saturday.

Led by Charlie Lang and Paul Hoss, who tied for first place with a time of 23:07, the Redmen took the top six spots. Marc Gelinas ran a good race in finishing third, followed by Greg Bowman and Ron Ryan. Dave Evans took sixth, and rounding out the UMass effort was a tenth place finish by Bill Donaldson.

The time turned in by Lang and Hoss on the B.C. course, which will be the site of this year's New England meet, was the second fastest posted on it this year. The fastest time belongs to sophomore whiz Art Dulong of Holy Cross, whom UMass will face next week.

Coach Ken O'Brien said that Ryan's performance was his best of the year and that he loked "real good" in finishing in the top five for the first time this year. The win upped the Redmen's record to 4-2.

The freshman harriers also won, 17-46, behind the strong performances of Leo Duart and Ron Wayne. Duart covered the course in 15:58, 20 seconds off the frosh record. The Little Redmen's depth showed as Derderian finished third, Paulson fifth, and Thompson sixth.

UMass next travels to Springfield on Tuesday to face undefeated Springfield College. The Maroons, who have great depth, own a victory over highly rated Holy Cross. O'Brien said, "Their top men, Klatka and Pate, should give Lang and Hoss a great individual battle."

Jerry Grasso Runs For Score

Jerry Grasso (22) legs his way around right end for the Redmen's second touchdown, in the second quarter. In the first photo, sophomore Grasso eludes the grasp of URI defensive back Terry Hogg (26) and speeds by linebacker Ed Kassack (31). The second photo shows Grasso trotting into the end zone unmolested followed in futile pursuit by Kassack (31). The play originated from the Ram two yard line, as quarterback Greg Landry rolled out and pitched to Grasso who carried in for the score. UMass won the Homecoming encounter, 28-24.

THE TALENTED TOE — Ed Sherman (76) adds another to his increasing list of consecutive conversions. Sherman's four conversions on Saturday increases his string to thirteen. The holder is Jerry Grasso (22).

Faculty Favors Resistance By Draftable

By RICHARD LANE
Collegian Reporter

"As their teachers we feel an obligation to let these young men know that we stand with them, ready to help in any way we can. We cannot share the risks they are taking. But we can and do pledge them our total support."

Seven University of Massachusetts professors have signed a petition of the Faculty for the Resistance, bearing, in part, the above excerpt and in support of student resistance to the draft.

The Boston Sunday Globe ran the petition on Oct. 15 preceding a student draft protest in the Hub on Monday. The petition included the names of educators from such New England colleges as Harvard, Yale, MIT, Dartmouth, as well as University of Massachusetts Boston and Amherst.

Five who signed from the University interviewed by the Collegian were: William J. Wilson Asst. Prof. of Sociology), Thomas M. Fraser, Jr. (Assoc. Prof. of Anthropolgy), Barton Kaplan (Asst. Prof. of English), Milton Canter (History) and Gerald Braunthal (Government), and John Hicks (Eng.) and Peter Parks (Soc.) also signed. None of those interviewed attended the Boston demonstration Monday.

The Uunversity professors stated that they signed the petition due to opposition of present U.S. policy in Vietnam, and because the resistance movement represents a "modest expression (by faculty members) of support for young men who in good conscience feel they cannot participate in the Vietnam War (according to Gerald Braunthal).

680 Arrested In Washington

The demonstration ended early Monday with arrest of a group of stragglers who had refused to leave, but four protestors reappeared Monday night.

The four sat quitely on the entrance steps, but moved across a street to a grassy area when several U.S. marshals appeared. Later they left the area.

240 pickets had been arrested following a midnight expiration of the permit for the demonstration. Another 439 persons had been arrested earlier.

Government officials said 13 U.S. marshals, 10 soldiers and 24 civilians were injured during the weekend demonstrations.

The Pentagon said the 2,500 troops called in to defend the building have departed, but 90 persons kept busy during the day cleaning up the grounds.

By noon an estimated 16 tons of debris had been hauled by truck from the Pentagon grounds.

Discovered in the trash were several cans which had held tear gas grenades. Demonstrators have charged that tear gas was used against them by troops. But the Pentagon denied it.

Some soldiers are said to have lost gas grenades to demonstrators during scuffling Saturday.

President Labels Demonstrators Irresponsible

WASHINGTON (AP) — Pres. Johnson made it clear Monday that a sometimes-violent weekend demonstration against the Vietnam war has made no change in U. S. policy in Asia.

He reaffirmed that policy in a speech which made no reference to the thousands of pickets who had marched on the Pentagon, with 680 arrests and 47 persons injured.

The timing and the tone of his address to a clerical workers' group gave it the appearance of a reply, if any was needed, to those who massed to urge that the U.S. abandon the fighting in Vietnam.

The President insisted, as he has often, that the U.S. is searching for peace in Vietnam in every possible way "but we appear to be searching alone."

"Peace and stability will come to Asia," he said, "only when the aggressors know that they can't take another people's land by force."

And in a separate statement praising the troops assigned to keep order during the demonstration, Johnson spoke of the "irresponsible acts of violence and lawlessness by many of the demonstrators."

Johnson addressed the 18th Triennial Conference of the International Conference of the International Federation of Commercial, Clerical and Technical Workers, which represents white-collar workers in 62 countries.

He said those who started the Vietnam war "clung stubbornly to the belief that their aggression will be rewarded—by our frustration, our impatience, our unwillingness to stay the course."

Then he added: "It will not be so."

The State Dept. disclaimed any official comment on the impact which peace demonstrations here and abroad might have on U.S. policy in Vietnam. But officials privately said they could detect no change whatever.

Conversely, Vice-Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey said Monday night that demonstrations of support or opposition to the U. S. war effort "have a good deal to do with convincing Hanoi, and Peking and the independent nations of Asia whether or not we can and will last the course."

Addressing the National Defense Executive Reserve, Humphrey said the enemy's hopes for victory rest partly on the extent of "our division, our weariness, our uncertainty."

Hecklers Mar Northampton Demonstration

By JOHN WOJNAS
Collegian Reporter

"Throw the dirty Commie in jail" was the common sentiment of the hecklers at yesterday's massive demonstration in Northampton.

More than 1000 strong marched in front of City Hall yesterday noon protesting the mauling of about 25 demonstrators Friday while police looked on. Although freedom of expression was the keynote of the march, heavy concern was also placed upon United States involvement in Vietnam and the draft.

The marchers proceeded in an orderly fashion following a young man who carried the American flag. The group consisted mainly of college students, faculty, clergy, and people concerned with their Constitutional right to express their views in a free society.

On a nearby corner the main body of hecklers took their position and deluged the marchers with threats and obscene remarks.

On the other side of the street onlookers with pro-war sentiment hurled such offensive remarks as "Turn the fire hoses on 'em," "Throw the Commies in jail" and statements too obscene to be in print. One middle-aged woman expressed disappointment that no major violence was taking place between marchers and hecklers.

A young father directed his four-year old child to fire his pop-gun in the direction of the demonstrators as "They're our enemies."

At last the police offered the protection that they refused at Friday's demonstration. While forcing the marchers to "keep moving" they allowed loitering on the part of the hecklers and did little or nothing to keep the two groups separated. Fortunately there were no acts of violence in the City Hall procession.

About one o'clock the demonstration culminated with a march up Main Street to the Smith College campus. A group of hecklers formed a ring around the flag bearer shouting "Take the flag from them. Don't let them disgrace the flag." An attempt was made to steal the flag but was thwarted by police intervention. A man about forty years of age was escorted to the police cruiser.

The demonstrators proceeded to the library lawn of Smith where they proudly sang the national anthem. They then sat closely together around the flag which was held by a member of the clergy.

A Roman Catholic priest and the President of Smith College pleaded for a non-violent dispersal of the crowd with hopes for a later "intelligent discussion" of the issue. While speaking, they were repeatedly interrupted by

Faculty Senate Investigates ROTC

By MICHELLE KACZYNSKI
Faculty Senate Reporter

In response to recommendations submitted by an Academic Matters' subcommittee, the Faculty Senate is considering the establishment of a permanent subcommittee on military standards. The purpose of this committee would be to review all curriculum matters of military departments on campus. Consideration would be given to such questions as whether or not the ROTC courses offer sufficient intellectual and scholarly content to justify college credit, and whether or not the courses proposed can be adequately handled by the ROTC instructors. It would also be the charge of this committee to screen all candidates for faculty positions in the various military departments.

The Academic Matters Committee decided to recommend the establishment of a Military Standards Committee despite some of the findings which were quite favorable to the ROTC departments on campus.

Whether or not a Military Standards Committee is actually set up, should be decided at the next Faculty Senate meeting, which will be held on November 2.

UMass Man Forms Press Group

A 15-member Commission on the Freedoms and Responsibilities of the College Student Press in America has been formally invested by the National Council of College Publications Advisers.

Coordinating the Commission is Dr. Dario Politella, president of NCCPA and associate professor of journalistic studies at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst.

Politella told the 45 persons attending the organization meeting at Chicago last week: "If we are to come to some valid conclusions about what constitutes the freedoms and responsibilities of the student press, we need to have the best thinking on the subject."

The Commission will be representative of student editors, as well as students at large; college administrators at all levels, from department head to dean to president; journalism faculty advisers, as well as faculty at large; and lay persons recruited from the legal, legislative and business communities.

Consensus of those at the organization meeting was that the Commission "must remain strictly a study group, which has no pre-conceptions of its findings."

"But what we hope to come up with," Dr. Politella said, "are starter-sets of guidelines for defining the roles of student publications and Bills of Rights for student editors and faculty and administrators."

Pointing out that "There are as many disparate notions of what student publications are, what they should do and how they should do it, as there are persons who articulate such notions," Dr. Politella voiced the opinion of the newly-formed Commission that its prime responsibility is to find the "common denominators" and refine them to universally acceptable principles, "if possible."

The Commission was established by NCCPA at the suggestion of Dr. Politella, then chairman of its Committee on Standards, at its annual convention in Philadelphia, 1967. During the first year, the Commission mounted a program of recruiting members and raising money.

"We have reached the point where we have gained most of the organizational support we sought, and we've made a good start on the financial support we need," Dr. Politella said.

Besides "dozens" of volunteers, the Commission has gained participation of Alpha Phi Gamma, American Association of Colleges, American Association of University Professors, American Civil Liberties Union, American Society of Journalism School Administrators, Associated College Press, Association for Education in Journalism, Beta Phi Gamma, Catholic School Press Association, Freedom of Information Center (Univ. Missouri), National Association of Student Personnel Administrators, Pi Delta Epsilon and Theta Sigma Phi.

While continuing its efforts to raise $75,000 to support a three-year project, the Commission has also issued appeals for case histories and other materials involving student press freedoms and responsibilities.

Besides maintaining newsletter contacts between the three planned annual meetings of the Commission, the office of the coordinator will publish periodical reports patterned after the Freedom of Information center reports.

Wow, Webster Wins Another

It's four for four at Webster.

Webster House has been in existence four years, and each year it has won first prize in the men's dormitory category during the annual UMass Homecoming Float Parade.

According to Vincent D'Andrea, faculty adviser to Webster House, the secret of success is "total dorm effort". He said Monday, "Once you get two beams on the truck, everybody comes down to help."

Webster's entry Friday was entitled, "Laser the Lazy Louts."

Other winners were: Men's Dormitories, 2 — Gorman, 3 — Brett. Fraternities, 1—Beta Kappa Phi, 2—Tau Kappa Upsilon, 3 — Zeta Nu. Women's Dormitories, 1—Van Meter North, 2—Johnson, 3—Brook. Sororities, 1—Chi Omega, 2—Iota Gamma Upsilon, 3 — Sigma Delta Tau. Mixed Dormitories, 1 — Dwight-Wheeler, 2 — Kennedy Upper-Crampton, 3—James-Melville.

John W. Reps Will Lecture

John W. Reps, professor of city and regional planning in the college of architecture at Cornell University, will discuss "Urban Land Policy and the American Town Planning Tradition" at 8 p.m., Wednesday, October 25, at Amherst College.

His lecture in the Converse Assembly Room is the first in a series this year on urban affairs topics organized under the sponsorship of the faculty lecture committee.

Professor Reps is the author of "The Making of Urban America: A History of City Planning in the United States," published in 1965, and of "Monumental Washington," which appeared this year.

Prof. Gerhard Will Give Talks

Dietrich Gerhard, who is William Allan Neilson Research Professor of History at Smith College will deliver a series of lectures this semester. He will speak on the topic "Reflections on Inequality: The Old Order in Europe" on Thursday, October 26 at 8 p.m. in Wright Hall; "The Old Order in Europe: The Assemblies of Estates" on Monday, November 6 at 5 p.m. in McConnell Hall B15; and "The Old Order in Europe: Structure and Role of the City" on Monday, November 13 at 5 p.m. in McConnell Hall B15.

Mr. Gerhard, who is William Eliot Smith Professor Emeritus of History at Washington Universty (St. Louis, Mo.), has been teaching at universities on both sides of the Atlantic for the last ten years. He has divided his time between Washington University and the Universities of Cologne and Goettingen in his native Germany.

to the draft and its "inequities," but all felt their main concern is the war in Vietnam.

Prof. Braunthal added that faculty members who "oppose the war and who have called for an end to the bombing of North Vietnam," can at least, "lend them our support."

The five did assert that they were not members of any formal organization, but each was acting individually.

"I agree with it (petition) and will support anything to resist war or aggression," stated English teaching assistant Barton Kaplan. He added that the major difference between student and faculty resistence was students' lack of "articulation" on the issue.

The faculty signers did not feel that student resistance was necessarily the best method, although at present the only possible one.

Claimed Prof. Thomas Fraser of the Anthropology department, "I don't really believe that breaking the law is the way to accomplish anything," but added that he felt, "somewhat discouraged by an inability of means that ordinary citizens have to get anything done."

Kaplan said that even though he believed students to be in the bounds of their constitutional rights by their protest actions, "If there were such a thing as a valid legal alternative available for an individual, for purely moral reasons without justification, to avoid conscription, I would prefer it."

The interviewees felt these young students to be courageous and sincere and that if acting on principle, they should be listened to.

Just what effect would the resistance have on administration policies in the war? the educators were asked. Most were doubtful and unsure.

"I don't really know," stated Fraser. "I am hopeful this approach will be more effective than previous ones."

Said history professor Milton Canter, "I think it is grossly inflated," being the monopoly of two dozen schools, he added, including Berkeley, University of Chicago and others.

He went on, "I don't think most of the faculty will commit themselves this far."

Braunthal believes the movement to be partially symbolic" and would depend on other such movements "snowballing" to be successful.
